PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALSH. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled for the passage of an act ceding to the State of Montana the military reservation located in Montana known as Fort William Henry Harrison, to be used as an adjunct of the State industrial accident board for a rehabilitation institute for the education and maintenance of persons injured in the industries of Montana and adjoining States.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas by act of Congress approved May 12, 1892, there was established in the State of Montana Fort William Henry Harrison, the site for which, consisting of 1,000 acres, was donated to the United States by the citizens of Helena, and in addition to which there has been acquired by purchase sufficient land to make up a total of 1,790 acres, which said site is described as follows, to wit: Mineral entry No. 1900, situated in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 4 in township 10 north of range 4 west of the Montana principal meridian; the northeast quarter of section 9; the southeast quarter, the south half of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the west half of the northwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 10; the southwest quarter of section 11; the west half of section 15; the east half of section 16; the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 17; the northeast quarter, the east half of the northwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 21; and the north half of the northwest quarter of section 22, all in township 10 north of range 4 west of the Montana principal meridian; and

Whereas there has been constructed upon the said site a large number of brick buildings of a permanent character, and there has been acquired in connection with the said site ample water facilities for irrigating and making productive said lands in the growing of grass, trees, shrubbery, vegetables, and other agricultural products, making a very attractive and useful piece of property; and

Whereas the said site and buildings have not been used by the War Department for the purposes for which they were acquired for a period of more than three years last past, and there does not appear to be at the present time any prospect for the immediate use of the said site for the uses of the War Department, and the buildings are decaying by reason of neglect and nonuse, and the grounds are becoming unsightly; and

Whereas the industrial accident board of the State of Montana, a department of the government of said State organized under the act of the legislative assembly of the said State providing for compensation to workmen injured in the industries of the said State, and providing for the administration of the workmen's compensation act, known as chapter 96 of the Session Laws of the Legislative Assembly of Montana for the Session of 1915, has recommended to the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana now in session the establishment of an institution for the reeducation and rehabilitation of those unfortunates who have been partially or totally disabled by reason of accidents from pursuing their usual vocations or professions, and thereby giving to these unfortunate victims of industrial accidents an opportunity of becoming useful citizens rather than dependents upon the bounty of the State; and

Whereas there is not located in any of the States of the Union an institution of such a character, and an opportunity is here offered for commencing under the most favorable circumstances an experiment which would make possible the vocational reeducation of large numbers of persons injured in the industries of the State of Montana and the adjoining States:

Now, therefore, the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled are hereby respectfully memorialized and petitioned by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of Montana, duly assembled, to enact a law ceding to the State of Montana the above-described site, known as Fort William Henry Harrison, consisting of the tracts hereinabove described, the buildings thereon, the water rights, and all of the appurtenances thereunto belonging or therewith enjoyed, to be used by the State of Montana for the uses and purposes above outlined; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Montana be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana in Congress severally copies of this memorial.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Woman's Club of New Castle and Damariscotta, in the State of Maine, praying for the establishment of a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Lithuanian societies and political clubs of Scranton, Pa., praying for the independence of Lithuania, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the city council of Quincy, Mass., favoring the granting to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines six months' additional pay, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Building Trades Employers' Association of Boston, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation for an appropriation of $100,000,000 to help solve the unemployment situation by furnishing financial aid to States and municipalities for use on public works, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of the faculty of Mount Holyoke College, of South Hadley, of sundry citizens of Lynn, Mass., and of the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Cambridge, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14894) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 697) thereon.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 698) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 5557) to safeguard temporarily, by a license control of imports of potash, the interests of domestic potash, toducers until trade conditions are readjusted; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (for Mr. SMITH of Maryland):

A bill (S. 5558) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Hagerstown, Md., one German cannon or field-piece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5559) to provide for the erection of an addition to the post-office building at Baltimore, Md., for alterations to the present building and changes to the railroad entering same; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 5562) for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND NATIONAL QUARANTINE.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 443), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the commitee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the amendment which I hope to have incorporated in the bill may be briefly stated as a repeal of the provisions of the two espionage acts relative to the power of the Postmaster General to exclude mail matter from the United States mail. The amendment which I shall propose does not seek to repeal any part of the espionage acts other than those provisions with reference to mail matter. I desire that to be understood, so that we may know precisely what we are dealing with.

As will be recalled, these two provisions, which are sections 1, 2, and 3 of Title XII of the act which was passed June 15, 1917, and section 4 of the act which was passed May 16, 1918, give power to the Postmaster General to exclude all mail matter from the mail which he deems to be in violation of the terms of the espionage acts.

Mr. President, this was passed as a war measure. I assume that no such act would have been proposed by the Congress except as a war measure. It is true that hitherto there had been some legislation with reference to the power of the Postmaster General to exclude certain mail matter from the mail, but no such power as is found in these acts had ever been proposed theretofore at any time in the history of our country.

The war, I take it, Mr. President, except in a most technical sense, ended when the President read to the Congress the terms of the armistice and announced by public proclamation, as it were, that the war was at an end and that these conditions, to wit, the conditions and terms of the armistice, rendered it impossible for Germany to renew the war. Now, while technically speaking it may be that a court would not hold that the war is concluded until actual terms of peace have been signed or imposed, yet so far as our domestic concerns are involved and so far as the treatment of our own people is concerned, I think we ought to consider the war to have closed upon the announcement of the President that it was at an end.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator give us the sections he proposes to repeal?

Mr. BORAH. I have just stated them.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not have the acts before me at the time.

Mr. BORAH. Sections 1, 2, and 3 of Title XII of the first espionage act and section 4 of the second espionage act.

Mr. President, these provisions of the espionage acts resulted in a complete censorship of the American press. In my opinion, if the Congress should ever assume to usurp the power to establish a censorship with intent to accomplish that thing there could be no more effective and successful method adopted than that of giving the Postmaster General certain powers with reference to the exclusion of printed matter from the mail.

When the espionage act was first before the Congress it provided specifically for a censorship, as it were, of the press, a thing which seemed almost incredible to be proposed. Nevertheless it was in the bill as it was originally reported. That was stricken out after long debate, but this clause, which had the same effect, remained in the bill. I stated upon the floor of the Senate at the time that if this clause remained in the bill it would mean just as complete a censorship as the clause which was intended to establish a censorship, and I take it that practice has demonstrated that that was a correct statement.

The way in which this results in censorship is this: If an article appears in a paper which the Postmaster General deems to be in violation of the espionage law, attention is called to the fact by excluding the paper from the mail. Immediately the editor or the publisher of the paper seeks consultation with the Postmaster General and secures from him an intimation or a guidance as to what shall thereafter appear in the paper and not be in violation of the law. That is a complete system of licensing the press. And under the broad terms of the espionage acts he could encompass the whole field of public opinion.

I desire, Mr. President, in discussing this matter to relieve it from mere personal criticism of the Postmaster General. It should be debated upon a different plane and upon a higher plane. No one could administer this provision without establishing what would be in effect a censorship of the press. It inevitably results in that. It rests with the Postmaster General to say how far he shall go. Naturally a man who has his paper excluded from the mails will seek consultation and guidance and permission from the man who has power to exclude it, and the result is that the Postmaster General or his representative becomes the absolute dictator and director of what shall appear from time to time in the publications throughout the country; and that has been the result of this law. I could cite numerous instances where newspapers were excluded from the mails, where publishers sought conversation and interviews with the Postmaster General, and where they returned to their publications with an understanding as to what would be agreeable the Postmaster General. Could a licenser of the press execute his powers in any different or more effective way?

I am not now discussing the question as to whether this or that particular paper should have been excluded. I am simply calling your attention to the fact, in order that I may later direct your attention to the legal question, that this resulted in doing that which we as a Congress have no power whatever to do.

It not only resulted in establishing a censorship but it resulted in a very universal feeling throughout the country that it was not enforced with equal effect as to all people. I shall not stop to examine the evidence as to whether there was partiality or not; I do not care. But you can gather any amount of testimony from newspaper men and publishers in the country to the effect that this paper published things which were, in popular judgment, equally reprehensible with what that paper published, while this paper was permitted to go through the mails and that was excluded. I call attention to this to illustrate the fact that the freedom of the press can never be restrained or circumscribed by any scheme or any plan which the ingenuity of the human brain can frame which will be satisfactory to the great public either in its impartiality or in its justice and equity. There is only one rule after all these centuries of effort and experience, and that is that a man shall publish in the first instance what he choose, and then take the responsibility for the abuse of the privilege.

So, Mr. President, there has been in this country since the day and hour that Congress passed this act just as complete a censorship as that censorship against which Milton inveighed, and against which Charles James Fox and Erskine, the great minds of those days, battled so earnestly and finally so successfully.

Now, the war is over and the most serious questions which could possibly confront a people—domestic questions—are up for consideration. There is a belief that this censorship still obtains. I do not know what the opinion of the Postmaster General is; I do not know whether he regards it as closed or not; but there is a universal belief throughout the country that it is still in existence, and that the law may still be invoked. That belief results in the same hesitancy to discuss public questions in a frank, open, sincere, and candid way in some quarters as during the war.

Some might be willing to yield upon such matters in the exigency of war, but when peace has been restored and we are dealing with our domestic concerns, matters of supreme concern to the people at home, there ought not to be any restraint upon the minds of the American people in any way, shape, or form. People should be free to express themselves upon these questions without fear of censorship or without the fear of having their publications in any way restrained or interfered with.

So we are asking for the repeal of a law which, in my judgment, we had no power in the first instance to pass, a law which, if it be considered to have been valid by reason of being a war measure, that reason has passed, and a law which is still being invoked, at least in the minds of the people, to deal with a situation which relates only to peace.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator from Idaho if I should ask him whether his purpose could be accomplished so long as the old law, with which the Senator is familiar, now upon the statute books remains there? I refer to the law which clothes the Postmaster General with the absolute and uncontrolled power of excluding whatever he pleases from the mails of the country, and from his decision there is no appeal, except it may be to the people at the next popular election. In other words, would not the continued existence of that old statute be amply sufficient to enable the Post Office Department to continue in practice the conditions from which the Senator would relieve the people by his proposed repeal of the espionage act?

Mr. BORAH. I think the old law is entirely too broad and drastic in its powers, but it is not to be compared with the law with which we are now dealing, in my judgment. If any such authority should be attempted to be exercised under that law it would necessarily lead some of us to insist upon its modification or repeal.

I want the Senate to bear with me for a few moments while I recall a legal proposition which is involved in this matter, which I think it well at least to consider as we pass along.

There is no proposition better established as a historic fact than the belief in the minds of the framers of the Constitution of the United States that they gave no power whatever to Congress to deal with the subject matter of the freedom of the press or of free speech. It was undoubtedly their belief that that was a matter which was left alone and exclusively to the States. That was the opinion as expressed by the men in the convention; it was the opinion of Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Madison, the principal authors of the Federalist; and it was repeatedly stated in the debates in the different State conventions with reference to the ratification of the Constitution. When the question was raised in the constitutional convention that there ought to be something more expressive with reference to the power of Congress prohibiting the Congress from dealing with the subject, it was stated upon the floor of the convention that it could not be necessary because no power was given to the National Congress or to the National Government to deal with it in any way.

Let me call your attention to a paragraph from Elliott's Debates:

Wednesday, September 12:
In convention: Dr. Johnson, from the committee of style, reported a digest of plan, of which printed copies were ordered furnished to the members.
Friday, September 14:
Mr. Pinckney and Mr. Gerry moved to insert a declaration "That the liberty of the press be inviolably observed."
Mr. SHERMAN. It is unnecessary. The power of Congress does not extend to the press.
On this question it passed, in the negative.

Referring again to Elliott's Debates, in the South Carolina convention, Gen. Lincoln wanted to know why this omission existed with reference to the limitation of the power of Congress over the press. He said:

The liberty of the press was the tyrant's scourge; it was the true friend and supremest supporter of civil liberty; therefore why pass it by in silence?
4. Elliott's Debates, page 314:
He was immediately answered by Gen. Pinckney, the very man who in the Federal convention moved such a clause, but whose motion was rejected.

And Mr. Pinckney said:

With regard to the liberty of the press, the discussion of that matter was not forgotten by the members of the convention. It was fully debated and the impropriety of saying anything about it in the Constitution clearly evinced. The General Government has no powers but what are expressly granted to it; it therefore has no power to take away the liberty of the press. That invaluable blessing, which deserves all the encomiums the gentleman has justly bestowed upon it, is secured by all our State constitutions; and to have mentioned it in our general Constitution would, perhaps, furnish an argument hereafter that the General Government had a right to exercise powers not expressly delegated to it.

In the Virginia convention it was stated:

That, therefore, no right of any denomination can be canceled, abridged, restrained, or modified by Congress, by the Senate and House of Representatives, acting in any capacity, by the President, or any department or officer of the United States, except in those instances in which power is given by the Constitution for that purpose; and that, among other essential rights, the liberty of conscience and of the press can not be canceled, abridged, restrained, or modified by any authority of the United States.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to go further into this matter, but it was clearly the understanding of the framers of the Constitution and of the ratifiers of the Constitution that the National Government was given no power whatever to deal with this subject.

Then, Mr. President, how did it occur that the first amendment to the Constitution was adopted? It is just as thoroughly established as a historical fact that it was adopted because of the possible doubt that in certain emergencies silence might be construed into the power to deal with this subject matter. Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison said that the silence which obtains with reference to this matter may give rise to argument and power will seek to be inferred from certain other powers in the Constitution. Therefore, in order that no inference may be drawn from any power granted in the Constitution, it should be expressly prohibited by specific amendment to the Constitution. So the first amendment to the Constitution was adopted, which I thought I had before me, but which, as Senators will all recall, provides that Congress shall have no power to pass any law respecting an establishment of religion or the abridgment of the freedom of the press or of speech. Of course, I am not quoting it with exactness, but it provides that Congress shall have no power to pass any law in regard to, concerning, or relating to this subject matter.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho, I think, perhaps puts a wrong interpretation upon that provision of the Constitution. The Constitution says that Congress shall pass no law, as I remember, respecting religion, nor shall the freedom of speeclr or of the press be abridged. It is something like that.

Mr. BORAH. Here is the exact language:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

This amendment was adopted because of the belief of such men as Mr. Jefferson that, unless there was a more specific declaration, it might be said to be established as a matter of inference from other powers which were granted to the Congress. I call your attention to the language of Mr. Hamilton in the Federalist on this particular subject, which shows clearly what they had in mind. In No. 84 of the Federalist Mr. Hamilton says:

Bills of rights, in the sense and to the extent they are contended for, are not only unnecessary in the proposed Constitution, but would even be dangerous. * * * Why, for instance, should it be said that the liberty of the press shall not be restrained, when no power is given by which restrictions may be imposed? I will not contend that such a provision would confer a regulating power; but it is evident that it would furnish, to men disposed to usurp, a plausible pretense for claiming that power.

The argument of Hamilton was that as no power was given to Congress to deal with the subject matter in any way, why adopt a bill of rights which might give rise to the argument that Congress had a regulating power?

Mr. Madison, in the famous report upon the Virginia resolution, says:

Some degree of abuse is inseparable from the proper use of everything, and in no instance is this more true than in that of the press. It has accordingly been decided, by the practice of the States, that it is better to leave a few of its noxious branches to their luxuriant growth than by pruning them away to injure the vigor of those yielding the proper fruit. And can the wisdom of this policy be doubted by anyone who reflects that to the press alone, checkered as it is with abuses, the world is indebted for all the triumphs which have been gained by reason and humanity over error and oppression; who reflects that to the same beneficent source the United States owe much of the lights which conducted them to the rank of a free and independent Nation and which have improved their political system into a shape so auspicious to their happiness.

* * * * * * *

Whatever weight may be allowed to these considerations—

Referring to certain arguments which had been made—the committee do not, however, by any means intend to rest the question on them. They contend that the article of the amendment, instead of supposing in Congress a power that might be exercised over the press, provided its freedom was not abridged, meant a positive denial to Congress of any power whatever on the subject.

It may be said, Mr. President, that this law with which we are dealing to-day does not in terms attempt any censorship of the press or in any way abridge its freedom, and that, as it is upon its face fair and equitable, simply giving to the Postmaster General the power to exclude from the mails, it is not unconstitutional; but I have called attention to the fact that the result of the law in its execution and administration has been to establish a censorship as a practical fact. I apprehend that that can scarcely be denied. Is there any Senator here who does not know of newspapers whose policies were modified, whose position was changed by reason of the fact that they had their interviews with the Postmaster General?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know of newspapers whose managers and editors were informed—and the papers were afterwards excluded from the mails—that their editorial policies and expressions of opinion should be changed in conformity with some advices received from the Executive or from a representative of the Executive; and when they supported the policies of the administration in a political and administrative way they were restored to their postal privileges.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, that is the inevitable result of the administration of this kind of a law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would let us know what newspapers he has in mind. We are investigating this matter now, and a witness before our committee last week stated that there was a propaganda on the part of the Bolsheviki to repeal this legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I know the Senator from North Carolina so well and like him so well that I will not permit myself to be insulted by that kind of a remark.

Mr. OVERMAN. I love the Senator from Idaho; there is no one of whom I think more highly; he and I are very good friends, and always have been. I was merely stating what is happening in our committee—not that the Senator is responsible, for he has always stood where he stands now, and when the espionage bill was before the Senate two years ago he made a very able speech against it, taking the same ground he is taking now. So I could not have referred to him. I repeat that I am merely stating what is happening.

The Senator spoke of certain newspapers. When the president of the newspaper fraternity of this country was before our committee he said they were coming and trying to get him to advocate in the newspapers of this country the repeal of this legislation. That does not refer to the Senator. There is no better, abler, or more patriotic man in this country. I have been associated with him on committees. I know his patriotism and his love of his country; and there is no criticism of him on my part.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not care how many Bolsheviki or who advocates the repeal of this law; it does not modify my position either with reference to advocating this or with reference to making me more zealous one way or the other. I simply know, as Mr. Madison says, that while there may be evils connected with the complete freedom of the press, they are infinitely small and of infinitely inconsequential effects as compared with the evil of a censored press.

If we must deny the liberty of the press, if we must deny freedom of speech, if we must change the whole structure of our republican institutions and deny the guaranties of the charter of 100 years, in order to deal with conditions in this country, we have already reached the point where free institutions have passed as an effectual fact in the administration of public affairs.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me to make this observation—that if the Bolshevists or the Socialists are advocating the repeal of this un-American and undemocratic law they are rendering a greater service to America and to liberty than the autocrat or the plutocrat who opposes the repeal of the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt there are a great many Bolsheviki who feel just like the Senator does.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think we may deal with this matter according to the well-established principles of free government, without being diverted from our faith and our convictions through the propaganda either of those who are in favor of it or those who are against it for purely selfish ends.

Now, I am frank to say that I would rather risk restoring sanity and patriotism and established order in this country through a complete and frank and open and sincere discussion of all questions than by undertaking to repress the views of any particular faction or any particular community. All of us who have looked into the pages of history know something of how utterly fruitless is the effort to direct men's thoughts and views through a system of arbitrary repression. Where truth is permitted to have free sway, error will finally be driven from the minds of men.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I just want to ask a question. Section 2 of the provision which the Senator seeks to repeal, as I understand, provides that every letter, writing, circular, postal card, and so forth, advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to the laws of the United States is declared to be nonmailable. If that is repealed, will there be any statute now in existence to prevent the mailing of matter urging treason?

Mr. BORAH. There is a statute, with which the Senator is familiar, which enables the Postmaster General to exclude mail matter from the mail—an old statute, which, I think, is entirely too broad.

Mr. LODGE. Has the Senator that statute there?

Mr. BORAH. I have not it here.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am unable to find any statute that goes that far.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] called attention to it a few moments ago, and he may have it before him; I do not know.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I have not. I had some experience with the department some time ago under the provisions of the statute, but I am unable to refer the Senate to the volume of the Statutes at Large containing it. I know there is such a law. If there is not, the Postmaster General certainly has been exercising extraordinary power without any statute.

Mr. BORAH. There is an old law. I do not know just what its terms are, but I presume they are not broad enough or they would not have insisted upon the passage of this law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is a very important point. I have never liked these laws which have led to censorship, as the Senator knows. I think they have been abused. I think things have been done that ought not to have been done, and things have been omitted that ought to have been done; but section 2 seems to me to go entirely outside the question of freedom of speech. It is matter advocating treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to the laws of the United States. We stop fraudulent circulars in the mails now under our general law. I do not think freedom of speech can possibly be interpreted to mean freedom to advocate resistance to the laws, or treason, or insurrection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator believe that the way to control this matter is to place it arbitrarily in the hands of an individual? We have juries and we have laws by which to enforce and protect these general provisions of law. We have a method by which to try to arrive at the question of whether a particular matter is treasonable or not. But does the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator want to say that the Postmaster General shall determine whether or not an article that I write is treason? Shall I or any other citizen wear the brand or stigma of treason if a single individual without hearing, if he so elects, choose to declare me or my publication disloyal? The old star-chamber trials were more humane and respectable than that.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not like that at all.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I am complaining of.

Mr. LODGE. But have we any law that meets such cases, and is the United States Government bound to carry in its mails circulars or anything you please advocating resistance to the laws and the overthrow of the Government? I do not think the United States is bound to do it; and if a man is wronged by being excluded by the Postmaster General the courts are open to him.

Mr. BORAH. I ask again, is the Senator willing to have it determined behind closed doors, by the counsel of a Cabinet officer and by his legal adviser, without anybody having an opportunity to meet the charge that he is guilty of treason?

Mr. LODGE. No; I am not prepared to have it finally decided there, but I would give him the same relief that the Senator would give the community. I would let him take it before a jury.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; exactly. I am not asking to repeal the espionage act. That is a different proposition. I am asking to take away the arbitrary power to say that a communication which I make is treason.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Idaho if it would not be just as sensible, if I should make a speech on a platform, for the Director of Railways to say that I could not purchase a railway ticket until I had revised my power of free speech; or a grain merchant might be refused a license to transact business by the Food Administration, or a milling company. It is the specific character of the offense decided behind closed doors in the absence of a judicial hearing that I understand the Senator is criticizing.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so.

Mr. SHERMAN. And I am in sympathy with that criticism.

Mr. BORAH. We are not here advocating the right of people to preach treason or violence; but we are advocating that this shall be determined according to the well-established principles of Anglo-Saxon civilization.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin. Then I will yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the Senator whether or not the amendment he will propose is the same as that of which he gave notice on January 31?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I want to ask the Senator whether, so far as the powers of the Postmaster General are concerned, they are not confined to section 1 of the act of June 15, 1917, and section 4 of the act of May 16, 1918?

Mr. BORAH. I think they are.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I want to ask the Senator why sections 2 and 3 of the act of June, 1917, should be repealed, section 2 declaring letters, writings, and so forth, advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States to be unmailable, and section 3 providing punishment in the courts for violation of that statute?

Mr. BORAH. Section 3 perhaps should not be repealed, upon that statement; but if section 2 stands, of course the Postmaster General determines that it is nonmailable.

Mr. KING and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. KING. Perhaps this is not quite germane to the Senator's discussion; but if he will pardon me, I should like to invite his attention to the fact that we have laws now which devolve upon the Postmaster General the power to exclude from the mail lewd and lascivious publications, publications which are in their nature fraudulent, or calculated to commit or perpetrate frauds, and publications in the interest of lotteries. The Postmaster General has to exercise a discretion. He may do it behind closed doors. The Supreme Court of the United States in a number of cases, starting with the case of Ex parte Jackson, and, indeed, prior to that time, have upheld the validity of statutes of that character; and, as was pertinently said by the Senator from Massachusetts, the Government of the United States clearly is entitled to exclude from the mails deadly matter assailing the integrity of the Government, and it is no infringement of the right of free speech.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the case of Ex parte Jackson also held that if this power which was granted to the Postmaster General went so far as in any way to embarrass the freedom of the press it was void.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I find that section 479—I suppose of the Revised Statutes—reads as follows:

> Unmailable matter includes all matter which is by law, regulation, or treaty stipulation prohibited from being transmitted through the mails.

Then follow a lot of designations of what unmailable matter shall be—among others, obscene matter, libelous matter, indecent matter, lottery matter, fraudulent matter—and then there is a specific statute against mailing obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter. Now, does the position the Senator takes include—I mean in principle—the repeal of those statutes?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am very frank to say to the Senator that I think that law is entirely too broad. I am utterly opposed to lodging in any administrative officer the power to say that this or that publication is in violation of his regulations. I think there ought to be a different way to determine it. There ought to be an impartial tribunal where an open hearing can be had.

Mr. KELLOGG. How would you determine whether matter should not be mailed?

Mr. BORAH. In the first place, I would make it a law that a person should not mail such literature as was lewd or lascivious. If he did, I would arrest him, try him, convict him, and send him to the penitentiary, the same as if he committed any other crime.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course it might be possible, under such a law as that, to send out vast quantities of such matter in the mail, with no way of stopping it except prosecution. The stuff would go out and go into the hands of the people.

Mr. BORAH. That does not follow at all. A man does not send out very much mail when he is behind the bars. He does not send out very much literature when he is in the penitentiary.

Mr. KELLOGG. Sometimes it takes a good while to get him there.

Mr. BORAH. Very well, unless the Senator wants to dispose of our system of jury trials entirely. If he believes in that theory, of course I have no argument with him.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not. I simply want the Senator's view as to whether there should be any statutes at all providing for nonmailable matter, other than the statutes prohibiting the sending of such matter through the mail and providing for prosecution in the courts for a violation of the statute. That is the question I wanted to ask the Senator, because it seemed to me that if this should be repealed entirely we should repeal the other statute also, because it is based upon the same principle.

Mr. BORAH. I would be very glad to have the Senator offer that as an amendment to my amendment. I am dealing with a specific situation, with which the Senator from Minnesota and all other Senators are perfectly familiar.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. We know to what extent this power in the two espionage acts has been used. We know to what extent that power has been carried, and, in my judgment, it has resulted as inevitably results from an attempt to enforce that kind of a law.

Mr. President, some time ago there was brought to me a publication which had been excluded from the mail. I went through that publication from one cover to the other, and I declare that it was impossible for me to find anything which, to my mind, indicated the slightest disloyalty, the slightest desire to embarrass the Government, or that was in any way an infringement of that act. I am quite sure that I entered upon the investigation without any prepossession one way or the other, and I was utterly unable to determine upon what proposition it had been excluded from the mail. I could not even select the article which, in my judgment, was the one upon which they in all probability relied, and yet it was excluded from the mail.

Mr. President, suppose that matter had been brought to the attention of 12 impartial men or to some impartial tribunal, would it not then have been more in accordance with justice and equity and fair play and good conscience in the administration of affairs than to lodge the power in a man to say, "I exclude it. I do not need to give any reason. It does not suit my taste, therefore it goes out."

The Senator from Minnesota and the gentlemen who are contending for this proposition are contending for that kind of a power.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to ask the Senator a question, and I want to say a word or two in preface to it. If the Senator from Idaho is willing, I will take his time to that extent.

I doubt somewhat whether the legal proposition which the Senator from Idaho has so clearly discussed is really involved, if I understand the position of the Senator from Idaho. There is a whole lot of difference, in my judgment, between freedom of the press and the right to have particular things carried through the mail and difference between freedom of speech and the right to have things printed and carried through the mail.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. I understand the Senator's position to be that he has no objection whatever to passing the most drastic law prohibiting transmitting through the mails treasonable matter—none whatever.

Mr. BORAH. None whatever.

Mr. KNOX. His point is that the question as to whether or not it is treasonable is a risk that is to be taken by the person who puts it in the mail, and that if it is treasonable that question is, like any question under a penal statute, to be determined by a jury on indictment for a violation of the law. Is that a correct statement of the Senator's position?

Mr. BORAH. That is my position.

Mr. KNOX. Then is it not true that we are not called upon here to pass on the constitutional question urged in the early part of the Senator's remarks?

Mr. BORAH. Only in this way: The administration of this law has unquestionably resulted in effectuating that which we have no power to effectuate, and that is a censorship of the press. In other words, Mr. President, if under this authority, arbitrary as it is, I have the power to call the Senator from Pennsylvania, who may be a publisher, to the city of Washington and say to him, "You can not put your publication through the mail except you conduct your editorial page along this line," it results in the establishment of a censorship, which we have no power to do.

Mr. KNOX. Exactly so; and do you not accomplish all you want by repealing the fourth section of the act of May 6, 1918? That is the section which gives the Postmaster General the right to determine the character of the publication. In my judgment, if I understand the Senator's position, he does not need necessarily to repeal the provisions of the second and third sections of the act of June 15, 1917, because those sections only create the prohibition and provide for the punishment.

Mr. BORAH. Truly, if that be the construction of the Senator, I will agree with him. What I want by this amendment, and I am perfectly willing to shape the amendment to that effect, is to take away the power of the Postmaster General to determine whether this or that publication comes within the purview of the espionage act. I want that determined by a different tribunal, where the man who is charged may be heard.

Mr. KNOX. I will go with the Senator that far; but I do not want by my vote to repeal the provisions of an act which makes the circulation of treasonable matter through the mail an offense, and I do not think the Senator from Idaho wants to do that, either.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; not if the fact is to be established by the proper tribunal.

Mr. KNOX. Let it be like any other crime. Take the crime of larceny or embezzlement or forgery, and all that sort of thing. We have to determine the specific act, and I have got to take the risk whether my specific act comes within the definition of the statute. If I am charged with having violated that law, of course I am entitled to a trial by jury.

Mr. BORAH. If that is the construction to be put upon sections 2 and 3, I will agree with the Senator at once. If section 1 of the first espionage act and section 4 of the second act accomplish the thing which I desire, to wit, the taking away from the Postmaster General the power to determine as to what kind of a publication it is, that is all I desire with reference to this matter. I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was going to ask the Senator with reference to his remedy as to sending treasonable matter in the mails. Much of this treasonable matter, which is absolute advocacy of Bolshevism, their catechisms, their constitution, and their powers, comes from foreign countries. You could not indict a foreigner for sending that matter through the mails. What could we do in that case?

Mr. BORAH. I do not suppose that we could indict a foreigner, and I do not state offhand just how we would deal with that. But let us deal with the home people; give them back their right to free speech and a free press, and then we will take up the foreigner.

Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has called attention to the fact, as he understands the provisions of the law, that sections 2 and 3 simply define the crime and provide for the punishment, and that you would proceed the same as you would if a party was charged with larceny or any other crime. I have no desire whatever to interfere with that kind of a provision, and if I could be satisfied that that is the effect of those sections I would be glad to eliminate them from my amendment. I certainly have no desire to make it possible for a party to send treasonable matter through the mail without any means of punishment provided for it at all. I have no desire to accomplish that, but I do desire that a jury shall determine whether or not he is guilty of that offense. If not a jury, then an open, impartial tribunal with the right to be heard and to call witnesses.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Take the situation in this country at the time we entered into the war, in April, 1917, when immediately treasonable utterances were made by individuals and by the press and their circulation as begun throughout the country. Would the Senator have no means, no power, given to anyone to prevent the circulation of treasonable tracts before the person uttering them and publishing them could be arrested and tried and convicted? It takes quite a little time before you can try a man.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator is begging the question. The Senator says "treasonable matter." I want some one to determine that it is treasonable matter, and I do not want that determined by any star-chamber proceeding.

Mr. McCUMBER. But would not the Senator acknowledge the fact that the imprisonment of the individual uttering treasonable words or publications would be nothing compared with the great damage that might be done to the country by filling the homes of the people with treasonable and false statements as to the attitude of the country? How would the Senator meet that emergency?

Mr. BORAH. That might be true; but in comparison with the evil which the Senator speaks of I think the evil of suppressing open, candid discussion of all public questions is infinitely greater than the evil of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the latter is an abuse privilege, not a lawful carrying out of the intent of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator gets away from the proposition I am interested in, and that is the question how we shall determine whether or not it is treasonable matter. Is the Senator willing to have the question of crime determined in this country by an individual who need not call a single witness, who may be satisfied with his own opinion as to the article and take no evidence and hear no party who is charged?

Mr. President, I know of cases—and I suspect the Senator does—where papers have been excluded from the mail and men punished, as far as you can punish men without actually sending them to the penitentiary, their business destroyed, when perhaps the only man who thought it was treasonable matter or matter which ought not to go through the mail was the Solicitor of the Department of the Post Office.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I certainly agree with him fully that the trial should be by a jury; that no man, of course, can be convicted until he has been indicted and tried by a jury; but nevertheless I can not find myself in exact accord with repealing the authority to stop a contagion before you can have the trial.

While I admit, and, as the Senator knows, I think, we all must admit, that the power has been grossly abused, nevertheless it does seem to me that there ought to be some power that could protect the mails against this nonmailable matter before it would be possible to try the accused individual.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator can only resort, then, to arbitrary power to do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I admit it must be more or less arbitrary.

Mr. BORAH. There is where the Senator and I never would agree. The Senator says this power has been grossly abused. I do not believe that this power has been grossly abused. I think the execution of this statute as we have had it is the inevitable result of lodging that kind of a power in any human being. It has been exercised in the same way that just such arbitrary power has always been exercised when it has been given to individuals. I am perfectly willing to state that it is my candid opinion that Mr. Burleson has not consciously and knowingly and willfully abused this power. If the Senator thinks that he has, that is altogether a stronger argument for my position, because we are lodging in a man who is willing, with full intent and purpose, to injure a fellow citizen a power which enables him to do it beyond compensation to that citizen.

But I am assuming to-day that he has exercised it as almost any ordinary individual would exercise it. You might put a man in the Post Office Department who was utterly opposed to any such principle, who would not execute it at all. I concede that; but a man who believes like the Senator does that arbitrary power is justified would exercise it just as the Postmaster General has done in this case.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I call his attention to the fact that we have been granting that arbitrary power—and I do not yet find how we can escape it in all cases—in the matter of sending out obscene literature and in the matter of what is a fraud upon the public. I do not know that heretofore it has been greatly abused. I wish there was some way by which we could meet the evil without putting it first in the power of some person to guard the mails of the Government, so that the Government itself will not be compelled to carry in its mails the things which it has prohibited from being published or sent.

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator speaks of obscene literature, of course that is beside the question, but the literature which is in the Senator's library and in all our libraries, the best literature which is in our libraries, was once excluded from circulation and from public attention by some censor, some poor miserable finite being who thought he could chain down human thought.

Mr. President, I want to read an extract here from the famous fight in the English Parliament for free speech and a free press by Charles James Fox. This same matter was fought out by the English Government in the years in which our Constitution was being framed. Mr. Fox said:

> It has been truly said that no passion is so calculated to harden the heart, and to make it sanguinary, as great fear; and accordingly we find that the most inhuman tyranny has always had its foundation in the hearts of those whose actions condemned them to incessant terror. * * * It is a manifest axiom in a popular government that man has the fundamental right to state his opinion. * * * What deplorable ignorance of the human heart to think that by a mere convention bill to prevent the meetings without redressing grievances they could make men forget by making them silent! * * * If you prevent a man who feels himself aggrieved from declaring his sentiments, you force him to other expedients for redress. * * * In proportion as opinions are open they are innocent and harmless. Opinions become dangerous to a State only when persecution makes it necessary for the people to communicate their ideas under bond of secrecy. * * * You tell the people that when everything goes well, when they are happy and comfortable, then they may meet freely, to recognize their happiness and pass eulogiums on their government; but that in a moment of war and calamity, of distrust and misconduct, it is not permitted to them to meet together, because then, instead of eulogizing they might think proper to condemn ministers. What a mockery is this! What an insult to say that this is preserving to the people the right of petition! To tell them that they shall have a right to applaud, a right to rejoice, a right to meet when they are happy, but not a right to condemn, not a right to deplore their misfortunes, not a right to suggest a remedy! * * * If you mean that freedom is not as conducive to order and strength as it is to happiness, say so. * * * Liberty is order, liberty is strength. The progress of liberty is like the progress of the stream; it may be kept within its banks; it is sure to fertilize the country through which it runs; but no power can arrest it in its passage; and shortsighted as well as wicked must be the heart of the projector that would strive to divert its course.

Mr. Fox says when you compel men to communicate their ideas and their views in a secret, clandestine way, through actions which bind them closer together and give them a feeling of being martyrs to their cause, it is calculated to accentuate their efforts rather than to lessen them. I am one of those who believe that a vast amount of strength is given to a bad cause by undertaking to destroy it by purely arbitrary and unjust methods.

Mr. Fox said in another speech:

> Speech ought to be completely free, without any restraint whatever, in any government pretending to be free. By being completely free I do not mean that a person should not be liable to punishment for abusing the freedom, but I mean freedom in the first instance.

That is the test, Mr. President. Fix the law so that the man who publishes his paper and advocates treason takes the responsibility and answers to the properly established laws and tribunals for its abuse, but do not place in the hands of a particular individual the power to say in advance that this is treason, because it may not be treason at all.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. What I mean is that any man may write and print what he pleases, although he is liable to be punished if he abuses that freedom.

Now I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Is the Senator from Idaho willing to have sections 2 and 3 stand, and to strike out section 4? It seems to me as though there is a manifest distinction between those clauses.

Mr. BORAH. I have already stated that I am perfectly willing to strike out those sections if, upon examination, when I have a little time to look into it after I close my remarks, I find that they bear the construction which the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has placed upon them.

Mr. WATSON. I remember when the conference report was brought back on the espionage bill—that is, the amendment to the espionage bill—with section 4 in it. A part of it had been passed by the House, but no part of it had been passed by the Senate, and it was put in by the conference committee. I recall that there were five of us here who voted against the adoption of the conference report because section 4 had been incorporated. I regarded it then as essentially bad, and I do so now. I shall vote to strike out that section, but I do not believe that the others should be stricken out.

Of course, it is a question always as to whether arbitrary power will or will not be abused. We have been granting arbitrary power to the President and to heads of departments, and it seemed to me as if there were then a necessity to do it; but it is a grave question with me now as to which is the greater evil—whether to confer upon the Postmaster General an arbitrary power to exclude mail that, in his judgment, is treasonable, which would sow dragon's teeth or scatter seeds of discord throughout the country, or to take the other horn of the dilemma. Either seems to me to be an evil, and especially so if the Postmaster General is disposed to grossly abuse his power.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, Mr. President, let us not talk about grossly outraging arbitrary power. Why do you grant arbitrary power? If you grant arbitrary power, you expect a man to use it in arbitrary fashion or you would not grant it. It ill becomes the Congress of the United States to complain of the use of the arbitrary power which Congress itself grants. It is fundamentally wrong.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to call the Senator's attention to the construction given by the Post Office Department as to its authority over unmailable matter.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. LENROOT. So that, if sections 2 and 3 are omitted from the bill, I am inclined to think that the Postmaster General still would have the power over unmailable matter. Section 38 of the regulations provides:

> All undeliverable and unmailable matter, domestic and foreign, shall be forwarded by postmasters and other employees of the Postal Service to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

And so on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to call attention to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States with reference to the effect of granting arbitrary power; that although a law may be valid upon its face, yet if the power is to be exercised in an arbitrary way it renders the statute void, not because it is void by its express terms but because as a result of its execution it results in the exercise of arbitrary power. This is the case of Yick Wo against Hopkins, in 118 United States. This was an ordinance which, upon its face, was held to be valid. The court says:

> The power given to them is not confided to their discretion in the legal sense of that term, but is granted to their mere will. It is purely arbitrary, and acknowledges neither guidance nor restraint.

That is a complete description of the powers given to the Postmaster General under this law. The beginning and the end of it is his will; there is no restraint upon him in any way by reason of the terms of the law. Then the court says:

> Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.

Mr. President, this law has been administered and could be administered in no other way than at the mere discretion and will of the Postmaster General. Congress granted the unlimited and arbitrary power to exclude from the mails whatever matter he should think should be excluded. We have no restraint, no guidance established, no rules fixed in the statute. It rests with him alone.

I do not want to be understood as advocating the right of anyone to spread literature advocating force or violence or treason. I simply want the man who advocates force or violence or treason to be tried and convicted and punished according to the established principles of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I am in sympathy with so much of what the Senator from Idaho has been saying that I do not want even to appear to be in antagonism by asking a question. The Senator has just now placed great emphasis upon the fact that it is the vesting of arbitrary power. It does not strike me that that is quite the proposition. It is not the vesting of arbitrary power, but it is the vesting of arbitrary power in this kind of a situation. I take it that there must be arbitrary power over the instrumentalities of the Government in many instances, particularly in the post office. We provide that certain things are nonmailable; infected meats are nonmailable; explosives are nonmailable. It would defeat the very purpose of the law if somebody had not the arbitrary power to say, "This piece of meat is infected," or "This is an explosive and will endanger the lives of the people who handle the mails." But when you come to deal with a matter through which the public opinion of the country would be controlled, I follow and agree entirely with what the Senator has said. For that reason I remarked a few minutes ago that perhaps his legal proposition is not necessary in order to accomplish his end.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course I shall be glad to have the support of the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he agrees with me in my argument or not. Before the amendment comes to a vote I shall likely ask permission to strike out sections 2 and 3.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, would not the Senator from Idaho also strike out section 1 from his proposed amendment as well? Section 1 simply relates to the provisions of the act, and the act itself defines many offenses against the Government. It is to prevent the carrying through the mails of matter that would help in the consummation of crimes defined in the act.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator have reference to section 1 of title 12?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir; to section 1 of title 12.

Mr. BORAH. I shall take that into consideration, and, if I do not ask to strike it out, perhaps the Senator may do so. We can have a test upon it in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I shall not do so at present, Mr. President, but perhaps may do so later.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I only intend to take the time of the Senate for a few moments, and it is not my purpose to enter into any discussion of the constitutional question which the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has presented to the Senate.

My view of the case is this: The Government of the United States has the inherent power of self-preservation, and it possesses whatever power is absolutely necessary for its protection and safety, whether in time of war or in time of peace. Such power is inherent in it in the very nature of its sovereignty.

In the next place, the question involved here is not directly the question of the freedom of the press; it is a question whether vicious publications that are endangering the safety of the country shall have the free use of the mails. It is no remedy in such cases to say that the guilty one can be punished after the offense has been committed.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one fact of criminal justice as old as the common law itself, and that is that there are circumstances under which it is not necessary to wait until an offense has been committed, but steps may be taken beforehand to prevent the commission of the offense. From time immemorial, as far back as the common law extends, it has been the practice that where a man threatens the life or the property of another person he can be brought into court and compelled to give bond for his good behavior; in other words, the common law conceived that it was better and wiser to prevent an offense being committed than to wait until the offense had been actually committed and then punish the guilty one. In the cases which have arisen in our country and which are still arising—and I shall refer to them by and by—it would be a poor relief to say, "You can prosecute a man and put him in jail," while in the meantime the poison he is producing circulates through and permeates the whole community. The mere imprisonment of the culprit constitutes no complete or full remedy.

Mr. President, we need now, even more than we did during the days of the war, legislation to protect the people of the United States against the circulation of dangerous literature through the mails. Evidence has been brought before the investigating committee of the Senate that emissaries from the Russian Bolsheviki, furnished with money from that country, have come over here to preach the Bolshevik propaganda in our own midst. I have in my hands here——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I will ask the Senator to wait until I make my statement complete, and then I will gladly yield to him. As an illustration, I have in my hand [exhibiting] a Bolshevik publication entitled "Hunger." It is the first issue, and came out a short time ago in the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota. I wish to quote from that paper the first paragraph, as follows:

"Russia," Germany, the Argentine Republic, are the great countries where "Bolshevism" is going through the first stages of its growth.

A child, a baby born by the "great world war," and by its growth astonishes its best friends.

Two years is only a short day in the life of a great world power.

But already this "enfant terrible" is the talk of the whole globe—in the kingly palaces of Europe, at the "Versailles peace table," deep in the bowels of the earth, at the clubs of the "American war millionaire," among the hungry and the homeless who walk the streets in search of food.

In the plateaus of the "Himalayas," in the "Oases of the Sahara," on board the ships that ply the great waters—north and south, east and west—everywhere "Bolshevism" is the standing topic.

If the baby causes a stir, what will the man do?

I will ask to have this document inserted in the RECORD, but as a further illustration of the character of this publication I will quote the following paragraphs:

O, RUSSIA!

O, Russia,
To thee I sing,
Whose freedom came
Not through laughter, wine,
Nor voluptuous woman's glands:
O, no! Thy freedom came Through prison cells and
From Siberia's most farthest mines.

WHAT'S TO BE DONE.

One hundred million dollar appropriation to stop the westward march of "Bolshevism" is the request of Mr. Wilson to the Senate of the United States; as if dollar appropriation could stem the tide of a "world power."

And now comes Senator KENYON, who says: "We have appropriated $100,000,000 for Europe's hungry, do we refuse to appropriate a like amount to keep Americans from going hungry?"

Where is our boasted prosperity, always so loudly proclaimed and so intimately suggested by our two-penny trumpets, the capitalist press?

I wish to read another interesting paragraph from this publication, which is entitled "Birth control."

BIRTH CONTROL—HELP THE UNITED STATES TO CATCH UP WITH THE TIMES.

Save the babies from being born only to die.

Save the mother's strength for only those babies she wants, and no more.

Save the father's money for only those children he can support, and no more.

Save human vitality for the betterment of the race.

Join the National Birth Control League.

How much longer will the people of the United States permit their country to be the most backward and ignorant of all of the large nations on this vital question of race conservation?

The United States has the disgraceful distinction of being the only large country in the world which declares this knowledge to be a crime.

Join the National Birth Control League and help change the laws and establish clinics and get contraceptive information properly circulated.

Send your contribution to the National Birth Control League, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or address the editor of "Hunger," who will gladly give all information about the National Birth Control League.

As I have said, this publication is printed in red—the color of the anarchists and the socialists. It is entitled "Hunger," as though there was hunger among the people of Minneapolis. There is no starvation or hunger there. It is misleading and a slander upon the good people of Minneapolis to intimate that there is hunger and starvation there.

I have in my hand another paper [exhibiting] printed in red, which is entitled "The American Bolshevik." I will read some of the headings of it, without taking the time of the Senate to read more:

Humane America had poison-gas plant working full blast.

The article criticizes us for making gas while the war was pending to meet the gas attacks of the enemy.

Another heading is:

The Bolshevists, the gravediggers of capitalism.

In this connection I want to read something more, emanating from the same sources from which these publications come.

Here is a card:

Liebknecht-Luxemburg memorial meeting. Jacob Panken, Socialist judge, New York City, will speak at Commonwealth Hall, 1217 Hennepin Avenue, second floor, Sunday, February 9, 3 p. m. Admission, 25 cents. Auspices Socialist Party.

It is too bad we were too far off to hear that speaker. Here is another admission ticket:

Thomas Van Lear, Frank E. Minor, and others will speak—

Giving the place of the meeting—

All money from this entertainment goes to the Mooney defense fund, San Francisco; I. W. W. defense fund, Chicago, Ill.; political prisoners' defense fund, New York City; Socialist Party defense fund, Minnesota.

Here is a man who was the Socialist candidate for governor, who was tried and convicted under the espionage law of being a most violent pro-German. He was convicted and sentenced for one year to the county jail. His conviction was affirmed by the supreme court:

Farewell meeting for J. O. Bentall, Saturday, February 1, 8 p. m., Commonwealth Hall, the new Socialist headquarters, 1217 Hennepin Avenue, second floor. This will be the last public appearance of Comrade Bentall before he has to go to the Crow Wing County Jail for "sedition" on February 2. Admission free. Auspices Socialist Party of Minnesota. Please pass this notice along.

Here is another handbill that I have. I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD. It is a notice of a mass meeting to raise money for the Mooney defense fund; the I. W. W.; Chicago, defense fund; the Socialist Party defense fund of Minnesota; and the political prisoners' defense fund, New York City.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mass meeting—Defense entertainment—Under the auspices of the Social Science League, Sunday, February 2, 8 p. m., at Federation Hall, 43 South Fourth Street. Thomas Van Lear, Frank E. Minor, and others will speak. All money from this entertainment goes to the Mooney defense fund, San Francisco; I. W. W. defense fund, Chicago, Ill.; Socialist Party defense fund, Minnesota; political prisoners' defense fund, New York City. A beautiful oil painting, valuation $100, painted by Miss Ada Wolfe, will be given away free. Good music; clean entertainment. Admission, 25 cents; children free. P. A. Stockwell, chairman.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have referred to these matters to show you how active these men are. I regard them to-day as more dangerous to the welfare of our community than some of the men who were opposed to the war during the pendency of the war. It shows what an active program they have instituted. They are flooding the mails.

Here is a man who spoke the other night at a meeting down here, Albert Rhys Williams, who has just come back from Russia, sent back here after spending some time there, equipped with ample funds. He is issuing his publications and scattering them broadcast. The aim of these Bolshevist leaders—some of them are imported and others are our own people—is to poison and demoralize the American people, to undermine and destroy our Government, and bring us to the level of the Government of Russia.

Instead of repealing the espionage law, in my opinion we ought to have it extended to reach such cases as these to which I have referred in order to stem this most iniquitous propaganda that is now being carried on in this country. I am getting to be an old man, and I have not many years before me; but I am satisfied that, unless the American people take effective and drastic steps to stem the wicked tide of anarchy and bolshevism that is now being so extensively carried on in the United States, and that will continue to be carried on unless it is stopped, great injury and detriment will befall the Republic.

Mr. President, the mere conviction, the mere sending to prison of one of these poor fellows—some of them are deluded, mistaken; others do it with malice prepense—is no relief or protection to the American people. It is our duty as legislators to do what we can to protect the American people against this poisonous spirit of anarchy and sedition. The Constitution never was intended for the protection of people of that kind. To my mind it is idle to invoke the liberty of the press for those classes of people. They are outside of the pale of constitutional or any other law; and there are only two ways in which we can protect ourselves. One is to exclude these vicious publications from circulation among our people; the other is to educate the American people, as far as we can, against the dangers of this spirit of bolshevism.

To my mind—and I have become more and more convinced of this from what has transpired at the hearings before the committee of which I am a member—it is apparent that we are facing to-day in this country a greater danger than that which we faced during the war, in the way of having the spirit of liberty and of integrity and of good government of our people undermined by this propaganda of bolshevism that is now abroad, and is being preached and propagated all round us. As I said a moment ago, I am an old man, and may not live to see the day, but if the American people do not take decisive steps to stop this thing, as they ought to stop it, it will grow and grow and become a festering sore beyond all possibility of a remedy.

Mr. President, I am not hostile to the press or to the liberty of the press. We have had laws on our statute books for years relating to what we commonly call fraud orders, laws relating to lotteries, laws relating to obscene literature; and power has been vested in the Postmaster General to enforce those laws. I grant that there may be cases where injustice has been done. There are many cases in our criminal procedure where men have been tried and convicted by juries and their conviction has turned out to be unjust and unfair. Time has demonstrated in some instances that such men were innocent. But because a few of those things have happened should we deprive the Postal Department of all authority in the premises? On the same principle that you exclude what is called fraudulent literature from the mail, on the same principle that you exclude lotteries from the mails, on the same principle that you exclude obscene literature from the mail, in heaven's name, is it not just as important to exclude from the mails Bolsheviki literature, which is far more dangerous to the community at large than either lotteries or fraudulent matter of any kind?

Those things are of limited consequence. This doctrine of bolshevism, as promulgated in publications of this kind, and scattered broadcast throughout the land, will do a thousand times more harm than the mere matter of a lottery ticket, or mere fraudulent matter. It goes to the very vitals of our republican institutions.

While I am in favor of the liberty of the press, while I am opposed to arbitrary power, yet the welfare of this country and the American people is nearest and dearest to my heart and uppermost in my thoughts, and I do not want any academic constitutional discussion to stand in the way of protecting the American people against such vicious propaganda.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir. Excuse me; I meant to have yielded to the Senator from Idaho. It was an oversight that I did not.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to ask the Senator, in view of the exhibits that he has presented, whether he thinks the espionage law should be made more drastic, and, if so, in what particular?

Mr. NELSON. I would make it so as to exclude publications that advocate what these documents do—a subversion of the Government and the destruction of law and order.

Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed, as an appendix to my remarks, this publication with red covers, called "Hunger," and the other publication which is printed in red ink.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUNGER—THE INTERNATIONAL REVOLUTIONIST.

HUNGER—VOL. I. FEBRUARY, 1919. NO. 1.

With the February issue "Hunger" makes its debut to the "working class."

"Hunger" is of hunger born.

"Hunger" knows so well the desires, and the hunger for the emancipation of the toiling masses.

"Hunger" is a monthly magazine devoted to social science, art, and literature. Makes no promises, accepts no advertising, respects no prejudices, plays to no party or cult, will follow its own ideal, and therefore believes in a plumb-line liberalism for all.

"Hunger" offers on apologies.

"Hunger" desires to maintain an "open forum" in which the shams of the present system may be presented and subjected to analysis.

The "open forum" is open to all those who are willing to help and sustain "Hunger" either by voluntary contribution or as a subscriber.

"Hunger" does not care about your individual opinion; it does not care if you are a "single taxer," an "egotist," a "communist," a "Marxist," an "I. W. W.ist," an "anarchist," or what not.

The "open forum" is yours; use it.

A WORLD POWER.

"Russia," Germany, the Argentine Republic are the great countries where "bolshevism" is going through the first stages of its growth.

A child, a baby born by the "great world war," and by its growth astonishes its best friends.

Two years is only a short day in the life of a great world power.

But already this "enfant terrible" is the talk of the whole globe.

In the kingly palaces of Europe, at the "Versailles peace table," deep in the bowels of the earth, at the clubs of the "American war millionaire," among the hungry and the homeless who walk the streets in search of food.

In the plateaus of the "Himalayas," in the "oases of the Sahara," on aboard the ships that ply the great waters, north and south, east and west, everywhere "bolshevism" is the standing topic.

If the baby causes such a stir, what will the man do?

RAVING HUNGER WORDS.

Amid all this raving hunger about the higher civilization, of making the world "safe for democracy," it would be well to pause and think for a moment and inquire, What does it really consist of?

The higher civilization of making the world safe for democracy is supposed to consist of the "self-determination" of the individual in society, to determine for himself, under what kind of a democracy he wishes to live under

If it shall be the "hunger and want" democracy of the "master class" or the "cooperative democracy," unrestricted by man-made laws, of the "working class."

But in reality these raving "hunger words" have become the victims of a cheap and common mob psychology!

There is nothing for any sane individual to defend such a movement, especially in a country where the "lust" and the "hunger" for gold is trampling upon those who in their belief thinking it possible that through some magic wand (the ballot box) it may be possible to usher in a "safe world democracy." These are only idle dreams, so long as "capitalism," the master, remains on the backs of the "slaves."

And the weight of the master is always the same, be he called a professional educator, like "Woodrow Wilson," or a plute and multimillionaire, like "John D. Rockefeller."

And the burden of the slave remains the same, be he called a "trades-unionist" or just a common "migratory worker" out of a job.

INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY.

Industrial organizations of labor, from their first inception, have been a source of the deepest concern of the "capitalist class," and as such industrial organizations of labor also leave deep impressions upon the "capitalistic governments" of the world at large wherever such organizations of labor have taken hold.

Organizations of labor, as a whole, are regarded by that class which enslaves labor as a leprous disease which forever encroaches more and more upon their the "masters' rights" of the "ownership" of "industrial property."

There must be a psychological reason for this breeding of a social disease, and before applying a remedy for this economic disease we must know the reason, the truth, of the evil which breeds that economic industrial unrest in society. "This economic disease is called 'wage slavery.'"

So long as workers are compelled to work and slave for a "master" in the industries owned and operated solely for the masters' interest and profit, workers working in industries in which they have no say in the management nor their ownership, we, the workers, only are allowed to be slaves therein for a mere pittance called wages.

It would be false and idle to imply that the workers working in the industries owned by the "master class" have no peril, that there are no rocks, no obstacles in the way toward making a decent livelihood.

It is a fact that we, the producers of all wealth, work and live under a most inhuman "spoils system."

A spoils system of bosses and bossism, a system that breeds the "parasite" and the "criminal."

A system that by sinister manipulations enslaves the workers, a system of untruthfulness which rings with the horrors of amazing crimes, perpetuated upon the workers, and rings with reckless expenditures of corruption funds held in trust by the hirelings of "capitalists" to pay for false witness and the buying of juries to convict the workers.

Evils with which the system and capital calculates to humiliate the workers and jail and kill those who dare raise their voice in protest against the unjust suppression of the thoughts and actions of the workers.

This is not only true of America, it is also true of any other country in which the workers have no say in the management and ownership of the necessities of life.

The American capitalist in a foreign country does not concern himself the least about the welfare and the conditions of such foreign workers piling up wealth for this foreign capitalist; vice versa, this is also true of the foreign capitalist employing the American worker in America. He, with the American capitalist, are the least concerned about the welfare of this so-called "great American free labor." They, the masters of the industries of all countries, concern themselves only with that one most vital question, so dear to their hearts, of how to enslave the worker more and more. The industrial "Shylocks'" concern is how to get their pound of flesh; and in order to take their pound of flesh the "slave mart" must be kept full to an overflowing capacity in order to reap the fruits of the workers' toil.

Through sinister legislation those "Shylocks" of industry use the force of government to by all means punish those evildoers and wicked breakers of their laws and order, and their moves and actions of such punishments are primarily set forth against those who dare to organize the workers to better their living conditions. Whoever dares to raise his voice in protest against inhuman industrial conditions is singled out by these human bloodhounds of society.

One has only to remember the Knights of Labor; one has only to remember "the five" who were hanged; remember Debs and the Homestead strike; only remember Ludlow—the dastardly methods used by the hirelings and murderers of Standard Oil, who in cold blood murdered your brothers and sisters, fellow working men and women.

Men and women who dared to raise their voices of discontent against existing conditions.

One has only to remember "San Francisco," remember "Tom Mooney," a man risen from the soil of the workers, a man who knew the unspoken desires, the wants, and ways of his fellow workers.

A man that offered every sacrifice and consolation for his fellow men.

A man without ambition and revenge, but of sunlight and content and love, but fearless, steadfast, and true for the rights of his fellow men.

"What is his crime?"

His crime is the crime of every worker; he, an organizer of his class, accomplished what no other could accomplish, namely, to organize the "San Francisco street car workers," and therefore "he shall be free!"

Workers, remember Mooney and all the others must be free. They, the masters, think by forbidding the assembling of peaceful workers, they think by the oppression of freedom of speech and the press, by using the tyranny of a czar, by throwing those who dare revolt into damnable holes of hell, a prison cell—workers remember the "101" in Leavenworth, remember Emma Goldman, Berkman, Debs, Bentall, and all the rest. Shall they rot in prison? By the Eternal, no! no! The tyrants of industry, with their barbaric methods, think the onward rush and march of the "solidarity of labor" can be stopped.

Repression is not a true remedy for industrial wrongs; repression wantonly enforced against the sober sense and judgment of organization of labor will only strengthen the cause of those who advocate the abolishment of "wage slavery."

Industrial injustice is the breeding ground of discontent. Only through the abolishment of "social injustice" done to labor can discontent be abrogated from the breeding ground of industrial slavery.

The remedy for public distemper, says Burke, is conciliation and not coercion, for though coercion may succeed for a time, it always leaves room for coercion again.

Only through economic industrial organization of labor, to hold, to manage, and to control the industries in which the workers work, can that economic disease of social unrest and injustice be eradicated from the industrial field and the world at large.

Workers, organize—organize only through organization can the "industrial emancipation from wage slavery to industrial democracy" be accomplished.

Therefore, workers of the world, unite for the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of a new society based upon the rights of every man, woman, and child.

"O, RUSSIA!"

O Russia,
To thee I sing,
Whose freedom came
Not through laughter, wine,
Nor voluptuous woman's glands.
Oh, no! Thy freedom came Through prison cells and
From Siberia's most farthest mines.

WHAT'S TO BE DONE?

One hundred million dollar appropriation to stop the westward march of "bolshevism" is the request of Mr. Wilson to the Senate of the United States, as if dollar appropriation could stem the tide of a "world power."

And now comes Senator KENYON, who says: "We have appropriated $100,000,000 for Europe's hungry. Do we refuse to appropriate a like amount to keep Americans from going hungry?"

Where is our boasted prosperity, always so loudly proclaimed and so intimately suggested by our two-penny trumpets, the capitalist press. Where is our boasted equality of opportunity? Where are our jobs? Where are the jobs for our returned soldiers, who so gallantly fought to make the "world safe for democracy"?

Why should there be "hunger" and "want" in a country where "liberty" and "democracy" is supposed to reign supreme; or is this "liberty" only for the masters that be.

Why is it that hungry men, women, sailors, and soldiers walk the streets in search for work and food.

When these same men and women have mined the coal, and must need be shiver in the cold, when they have made the shoes and have none themselves, when they made all the clothing and themselves are in rags—why all this misery?

Why all this unemployment? Unemployment comes from producing more than we can use. So long as man and woman are compelled to work for a master, work for a mere subsistence of life, so long as the master, "Capitalism," takes the lion's share of the worker's toil, so long will there be an army of hungry and homeless unemployed, and the army is increasing from day to day.

Workers there is plenty for all in this great country of the millionaire and the pauper. The warehouses are full, there are more shoes, there is more coal, there is more clothing than we possibly could use; there is enough for all; but capital has possession of all the necessities of life.

What is to be done?

Are we going to allow the master, "Capitalism," to become more and more the oppressor of the masses, or are we going to unite and overthrow the master in order that we, the producers of all wealth, for once enjoy the heritage of our lives.

Workers, there is nobody that will help you!

Workers, you must learn to help yourself.

"A ROMAN ALWAYS."

[By John Gabriel Soltis.]

The spacious dining hall of the Noonday Lunch Club was sizzling with conversation previous to the speaker taking the rostrum.

At the south end of the hall there was a long table which was known as the freaks' table. It was so called because at this table sat capitalists who held queer ideas in regard to everything in general and nothing in particular, and who took pride in their radicalism. For instance, there sat on this noon of which we write at the freaks' table a millionaire retail merchant, a brick manufacturer, several financial brokers, and a bishop of the Baptist church.

"Really, I don't understand why we should listen to an anarchist," Mr. Willoughby, a broker, protested.

The radicalism of this gentleman found its expression in the cult of Christian Science, to which he contributed liberally out of his fat purse. But he was angry with the idea of hearing an organizer of the Industrial Workers of the World, who was in a little while to address this representative gathering of St. Louis capital. His rather pale cheeks flushed a little red, for he was afraid that the speaker might make some derogatory remarks on the parasitic profession of which he was a leading member.

"Calm yourself, Mr. Willoughby. It won't harm you any to know what the other side thinks. Furthermore, you can't act intelligently against the I. W. W. if you are ignorant of their plans."

Thus spoke Mr. William Brock, who had made over a million in the manufacture of bricks. The radicalism of Mr. Brock lay in his espousal of single tax and what he pleased to term a sane socialism, a melange of harmless sentimentality.

The bishop agreed with Mr. Brock that one should hear all sides of a question if one desired to act wisely. He had no scruples to listen to anyone, for he was sure reason would prevail.

"I think," said Mr. Willoughby, speaking to his friend Mr. Brock, "that you really go too far. I can't for the life of me see where we come off at with your ideas of single tax.

"I am surprised, Mr. Willoughby, that you, a Christian Scientist, should make a statement like that. It's how one thinks, don't you know."

This bit of wit provoked a round of laughter.

The attention of the entire audience was, at this moment, caught by the stocky form of Wm. Marion Reedy, who, with Herbert Ettor, the organizer of the Industrial Workers of the World, appeared on the platform.

Mr. Reedy immediately took the gavel and opened the meeting. He cast a sarcastic smile over the crowd before he said a word, as if to say what an aggregation of fools they were. After staring at them several seconds he introduced the speaker.

No applause greeted him—only an omnious silence.

The well-knit, splendid form of Ettor towered over the audience as an animated bolt of dignified but visible defiance. He was just in the prime of life, being 32 years old. His speech was fluent, and his arguments skilled. He was absolutely fearless, having gone through many battles of the class struggle, of which he was a recognized opponent.

"Gentlemen," he began, "I am as well aware of the fact as you are that I am on this platform to-day merely as a matter of curiosity. In the first place I realize quite well that the ideas which I hold are very distasteful to you as an employing class. You don't like them and I can't blame you for that, unless I should assume that there is an element of humanity in you. Such an assumption, however, on my part, would be wholly unjustifiable."

"That's a lie, that's a lie," several voices of the cultured folks penetrated the hall. A general murmur of resentment fell from the lips of the auditors. Several persons hastily walked out of the hall, brandishing their fists at the speaker, who stood cool and self-possessed. When the civilized folks quieted down, the speaker continued:

"Therefore, gentlemen, I consider you very poor material for propaganda purposes. Consequently, I shall make no endeavor to convert any of you to the principles of the I. W. W. I shall, however, tell you what we of the working class propose to do with you as a class."

At this point the speaker was again interrupted by a group abruptly leaving the hall, expressing very loudly their opinion of the speaker, which was not flattering. Ettor resumed his speech:

"We consider you to be a useless class in society. The tools of production which you own are the invention of our class, the workers. You neither invent, operate nor direct the complicated machinery of industry. It is not too much to state that, in the majority of cases, you, the capitalists, could not distinguish a threshing machine from a rock crusher. To even ask you to do so would be an insult to you. You, gentlemen, are the bondholders of industry, and as such are interested in only one thing: profits. But the technique of industry is a collective possession of the working class. Should, therefore, a miracle happen, in the sudden disappearance of the capitalist class, society would not suffer in consequence of such a beneficent event. And for this reason: The workers would still carry on the forces of production, upon which our lives depend. However, should the working class vanish from the face of the earth, and there remained only the parasites, consider the situation in which you would find yourself. As you do not understand the methods and arts of production, you would starve to death. Your importance as a class in society, as you see, is greatly inflated. Therefore we propose to make you function in society as a really useful lot.

"Gentlemen, we do not ask justice of you. That would be ridiculous. We are organizing to get justice. I repeat: We are organizing to obtain, by virtue of our strength and intelligence, justice. Better men than I by far have appealed to you in sweet, honeyed sermons to do right by the workers, but your hearts are made of wood. Carlyle, Dickens, Kingsley, Emerson, Hugo, Robert Owen, have all dipped their pens in the beautiful waters of love when addressing you in behalf of our class, and, as a result, you hurled us deeper into degradation. So we shall not crawl before you any longer. We are organizing now to displace you from your usurped position. To paraphrase the words of the immortal Shelly: 'We are many and you are few.' When Spartacus gathered his warriors for freedom beneath the hills of Thessaly their eyes radiated a brilliant fire of determination and within their battered breasts there surged a divine love of freedom. We to-day are the inheritors of those things. We hold within our souls the accumulated wrongs of our brothers from the days of Spartacus, John Ball, up to the recent strike. We mean to rectify them by the erection of a new society, a society in which there shall be neither master nor slave; where the laughter of the child shall not be stilled by the cruel pangs of hunger, nor the sunlight in the eyes of the maid transposed into a commodity made for profit. In this new social order which we are busy constructing to-day man shall cooperate with man for the grand and noble purpose of sustaining and beautifying his common life. In it I can not see venerable age bowed in poverty and humiliation, because society provides for them from the common store.

"Nor do I behold in that magnificent creation of social justice crowds of human beings clamoring for a miserable right to work, with wandering eyes and despair in their souls, driven to desperation by want and worry. That I do not see, because there is work for all, it being a means to an end instead of the end itself. Nor do I perceive in that cooperative society of the world the silver streams of sunlight obscured by the smoke of belching cannon, hurling terror, misery, devastation, and human slaughter, coloring the waters of nature with the blood of murdered beast and man. These horrible, barbarous things do not appear in that society, simply because man cooperates to live and not to slay, being content to let nature eliminate the life of man in her orderly way.

"For once mankind is happy. There prevails a joy of life unknown to man before. Like the rose bush that, planted in fertile soil and attended with care, kissed by the rain and the dew, with the smiles of the sun lavished upon it, bearing forth full-blown red roses, so also, in the cooperative commonwealth, human nature being conditioned in an environment of industrial and social freedom, flowers into myriad beauties the full fruition of its favorable soil."

When the speaker had finished his speech an outburst of tremendous and spontaneous applause filled the hall. He had completely charmed his hearers with his logic and pulsating eloquence. However, it did not last long; the audience quickly became conscious of its social position.

As the crowd walked out of the hall it was engaged in a very lively exchange of opinions on the speech just heard. "It's all moonshine; he's a dreamer; not practical; sounds nice, but; up in the clouds," were some of the expressions made. These captains of industry, disliking any approach to the cooperative commonwealth, considered their views on the subject of socialism as being very practical, undoubtedly because they did not militate against their economic interests.

* * * * * * *

The office boy announced to Mr. Brock that the manager of the works desired to see him. Mr. Brock told the boy to show the manager in. The manager stepped into the office. His face plainly showed that he was in an agitated condition. Mr. Brock noticed that. Therefore he asked, before the manager of the works could seat himself, what he had on his mind.

The manager pulled out of his coat pocket several typewritten papers and handed them over to his superior.

Mr. Brock scrutinized the document very carefully. It was a schedule of wages, drawn up by the men in the works, demanding an increase in wages and a recognition of the principle of collective bargaining. He read and reread for over a half hour. This was something new to him; his men never attempted before this to organize a union. There was a time ultimatum in the demands that peeved the millionaire.

"What do you think of it, Fred?" he asked the manager, after having thoroughly digested the contents of the document.

Fred thought the demands to be very reasonable and had informed the men that he would speak favorably about them to Mr. Brock. The owner of the works being a sort of radical, Fred hoped for a concession of the demands.

"I think," said Fred, "that they ought to be granted, Mr. Brock. You know the cost of living has gone up a whole lot during the last two years, and it's pretty tough on those fellows."

Mr. Brock stared a moment at his manager, then he said:

"I won't grant a cent increase. Let them strike. I shall make provisions for strike breakers. If I give in now, then they'll want the cooperative commonwealth. They should be glad that they have got jobs."

The manager made no effort to persuade the owner; he knew that it would be useless.

Two days later there occurred a big strike in the brickworks. After hearing the speech of the I. W. W. organizer Mr. Brock decided to curb his radicalism.

THE RETURNED SOLDIERS OF CANADA.

[By John Gabriel Soltis.]

Prior to the entrance of this Nation into the mouth of hell there appeared in the press plenty of articles and editorials upon the subject of the effect on the mind of the soldiers the war would have. But since this Nation had gotten herself into the funnels there has been a manifest decrease in the stuff dealing with the psychology of the returned soldier, for reasons known to others besides the capitalist writers.

For two years the writer has had the opportunity to study the returned soldiers of Canada. I have spoken to them en masse and individually, men from St. Julien, Festubert, Messines, and Vimy Ridge, places that are literally saturated with the blood of the Canadian workers. Their experiences on the battle fields of capitalism, together with the horrors that they lived through in industrial life, have combined to make them understand their class position and mission, where the lecture and textbook failed to do so.

When war was made by the industrial kaisers of Europe, Canada, together with the rest of Christian civilization, was in the throes of an industrial panic, with a great ragged army of unemployed on the streets at the time that unemployment demonstrations were being held throughout the length and breadth of America; in the winter of 1914 and spring of 1915, in the city of Winnipeg, Canada, 30,000 hungry men were jobless. They, too, paraded their poverty; but the war saved them from hunger only to feed their bodies later to cannon in a fight "for Belgium," as they were told at that early period of the crucifixion. For they "volunteered" into the army. It was their only salvation, from their point of view, of course. A well-known great war veteran of Canada, who was a member of the first contingent, informed the writer that that contingent was composed, in the main, of workers who, being jobless, were starving with their families. Of course, this fact ought not to detract from the glory which is theirs, because that is all they have obtained out of the world scramble for loot, as they readily admit.

But when they joined the army their economic ills vanished. They got $1.16 per day, with allowances from the Patriotic Fund for their dependents in the cruel clutches of King Hunger. Perhaps this kind act on the part of the capitalists of Canada had a tendency to convince many of the charities of democratic militarism over that of the Russian kind.

When, however, the industry of Canada had revived, as a consequence of the vast "war orders," and the economic position of the Canadian working class became better, then, in order to wage the war "for Belgium" and the interests of democracy in general and those of the capitalists in particular, by maintaining a steady flow of a stream of human flesh for the carnage fields, the capitalists of Canada forced all young men out of their jobs and put women in their places. Thus the alternative of starvation was given to them, or the army. In a "democracy" the right to decide the disposition of one's own life is all nonsense.

Briefly stated, these two methods were used to cause an army of over 300,000. After which conscription was introduced.

These worker-soldiers were at once impressed with the fact that, once in the army, your food, clothing, and shelter came to you regularly, without the least worry, without any bother at all. Yesterday, as a member of society, a worker was perishing with his family because he lacked a job; but to-day, being in the army, the necessities of life came to him as if out of a magic storehouse. As an industrial worker, a creator of wealth, he was doomed to death by starvation; but as a soldier, a destroyer of life and creative labor, his wants were attended to by the State. As a worker, the daily prostitute press did not know nor did it care if he and his family even existed; but as an annihilator of life every capitalist institution, from the church to the politician, talked about him, wrote about him, and lauded him to the high heavens, when only yesterday they had him in the cold streets by closing the job to him. What a wonderful transformation! These things left their indelible stamp upon the minds of the worker-soldier.

So he was sent to France. The politician and press told him daily that upon his return home (should he return) the world would belong to him; his sacrifices on the field of slaughter, conducted on the approved scientific plan, would entitle him to be the dominant figure in society. "Nothing will be too good for you when you come back" were the exact words used, as any Canadian soldier will say.

These workers did come back—gassed, shell shocked, blind, arms blowed off, legs shot off, faces mutilated, wrecked in body and spirit, warriors all in the clash for capitalist existence.

What consideration are these heroes now receiving from the patriots?

Their jobs are forever lost to them. In their ghastly physical conditions they can not, of course, compete with others. Moreover, the capitalists won't employ them because of their military experience and habits. They are independent and prone to disobey, where formerly they were meek and submissive.

Heroes of many battles are selling pencils and newspapers for a living on the streets of Winnipeg. These warriors for democracy are reduced to that condition of pity and disgrace by a ruling class which looks upon not only the soldier but the workers also as a utensil to be thrown aside when its usefulness is gone. Thus is the "new world" of which the capitalist press prattled about for the men who "made the world safe for democracy."

The pensions of these men are so low that in the majority of cases they can't meet room rent with it.

There are innumerable cases on record where even this miserable pension amounting to $10 or over (I don't know a returned soldier who gets more than $20 per month pension) was deducted from the wages of a returned soldier. To illustrate: If the wages of a returned soldier were $75 per month and his pension $10, he would be paid $65. Thus his service on the battle field is capitalized by the always patriotic boss. This democratic practice was so general that the victims finally turned to labor bodies for redress.

To-day in western Canada the returned soldiers are cooperating with the labor bodies. In the recent strikes there the returned soldiers played a very important part. They are ready to unite on the principle that an injury to one is an injury to all. They have already struck on that principle in the face of protests from the "internationals" on this side of the line, whom they despise, and justly so.

NOTICE.

There are in the prisons and jails of this country to-day several hundred political prisoners and conscientious objectors, and these women and men are being subjected to most inhuman and cruel treatment, thus giving the lie to our boasted civilization. Some of the prisoners are contracting tuberculosis, thus becoming a serious menace to the health of the country, to say nothing of the effect upon the ideals of the Nation, and no good can possibly come from longer confining them. Therefore we demand that immediate universal amnesty be granted to all political prisoners and conscientious objectors.

The capitalistic 2-penny trumpets, the newspapers, say: Civilization is great, and wonderful prosperity is greater than ever in the history of the country, and you American, Mr. Block, swallows the bait.

Sewer digging seems not to be to the liking of our returned soldiers, as our city fathers thought. They ought to know that digging trenches in France was for the soldiers' own self-preservation, but that digging of sewers at cheap wages will not keep body and soul together.

Apropos: And then the uniform would be all worn out and the soldier could return to his "Uncle" nothing but rags.

HUMANE AMERICA HAD POISON-GAS PLANT WORKING FULL BLAST—2,500 TONS WERE READY FOR SHIPMENT WHEN ARMISTICE WAS SIGNED.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Startling information regarding the poison-gas plant operated by the United States has come to light recently through an article published in the conservative New York Times, by Richard Barry, a well-known correspondent. In part Mr. Barry's story follows:

Twenty-six miles from Baltimore, on the edge of the Government's vast Aberdeen ordnance proving grounds, is a 300-acre tract, fenced off even from the comparative publicity of the conventional big guns, guarded from prying eyes along every rod by soldiers with drawn bayonets. Twelve months ago it was a Maryland farm. To-day it is the largest poison-gas factory on earth. It can produce, probably three or four times over, more mustard gas, phosgene, chlorine, and other noxious fumes than the intensified war output of England, France, and Germany combined.

As we went over this enormous plant, sprinkled over the old farm, each unit well separted from its neighbors to avoid concatenated explosions, Col. Walker, once the best lecturer at the Boston "Tech.," expounded the theory and the practice, the history, and the possible future of the diabolism we were surveying.

"The French and English, as you know, were reluctant to use gas, deeming it inhumanitarian. Our Government suffered from the same indecision in the early months of our part in the war. However, we came to it in time, just as did the French and English. But, although the English finally utilized every available facility they could command in the manufacture of toxic gases, their total production at its highest point never went above an average of 30 tons a day. The best the French could do was much less than this. You can get the whole story in one sentence when I tell you that our American capacity for September and October was on an average of 200 tons a day. Remember that these figures are not in pounds, as powder figures are usually given, but in tons. And a drop of gas, properly placed, kills or incapacitates."

WORSE THAN WAR TO WORK AT THIS PLANT.

In fact, when the figures are all finally published, it may appear that no division in France has a higher percentage of casualties than was developed at the Edgewater Arsenal in Baltimore (the official name of the poison-gas plant) in the month of August, this year. That was the month of excessive heat, when the gases were most volatile and when the weather made the soldiers somewhat relaxed in their vigilance to avoid accident.

During that month the hospitals were filled at the rate of 3½ per cent of the entire force in the mustard-gas plant per day, or 100 per cent casualty per week.

I did look at the casualty records. I went through the hospitals, two enormous dormitories, perfectly equipped and permeating the atmosphere of a base hospital in France. I saw boys who had been struck down by the fiendish gases while at work—some with arms and legs and trunks shriveled and scarred as by a horrible fire, some with the deep suppurations still oozing after weeks of careful nursing. In one case a drop of mustard oil had fallen from a conduit pipe under which a soldier had walked, hitting his shoe. He wiped it off, thinking that made him safe. The next day his flesh began to peel. Now, five weeks later, his foot looks like a charred ember. Another had accidentally kicked over what he thought was an empty pipe. It contained phosphorus, which flew over his face and upper body. Now, weeks later, he is still a mass of horrible burns. Another case (one of the fatalities) was that of an officer who came in from the works to the office. He wore rubber gloves, as they all do when near the gases, but did not know he had been near enough to pick up the mustard oil. He picked up a chair and placed it in front of his desk, intending to seat himself. At that moment the telephone rang, and he stepped to the wall to answer. A friend, another officer, entered and took the seat by the desk. Forty-eight hours later the second officer was dead. The first officer had accidentally rubbed mustard oil on the back of the chair. It went through the clothes and into the skin.

A BRILLIANT SUGGESTION.

Out of the $72,000,000 expenditure there is one bit of salvage. There is a little 15-ton consignment of brombenzylcyanide. This is an intense lacrymator (tear compeller), which has the effect of blinding people, but only for six or eight hours. After the temporary blindness, the afflicted recover their normal eyesight. It has been suggested that this brombenzylcyanide might be kept in every police station throughout the country, in little cans with spraying nozzles, for use against mobs. It might be a sort of permanent insurance against any American eruption of the Bolsheviki; a merciful and almost painless, but quite effective, argument against lawless force.

GOVERNMENT MURDERS MILITARY PRISONERS—CONSCIENTIOUS SUCCUMB AS RESULT OF VICIOUS TREATMENT.

Following are letters and affidavits concerning the treatment of conscientious objectors at Camp Funston. The authenticity of the material is attested to by a committee of leading citizens of Chicago, including such well-known names as that of Prof. Robert Morse Lovett, formerly of Chicago University, now editor of the Dial:

From a letter December, 1918.

To-day marks the end of another conscientious objector, who underwent solitary confinement here in prison. * * * Four conscientious objectors * * * were hung up by the wrists so that only their toes touched the cold, damp floor, which was 30 feet below the ground. They were deprived of their overclothing and were forced to live in the stench of their own excrement. After four days without food and under these horrible conditions they got scurvy and were sent here to this prison. Here they refused to work for the military, and consequently were put in solitary. * * * To-day we heard Capt. * * * hurriedly ask for permission for * * * to see his relative before he died. The parents of the first * * * to die had just been here to bury their son about a week before. Two are now dead of the four. * * * They have made the supreme sacrifice for liberty, and their deaths must not be in vain.

From a diary, Saturday, September 14.

Col. Barnes, the provost marshal, called at the guard house. He ordered us to stand at "attention," and when we refused to comply he proceeded to kick the legs of the men. Kaplan had his legs and ankles bruised as a result. Upon leaving he hinted to the prisoners that he would be tempted to pardon them if they beat us up.

Monday, September 16.

We were again placed upon bread and water diet. This continued until the following Sunday, September 22, on which day we had regularly prepared meals, so that between September 7 and 22 we had only two days of regular rations.

Monday, September 23.

We were ordered to stand at "attention" by the incoming officer of the day, and upon refusal we were told that we would be taken out every two hours during the night. This procedure was inaugurated that very night, when we were awakened at these periodic intervals, taken out and kept out a while and sent back to bed.

Friday, October 4.

Orders were issued that conscientious objectors are to be given but one helping of food and "d—— little at that." Not even an extra piece of bread is allowed us. We are now kept hungry from meal to meal.

Wednesday, October 9.

Steiner joined the hunger strikers because he had been placed on bread and water.

Eichel was undressed and given a cold shower.

Col. Barnes, the provost marshal, called while some of the objectors were taking their enforced exercise. He ordered them to stand at "attention." When they refused he beat them vigorously with his heavy riding crop. Shotkin was badly hurt, the colonel breaking his crop over the former's ankles. He deprecated the ruining of his stick and implied that the only reason he did not brain Shotkin was that he wasn't worth the trouble. He then addressed the men before him. "You have declared a famine strike on me. Well, the Third Assistant Secretary of War, your friend, knows it and has instructed that I permit you to starve to death."

Shotkin, limping, returned to quarters. A guard straightway ordered him outside. Shotkin insisted that he could not walk and demanded medical attention. Though the doctor was in the room at the time, no treatment was given him. On the contrary, though suffering intense pain, he was dragged outside and two guards pushed him around the inclosure.

Steiner was dragged from his solitary cell and ordered to walk around. Failing to obey, a guard seized him by his fingers and dragged him around. Steiner suffered intense pain, for the slightest resistance on his part meant the pulling of his finger out of joint.

After supper two slices of bread were given to those who were presumably on bread and water, despite the fact that every one of them was on hunger strike. The sergeant informed them, "Not a d—— drop of water do you get until this bread is consumed."

We, the undersigned, consider the above a fair and accurate account of our treatment at the military police guard house of Camp Funston, Kans.

WILLIAMS ANSWERS FURTHER QUESTIONS ON RUSSIA—NOTED CORRESPONDENT EXPLAINS WHAT SOVIETS HAVE DONE FOR WORKERS.

[NOTE.—Arthur Rhys Williams, a noted journalist, worked with the Soviet Government and lived with the workers and peasants during the Bolshevik régime. Below he answers a few questions commonly asked about what the Soviet Government has done:]

When the workers took over the factories and mines, did they not make many mistakes?

They did. Lack of experience and technical skill led them to many blunders. But they learned quickly, and after a time many factories turned out more products than before.

As soon as the workmen found the factories really in their hands there came a change in their minds. Under the Kerensky régime they tended to elect a foreman who would let them do as they pleased. Under their own government, the Soviet, they began to elect as foreman those who put discipline into the shop and raised the production.

In the so-called American works at Vladivostok the wheels, frames, and brakes of cars were assembled, and the cars sent out over the Trans-Siberian Railway. In the Kerensky régime these shops were hotbeds of trouble. The 6,000 workmen on the pay roll were turning out but 18 cars a day.

The Soviet committee closed the plant down and put the men to work in other places. Then it reorganized the shops and started up with a force of 1,800 men. In the underframe section, instead of 1,400 there were 350, but by means of short cuts, introduced by the workers themselves, the output of that department was increased. Altogether the 1,800 men on the new pay roll were turning out 12 cars a day, an efficiency increase of more than 100 per cent per man.

I was standing with the Bolshevik president on the hills overlooking the shops below. He was listening to the clank of the cranes and the stamp of the trip hammers ringing up from the valley.

"That seems to be sweet music to your ears," I said.

"Yes," he replied; "the old revolutionists used to make a noise with bombs, but this is the noise of the new revolutionists, hammering out a new social order."

Are socialists the only ones who believe in the Soviets?

No; all classes of Americans—Col. W. B. Thompson, of Wall Street; Col. Raymond Robins, head of the American Red Cross, who knew Lenine and Trotzky; Maj. Thatcher; Bessie Beatty, of the San Francisco Bulletin; Louise Bryant, of the Bell Syndicate; Madeline Z. Doty, of Harper's; Edgar Lee Brown, of the Chicago Daily News; Dr. George F. Kunz, John Reed, of the Liberator, and scores of others.

How do we know that the Soviet is the government that the people of Russia want?

It is the only government that has shown any strength, and the only one that the people have fought and died for. The last Sunday in July an election was held in Vladivostok. There were 17 tickets. Everybody said the contest was between the Cadet Party and the Moderate Socialist block. It was not supposed that the Bolsheviks could cast any large vote, because their leaders were in prison and their papers suppressed. But when the votes were counted it was found that the Cadets had 4,000, the Socialists 5,000, and the Bolsheviks 12,000. The Bolsheviks got more votes than all the other 16 parties put together.

What have the Soviets done for the women of Russia?

Women have the same political, economic, and social rights as men. The Bolsheviki Government provides free care for women 16 weeks before, while, and after they become mothers. If they go back to work, they are allowed to work but four hours a day. Women have full rights over their property, the right of divorce the same as men, and in the shops are on the same footing. "Together men and women were slaves, now together they are free."

HOW IS JUSTICE ADMINISTERED UNDER THE SOVIETS?

Justice is very simple in Russia now. The old laws of Russia were very bad, and the Soviet Government had to rebuild the whole thing. In the meantime, a revolutionary tribunal which hears all cases was established. Sometimes lawyers are not present at all, but the people defend themselves, and their friends come forward to speak for them.

ALDERMAN PETERSON PUT HIS FOOT IN IT.

Alderman Peterson, of the sixth ward, is one of those genial souls who likes to please everybody, and particularly, we might say of him, he very much fears that he will be replaced by a Socialist in the next election. So it came about that the worthy alderman, who voted for the vicious red-flag ordinance, introduced an ordinance calling upon the telephone companies to increase the wages of the telephone employees. Now, it so happens that the present employees of the telephone company are all strike breakers; in plain English, scabs. So Mr. Peterson's bill really would raise the wages of the scabs, a group of contemptible devils who would sell their souls for a dollar bill.

Are Mr. Peterson's fears that he will be replaced by a Socialist in the coming elections well founded? We think they are.

MEYER'S POLICE GO ON RAMPAGE IN TWELFTH WARD—CONFISCATE PAPERS AND DRIVE CUSTOMERS FROM RADICAL NEWS STAND.

Mayor Meyer's police had a pleasant evening of it last Monday when they walked into the place of business owned by Mr. H. Gravedahl, 4004½ Minnehaha Avenue, stole copies of papers they wanted, and ordered the customers who were in the place to leave at once. The name of one of the officers is Dick Kerr; the other we have not yet been able to discover. They had no warrant; there was no disorder in the store, which is a combined news and confectionery establishment; the seizure of copies of the American Bolshevik, the Revolutionary Age, and other periodicals was entirely unwarranted and an act of unlawful rowdyism.

A VICIOUS BILL.

The forty-first session of the Minnesota State Legislature was fittingly opened with the introduction of house file No. 1, the reactionary Nimock's bill to prohibit the use of the red flag. The bill is a blanket affair that would make it unlawful to print the Socialist Party emblem, an I. W. W. banner, a picket's banner; in short, any sort of a labor ensign that might be used by the working class in its struggle for freedom from wage slavery.

We are certain, of course, that the three Socialists in the legislature will vote "no" on the proposition; probably a few "progressives" will muster up sufficient courage to vote with them, despite the visions of anarchy and riot that will be brought before the house and senate by the old guard. We think the bill will pass. And we say further, "Pass it and be damned!" The days of corporation rule over the workers are nearing an end. Let these lickspittles of special privilege enjoy themselves while they may. "The future belongs to the people!"

THE MAGIC PAPERS.

There is a strange delusion abroad that unless an individual possesses citizenship papers he is a thorough undesirable. If he possesses the magic papers (and, of course, behaves himself to the satisfaction of the ruling class), he is accredited, he is entitled to express himself of what he thinks; but if, horrible to relate, he has not received the coveted documents he is worthless, useless, and an enemy of the country. How powerful a scrap of paper may be made to appear!

Does the fact that a man carries these sacred documents make him necessarily an asset to society? Does the fact that he does not carry them make him necessarily an enemy of the people? If we are to accept current opinion on the matter, only citizens should be allowed to exist; others really can not justify their existence. We know noncitizens who are really valuable to their communities, men who are struggling for the social good; we know citizens who are criminally enemies of the people. While there can be no objection to one's taking out these magic papers, if he so desires, it is often the case that the noncitizen is a better citizen, in the larger sense, than he who shouts the loudest against "these damned foreigners."

THOSE PROFITEERS.

Figures are, ordinarily, rather dull reading, but statistics brought to light in recent weeks by the Treasury Department and the Federal Trade Commission concerning the profits of the patriots during and because of the war are more than interesting. Particularly is this so in view of the testimony given a few days ago before a congressional committee by J. Ogden Armour, the millionaire packer, who made sweeping denial that the packers had profited unreasonably in recent years. According to the Federal Trade Commission report the profits of Armour, Swift, Morris, and Cudahy in 1912, 1913, and 1914 totaled about $19,000,000 each; in 1915 they earned $36,000,000; in 1916, $55,000,000; in 1917 the figures rose to the stupendous amount of $87,000,000. And while sales increased 150 per cent profits increased over 400 per cent. And Mr. Armour had the courage to tell an investigating committee that the poor, poor packers were practically starving to death!

Even the conservatives will hold with us that these profits are exorbitant. But a real solution to the problem will never be found until the packing industry, as well as all others, is made the property of the working class. Reduction in percentage of profit is, after all, a sadly mild remedy. "A little less robbery, please," is scarcely a satisfactory demand. We'll say, "No robbery at all." And with proper organization the working class can make that demand effective.

THE BOOK SHELF—REVIEWS OF SOME OF THE NEW BOOKS THAT ARE WORTH READING.

[Louise Bryant on Russia.]

Louise Bryant's kaleidoscopic "Six Red Months in Russia" (Geo. H. Doran Co.) reminds us, for all the world, of Pathé Weekly. From the constituent assembly she takes us with her enthusiastically to see Catherine Breshkovsky; from there we visit Kerensky, and learn many things, interesting ones, indeed, about him; then we are given intimate views of the Bolshevik foreign office, where the author, John Reed, and Arthur Rhys Williams were employed, assisting in the Bolshevik propaganda; the fall of the Winter Palace is flashed before us; Lenine, Trotsky, Antonoff, Krylensko, Dubenoff, Kollantay are introduced and we learn of them and their work.

And while the book is thrown together, rather hastily it may appear, whatever page is turned to (in all the 300) will be found dramatically interesting; yes, almost melodramatically so. Louise Bryant was there. She saw these things we are all talking about. Saw the women soldiers and talked to them, watched the revolutionary tribunal, with its simple methods of dealing out real justice; saw the majestically sad red burial of 500 martyrs of the revolution, sat in at meetings of the constituent assembly and the council of Soviets. She was there when the Rusian proletariat wrote the most glorious page in modern history.

You'll find a dozen or so corking photographs of the leading figures, as well as a number of decrees that were issued by the Soviet Government. Information? Lots of it. And all with the personal touch that makes you know these people whom you have been talking about, shouting about for these many months. It's inspiration, is this book of Louise Bryant.

THEN THE REVOLUTION.

[By J. O. Bentall.]

When does the revolution come? When we have educated the masses? When we have organized the working class? When we have elected socialist officials and established our free press and rostrum?

No.

Won't the revolution come by intelligent awakening?

Never.

Won't it come through the hungry stomach?

Never.

When oppression becomes unendurable and tyranny a nightmare; when hunger stalks abroad and want haunts the slaves; when liberty is taken away and the world is robbed of freedom; when war and blood and pestilence and death has overtaken the masses, and life becomes a ghost, a skeleton, a rotting carcass; when life becomes loathed and despised and death becomes the bright desired bride of the disgusted, discouraged, hounded, beaten, licked humanity; when the people get sick of life, then the revolution.

That is the stern history of Russia. When the people ceased to endure the iron heel of the Czar and of capitalism as a whole, they revolted.

That is the naked history of Germany. When the tyranny of militarism and the murder game of capitalism got the people down in the dumps, they rose up.

So it will be in France, in England, in Italy, in America.

When the people become sick of life, they will make one big leap for freedom.

The people of America are on the verge of a revolution because their liberty has been taken away from them.

They will not stand for that. They are disgusted, and cry to-day as Patrick Henry cried:

"Give me liberty or give me death."

THE BOLSHEVISTS, THE GRAVEDIGGERS OF CAPITALISM.

That they were right in this also we can easily prove by the acts of the governments of capitalistic countries. Even in those countries which have the most democratic institutions the governments are class governments—"committees for the conduct of the common affairs to the bourgeisie." In the United States the workers have the ballot and are in a majority, but the capitalist class controls the means of information. It controls the newspapers, the schools, the colleges, and the pulpits, and through this control it is able to mold the minds of the voters so that they elect to office men who will uphold their class interests. And when they are unable to control the voters they can always win over the "good men" elected to office by the pressure they can bring to bear through their economic power and promises of preferment. Consequently the Government of this country, as is proven by its acts, is greatly concerned and constantly engaged in passing laws conserving the interests of the capitalists, but never legislates in the interests of the workers.

THE WAY TO FREEDOM.

Marx and Engels pointed out also that the development of the means of production was bringing larger and larger masses of workers together in industry, and that the system of production was changing from individual production to collective production. Private ownership of industry, they said, was a fetter on the development of the highest and most efficient form of collectivism.

They meant by this what Mr. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, pointed out in his annual report, when he said that under private ownership the railroads sent freight by roundabout routes and lost millions of dollars because they did not use common terminals. The coal industry furnishes another example of the fetters of private ownership on collective industry.

Marx and Engels said that the way to freedom for the workers was, in harmony with the development of industry, to transfer industry from private control and ownership by the capitalists to the common ownership and democratic management by the workers.

They said that to accomplish this the workers must gain control of the State—the Government—and change it from an instrument of capitalist oppression to a means of establishing the common ownership of industry and management by the workers.

They said that when the workers took control of the Government there would come into existence a "dictatorship of the proletariat"; that such a dictatorship of the proletariat was necessary in order to break down the resistance of the capitalists to the socialization of industry, but that, as the transformation of industry from private ownership for profit to collective ownership with management by the workers in the industries proceeded, the State would lose its class character and become merely an organization for the administration of industry; that in place of being an instrument of class rule it would become a huge cooperative organization of all the workers for the common purpose of supplying themselves with food, clothing, homes to live in, and education and recreation.

The capture of political power by the workers might come through a mass movement and revolution, as it did come in Russia and as it is now manifesting itself in Germany, or it might come as it did in Finland, where the Socialists elected a majority of the Finnish Parliament, and where civil war exists because the propertied classes resorted to force to stop the workers from proceeding with the work of socializing industry.

BOLSHEVISM—APPLIED MARXIAN SOCIALISM.

Now, we are ready to answer the question whether bolshevism is something new.

If we place in parallel columns the principles of Marxian socialism and the acts of the Bolshevists, we will find that the Bolshevists are acting upon the principles that Marx and Engels laid down more than half a century ago.

They organized the workers for a class conflict.

They seized control of the power of the State and established a dictatorship of the proletariat.

They are using the power of the State to wrest control of industry from the hands of the capitalists and to build up a democratic administration of industry by the workers.

In the period of transition the power of the State is being used to establish collectivism and democratic management. This process wipes out of existence the capitalist class, and as this class disappears, being absorbed in the ranks of the workers, its power of resistance ends, there disappears with it the coercive power of the State, and industrial democracy takes its place.

Bolshevism is not something strange and new. It is not a blind, raging force of destruction. If at present its triumph is accompanied by bloodshed and destruction, it is because the bankruptcy of capitalism precipitated a cataclysm, and the workers are obliged to rebuild the new order amidst the wreckage of the old, and with those who profited from their former oppression and exploitation placing every obstacle possible in their path.

Bolshevism is Marxian socialism in action. It is the social revolution under way. It is the workers on the road to victory and a better world.

WE ARE NOT IMMUNE.

The capitalist-owned newspapers are shrieking loudly against bolshevism. They are lying about it. They are resorting to the most desperate measures to poison the minds of the workers against it.

The reason they do this is clear.

They know that the exploitation and oppression of the workers in industry exists in this country as it exists in Europe. They know that the socialist movement in this country has and is carrying on the same kind of campaign of education and organization among the workers that was carried on in Russia and in Germany, and that the time is coming when the workers here will engage in the same struggle for their emancipation that is now going on in Europe.

They know that this struggle will not be precipitated by the wild schemes of a few individuals, but that it will be the logical result of the historical development in industry.

The Bolshevists are the gravediggers of capitalism and the builder of the new world. They are removing the wreckage and débris of a bankrupt system of production and putting in place the foundation on which will be erected the structure of the new society—the better and more beautiful world of the future.

It is because the gravediggers of the system that gives them great wealth and luxury are at work that the capitalists rave and are filled with fear and dread.

For the workers the present is the period of hope and joy in anticipation of coming happiness.

WOMEN IN RUSSIA.

[By G. H.]

I heard a man say
The other day
That in Russia
They have made
Women public property,
And I wondered what he meant.
For in Russia
They have abolished
That blessed institution
Known as matrimony
And established
A registry system,
Making marriage
A civil contract,
So a man and a woman
May choose each other
Without the sanction
Of a priest or church.
And married life
Can be clean
And fine and decent
Without bonds or chains,
And children may be born
Into an honest world
Without hypocrisy
And cant about
The marriage relation.
And when it is
No longer possible
To live together in Love and self-respect,
Either party may apply
For a separation
Without the scandal
Of a divorce.

But in America
Women must wait
Until some man
Asks them to share
His lot, and be Blessed by a minister
For a fee,
So that they
Can do his cooking
And washing and scrubbing
And mend his clothes,

And bring his children
In respectability
Without any pay,
And if they live long enough
They may get
Some of his property
After he is dead.
And if they can not live
With him any longer
They may get a divorce,
If they can endure
The humiliation
Of a divorce court.

And I think
What the man meant
By public property
Was that in Russia
Women are free human beings,
And do not belong
To any man,
And that he would prefer
To have them remain
Private property,
As they are in America.

DEFENSE ENTERTAINMENT FEBRUARY 2.

The Social Science League of America is giving an entertainment Sunday evening, February 2, at 43 South Fourth Street. The funds raised are to be divided between the Mooney Defense League, the I. W. W. defense fund, political prisoners' defense fund, and Socialist Party defense. A beautiful oil painting, by Miss Ada Wolf, and valued at a hundred dollars, is to be raffled off at this entertainment. Tickets are a quarter, and are on sale at socialist headquarters, 1217 Hennepin Avenue.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE.

Will the city council now kindly pass an ordinance against the use of red ink?

Why American troops in Russia now? The Bolsheviks, according to the Associated Press, have already massacred four or five times the total Russian population!

One hundred million dollars has been appropriated to destroy bolshevism in Russia. As the population of Russia is 180,000,000, this means about 50 cents apiece, say, about one square meal for each person in the Empire. Do they really expect to stop bolshevism with one square meal?

The speech of a prominent citizen in a south side church, attacking bolshevism, was described to us as "about as intelligent as a burlesque show and as truthful as an account of a socialist meeting in the capitalist press."

Local Boston has passed a resolution demanding immediately a national convention of the Socialist Party, in order to consider the problems which have arisen out of the war and the revolutions which have followed it. The demand is occasioned by the sending of Lee, Work, and Oneal, three conservatives, to attend the fake "international," called for Lausanne, Switzerland, by discredited enemies of socialism in Europe. The call is issued by Camille Huysmans, and others who have proven to be enemies of the revolutionary proletariat, "comrades" who have betrayed the movement time and again.

It is pointed out that the national executive committee had no authority whatever to send these delegates without referendum vote of the membership. It is further argued that, from all the information available, it would seem that the American Socialist Party has no place in such a reactionary gathering, and it is urged from these facts that locals protest by wire to the national secretary, and that a convention of the party be called for the purpose of taking a stand on the vital issues that have recently arisen.

PORTLAND WORKERS AND SOLDIERS ORGANIZE.

Two thousand workers and soldiers organized a Workers and Soldiers' Council at Arion Hall last Thursday. An executive committee of 23 was elected, and resolutions were adopted demanding withdrawal of troops from Russia and amnesty for political prisoners.

WHERE TO GO.

Latimer to speak February 2.

The first half of the season's lecture course will be completed Saturday evening, February 2, at new Commonwealth Hall, 1217 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, with a lecture by T. E. Latimer, prominent Minneapolis attorney, on "Labor conditions in the Twin Cities." Mr. Latimer was counsel for the employees in the War Labor Board hearings in the Twin Cities recently, and his speech will deal with the startling information regarding wages, hours, etc., brought to light in this investigation.

Minneapolis Local, Socialist Party, has moved into the new Commonwealth Hall, 1217 Hennepin Avenue, where it will hold regular meetings the first and third Thursday of every month.

The Socialist Study Class has likewise moved its meeting place to Commonwealth Hall; meetings are every Friday.

I. W. W. Recruiting Union; every Wednesday night at headquarters, 14 South First Street.

RUSSIANS TO ENTERTAIN.

The Russian Slavic Educational Association announces a concert and play for February 2 at Finnish Hall, Humboldt and Western Avenues. The play "Shot to Death" will be put on at 1.30 in the Russian language, and will be followed by musical numbers and a speech by A. E. Georgian.

TRADES AND LABOR ASSEMBLY DEMANDS POLITICAL AMNESTY.

Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly, representing 20,000 union men in this city, passed unanimously a resolution demanding amnesty for all political prisoners at a regular meeting last Wednesday.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, all in this Chamber have a very great respect for the Senator from Minnesota. He is one of the veterans of the Senate; and we have not only a high regard for his capacity as a legislator but a very tender regard for him individually. But I hope that when the Senator comes to review his remarks he will reflect upon one statement which he made—that the people to whom he referred here, Socialists and Bolshevists, are beyond the pale of the Constitution and beyond the pale of the law.

That doctrine we should all desire to keep from taking root in the American system of Government. It is the precise doctrine, if we understand correctly, upon which bolshevism and I. W. W.ism are founded, to wit, that the man who disagrees with you is entitled to no protection other than that which force may, in its beneficence, see fit to grant. I am sure that that doctrine is not the doctrine in which the Senator from Minnesota believes. These people are not beyond the pale of the Constitution; they are not beyond the pale of the law. The Republic can deal with them within the terms of the law and in an orderly way. It is an awful thing to say upon this floor that men are to be treated as beyond the pale of the law.

The Senator says certain people are bringing the doctrine of bolshevism into this country. Mr. President, what is the doctrine of bolshevism? It is the doctrine which the Senator accepts. Just as soon as Lenine and Trotsky were placed in power they suppressed every newspaper in the land that did not agree with them. They did not give anybody a hearing as to whether or not they should be suppressed. They denied a hearing to every man who did not agree with them. That is what the reports in the papers say. I do not know whether it is true or not. I am basing my statement upon what the papers reported, although I have reason to believe that perhaps sometimes these reports are exaggerated. But they not only denied a hearing to people who had published papers contrary to their views but they denied a hearing to those who had views with reference to government contrary to theirs. They disposed of them in arbitrary fashion, executed them without trial because they regarded them as beyond the pale of the law. They practiced the doctrine which the Senator preaches.

Mr. President, this is a Government of law and not of men; and no man in this country who is a citizen or who owes allegiance to this country, or is found in this country subject to its jurisdiction is beyond the pale of the law. That is the contest that has been going on for three centuries—to establish here a government of law, which would afford to every citizen under the law the ample protection of its provisions, regardless of whether he was insane or criminal. If insane, let him be sent to the asylum; if criminal, let him be adjudged such by the ordinary procedure of our courts, and sent to the penitentiary. But no man is without and beyond the protection of the law. To assert that to be true is to libel our institutions and to slander our whole form of government. I deny such principles. They have no place in this Chamber.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very largely in sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and I have been very much impressed by the argument which he has made in behalf of his motion to amend.

I took some part in the discussion which preceded the enactment of the espionage law. I took exception to some of its provisions, and did what I could to make it as workable as possible and soften the harshness of some of its sections. I was not here when the final vote was taken upon its passage; hence I am unable to say whether I would have voted for it or not.

Its only defense, its one defense, is that it is a war measure, made necessary for the protection of the Government which we all serve and because of the prevalence of a very large seditious element scattered throughout the length and breadth of the Nation. With the termination of the war it should disappear, for in time of peace, however dangerous the Bolsheviki menace may be—and I think I recognize its gravity as fully as anyone—it should be decided by constitutional methods and through constitutional agencies until overt acts committed by it justify a resort to other remedies.

Mr. President, I have always shrunk from the exercise of arbitrary power everywhere, and particularly in a Government like ours, but we must expect to meet them in some form during a period such as we are now happily emerging from.

I read a few days ago in the dispatches an incident which occurred in the United States district court in the city of Chicago, presided over by a judge of considerable prominence, Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis. He asked the witness upon the stand, who was wearing a wrist watch, whether he belonged to the Army. The reply was that he did not. The judge then ordered him to take the watch from his wrist, saying no man should be permitted to wear a wrist watch who did not belong to the Army or Navy in some capacity. I think a member of the bench guilty of such infinitesimal, contemptible despotism should be impeached. I think any judge who would so conduct himself betrays by such conduct his utter unfitness for that or any other public position. I do not know how we can avoid such evidences of petty tyranny, because impeachment is one of those theoretic systems of criminal procedure which are not honored in the breach, because there never is any breach, except on rare occasions in demonstrations of its utter incompetency. That, however, is a digression.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. May I say to the Senator from Colorado, knowing his eminent fairness at all times and his high position as a Senator, if the charge made against Judge Landis or if the statement were accurate, would it not appeal to the Senator that possibly Judge Landis's real error was in assuming it as humor? I would suggest to the Senator that possibly Judge Landis felt when he made that remark to the witness that he was making a humorous reflection upon certain officials of the Army who always wear wrist watches. I can not conceive for a moment that he really meant seriously to reprove the witness.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator knows Judge Landis and I do not. It may have been an exhibition of judicial humor; but if so, it is an incident of a humorous kind which does not arouse my sense of humor at all.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me say to my friend, it may be regrettable, and I have no knowledge of the instance; I can pass no judgment upon it; but I can not conceive that a man such as Judge Landis would really mean to indicate that no man had the right to wear a wrist watch except some officer of the Army, and if he dare to do so he should be degraded for doing such a thing. I would be astounded to hear that such evolution of his mind had transpired as to border very near to the question of responsibility, and that can not be charged to him.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope that it is unfounded. I hope for his sake, I hope for the sake of the judiciary, that it is unfounded or that it is a clumsy joke; but such incidents serve very largely to confirm that prejudice against Federal courts which is one of the characteristics of the time, and is based largely upon assumptions of petty tyranny and oppression that are unworthy of the bench and disagreeable to its occupants.

Mr. KENYON. I just came into the Chamber. May I ask the Senator what the complaint was about Judge Landis? Judge Landis is a man whom I have known intimately and well for very many years, and I am wondering just what it was the Senator said.

Mr. THOMAS. I referred to the fact that the exercise of arbitrary power in this country was not confined to proceedings under the espionage law, and as an illustration of it I referred to an incident which appeared in the press a few days ago, the substance of which was that a witness in Judge Landis's court in Chicago wore upon his wrist a watch, and upon being asked by Judge Landis if he belonged to the Army, and upon his replying that he did not, ordered him to take it off, Judge Landis saying that no man should be permitted to wear a wrist watch who did not wear a uniform or was not connected with the Army.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator any information that any such thing really occurred? Is it a very important matter, anyway?

Mr. THOMAS. All I know is what I saw in the papers.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator know Judge Landis?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not. I have had a very high opinion of him.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator's high opinion of Judge Landis is justified.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not seen the incident denied.

Mr. KENYON. No more patriotic man or better judge, in my opinion, ever sat upon a bench than Judge Landis.

Mr. THOMAS. He has been a good judge. I hope that is not one evidence of his brand of patriotism.

Mr. KENYON. His brand of patriotism is illustrated by his boy, who stopped here a few days ago on his way back home from France, his only boy, with a magnificent record in bringing down German airplanes. The Landis family is in the front rank whenever any question of patriotism is involved.

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. KENYON. The patriotic utterances of Judge Landis from one end of the country to the other during the war did much to stimulate patriotism. This matter, it seems to me, is in the nature of an attack on him and is very trivial. If ever a man stood for the right things, either on the bench or in public life, that man is Kenesaw Mountain Landis. If we had more judges like him it would be well for the country, and if the Senator from Colorado knew him as I know him no word other than commendation of him would ever come from his lips.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the Senator from Iowa came in I expressed the hope that it was not true. I reiterate it.

Now, Mr. President, let me proceed with the purpose for which I took the floor. We have been several days engaged in an abortive effort to pass an appropriation bill. That it has not yet reached a final vote is due to the fact that it was loaded by the committee with riders, and is now being loaded, or the attempt is being made to further load it, with other riders containing subjects none of which, in my judgment, are germane to the objects and purposes of the bill or in harmony with its title.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho is confessedly not subject to a point of order, and therefore it is accompanied by a motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. President, I am going to protest at this time against the continued practice of loading bills, and particularly those of national importance whose early passage is very essential, with amendments providing for objects and for obvious purposes that are not only foreign to the purposes to be accomplished by the bill, but which necessarily provoke prolonged discussion and controversy.

If every appropriation bill reported upon this calendar between now and the 4th of March is to be treated as this one has been treated we will be fortunate if we pass two of them. I see no reason why they should not be so treated, if we are to go to the extreme of suspending rules in order to permit the intrusion into this bill of a matter which however important is entirely foreign to it.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I shall vote against this amendment. I want to see this bill passed, much as I dislike some of its provisions, because we need all the time remaining at our disposal, if we should sit here by day and by night, for the proper and intelligent transaction of other remaining business. So believing and for these reasons I shall cast my vote against the suspension of the rule. I have no doubt that the distinguished Senator from Idaho will be able to secure a recognition of the main purpose of his discussion in some other fashion.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I understand there is a bill, indeed that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] has introduced a bill, having for its object the repeal of the espionage act, and that bill is before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the case. I think a majority of the riders that are offered to appropriation bills are also included in independent bills, some of which have been approved and reported to the calendar, and others are still in committee. But it is the practice which I protest against, not only the cumbrous and dilatory but the dangerous practice, of holding up important bills in this body until those who are interested in particular matters entirely foreign to them can compel the Senate, in order to reach an ultimate conclusion, to accept their amendments as a condition to a final vote.

Mr. KING. Of course, no one can dissent from the conclusion stated by the Senator from Colorado. I do not intend to discuss that.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. First, I desire to give notice that I reserve the right to ask for a separate vote in the Senate upon the action of the Committee of the Whole with respect to the amendment found on page 15 of the bill under consideration, its provision being what is known as the pneumatic-tube item.

I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment found on pages 28 and 29, being the motor-truck amendment, was rejected. I think the chairman of the committee will not object to the motion for a reconsideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest that the Senator had better do that when the bill reaches the Senate. It can not be done now except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCUMBER in the chair). The Chair understands that an amendment is now pending, known as section 6 as amended. Therefore the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is not at this time in order.

Mr. KING. Then, I shall not insist upon my request at the present time.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask what amendment is now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is on page 37, to insert lines 4 to 15, inclusive, including the amendments proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the vote taken on the amendment as amended until I can offer a substitute for it. I understood that the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was adopted last night.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was adopted.

Mr. KIRBY. So was the amendment proposed by me.

Mr. SMOOT. I so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Arkansas were adopted, and also an amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that to be the case. What amendment is now pending to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to offer a substitute for it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before that is done I want to offer another amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make the point of order that amendments can not be offered until half past 3 o'clock under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what the agreement says.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but the agreement does not prevent amendments from being offered before 3.30. It says that general debate shall end at 3.30. As the Senator knows, an amendment has already been offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not care about it, but that was the agreement adopted at the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Idaho, to continue the general debate until half past 3 o'clock, and after that amendments could be offered and voted upon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator will remember that I asked the Chair if under the agreement we could vote before 3.30 if the debate was exhausted on a proposition, and the Chair said yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we can do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection. I simply wanted to call attention to the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I am the last Senator who would violate the unanimous-consent agreement, as the Senator from Alabama knows. The unanimous-consent agreement reads:

> It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Saturday, February 8, 1919, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 13308, an act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 3.30 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

There is not anything in that unanimous-consent agreement which prevents a Senator at any time before 3.30 from offering any amendment and speaking as long as he desires upon that amendment until 3.30.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest that there is no necessity for all this explanation on the part of the Senator from Utah. I said I had no objection in the world to offering the amendment, but I do not think it is complying with the spirit of the agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to violate the spirit of any unanimous-consent agreement; and the reason why I read the agreement was because I wanted the RECORD to show that I was not violating it.

If section 6 is now perfected——

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well, then I will yield the floor to the Senator to offer his amendment to section 6.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to offer an amendment to section 6; I do not ask the Senator to yield the floor, but I desired at the proper time to offer it. In line 8, I move to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$125,000," and in lines 10 and 11 to strike out "and the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921."

Mr. President, that does not diminish the amount of the appropriation. I am supporting this provision, and I think a great many of the Senate are supporting it on the theory that the conditions of the country and the conditions likely to confront us justify us in appropriating money not only for the building of good roads, but largely to furnish a sort of reservoir for the employment of idle labor that we will very likely have in this country in the very near future.

If we will need money for that purpose we will need it soon. We are going to need it before 1921, and I believe we are going to need it, and I want to make ample provision for it. I would rather authorize the appropriation of too much money to take care of that situation than to appropriate too small an amount.

So I have offered this amendment to make available this year for good-road purposes $125,000, to be expended and used under the agency that has been built up and now exists, and that no doubt can use that much money in a very advantageous way. I think there is far more justification for appropriating the money in this way than to have $75,000,000 provided now for 1921. That is the reason why I offer the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it seems to me there is force in the position taken by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], but I think the amount is entirely too much. The Senator from Alabama stated on yesterday that with the $50,000,000 of appropriation there would be some $170,000,000 available, but the general principle enunciated by the Senator from Washington I am in accord with, and would be willing to vote a sum not to the extent the Senator indicates, but this sum of $50,000,000 in the bill, if it could be used within the next three months in some way to help with the labor situation, much as I am opposed to this general method of appropriation that there is in the bill.

In line with what the Senator from Washington has said as to the need of our doing something, let me say that at the date of the armistice there was a shortage of labor throughout the United States. The Department of Labor gather in from the different centers of the country statistics showing the labor situation, and report them every week. Four weeks after the armistice was signed there were 25 cities in their list, which I think is about 132, showing a surplus of labor—more men seeking work than there was work. Six weeks later unemployment was reported in 42 cities. The report this week, and this is all outside of the strike question, shows 69 cities reporting a greater or lesser degree of unemployment, and out of 120 important cities reporting the actual number of unemployed by these reports is approximately 292,000 men.

These reports are partial, they do not cover the entire labor situation in the country, and they only are gathered from parts of the employing firms. On the basis of these figures and these reports it is safe to estimate that there are over a million unemployed men in this country now, and this week the statistics show that as to the cities eight more show unemployment than the last week.

As I said a few days ago, it was not so much the number who are out of employment in the country that is alarming as it is the rapid increase in the number. That leads me to say that we ought to devise some method of taking care of this unemployment question. I introduced a bill here that public works should not be confined to roads but should take in all kinds of public works to try and start industry again in the country. There as a psychology to the situation of starting work. Private capital is holding back; somebody has got to start it. If the Government does, it is probable that private industry will follow along, and that is just as important in my mind as is the actual employment of the men by governmental work.

There should be some way in this bill of separating the sums, as the Senator from Washington has attempted to do, and not go to the large amount which he has proposed, because that is an amount which could not be expended by the 30th day of June, 1919, which is the limit of the first appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator, I think, is mistaken. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] stated yesterday that the money for the year 1919 could be used for the whole season of 1919; that the appropriation for 1919 under the road act does not terminate June 30, 1919, but it is for the whole season.

Mr. SMOOT. Or the whole season of 1920.

Mr. KENYON. That amendment, I understood, was defeated.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the amendment that was defeated was to spend it two years after the present act, which says:

So much of the appropriation appropriated for the fiscal year which remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year.

Mr. KENYON. So it would, then, carry the appropriation until June 30, 1920, under that construction?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. A year and a half.

Mr. KENYON. I wish the Senator would make that sum a little more reasonable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I understand the chairman of the committee stated the other day that they had reported upon and really approved some three hundred and odd projects under the road act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Three hundred and ninety-one.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What expenditure would that entail?

Mr. BANKHEAD. About $26,000,000 of Federal appropriation. Of course, that will be met by the States appropriating a like amount.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think there is a lot of force in the suggestion the Senator from Iowa makes. What would the chairman say as to the possibility of a wise expenditure of $125,000,000 for roads between now and the 30th of June, 1920?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My judgment and the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Roads Department is that not more than $60,000,000 additional to the amount appropriated in the old law can be expended during the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. KENYON. That would take it up to June 30, 1920; or would it be June 30, 1919?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that under the law as it now is, or under the amendment which we have offered as it now stands, the amount available for the balance of the fiscal year from now until the 30th of June would be $190,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. That will be available.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That will be available between now and the 30th of June of this year.

Mr. KENYON. If you add this $75,000,000 to it you have up to $265,000,000, and that can not be used economically, at least.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is more than they could possibly spend.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But would not that be available until June 30, 1920, giving them an additional year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The first of the coming July there will be available $190,000,000, which can be immediately used, making a total of $360,000,000 available for the remainder of this fiscal year and the year 1920. He does not believe that the States can match more than that, if they can do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does not look to me like we ought to appropriate anything for this year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. These are the figures. You want to increase and I do not.

Mr. KENYON. One hundred and seventy million dollars are now available. That ought to be enough.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If this $50,000,000 is added.

Mr. KENYON. With $50,000,000 added to $120,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; $70,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. And now the Senator from Washington proposes to add $75,000,000 additional, making $195,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It would make $190,000,000 for 1920.

Mr. KENYON. To be used entirely on roads. Would it not be wiser, from the standpoint of unemployment, not to put so much to roads and put some part of these funds to other great public works that will give employment to labor, such as public buildings or reclamation projects, or even canals where they are necessary? With the statement made by the Senator from Alabama, I would not be willing to vote to increase this $50,000,000, but I would be willing to vote for the $50,000,000 to be immediately available, and I would vote for it wholly on the theory of a labor proposition to give employment to labor in the times that are ahead of us.

I will not vote for the other two provisions of $75,000,000 each, as I have heretofore said; but if they could be differentiated from this $50,000,000 in some way—because I believe, as has been expressed here, with the condition of our finances in this country that some time we have got to begin and stop some of these appropriations. I do not know that we ever shall. We have the cheerful information here, when the chairman was asked where the money was coming from, "That is not our business; that is the business of the Finance Committee." The business of Senators is to attend dinners at night and vote appropriations in the daytime, I suppose. Let the people pay. We are going to have $12,000,000,000 of expenses next year. What do we care? Let the people pay. That is the theory of Congress.

The last election, in my judgment, went against the Democratic Party not so much because of the President's letter, to which some Republicans like to ascribe it, as because of the feeling in the country about the wasteful and indefensible extravagance of Congress. The people are going to understand pretty soon the motto of each political party—"Let the people pay."

The Democrats went down largely because of that. If the Republicans come into power and keep on with these same kind of appropriations, practically leaving nothing for the States to do, and having the Federal Government as a great Santa Claus to deal these things out, the Republican Party will be driven out of power also, and I hope it will, if it goes on with that kind of a program. Pretty soon we will find that there will be a taxpayers' party in this country, as well as two tax-eaters' parties.

What a scene here in this Chamber a few days ago when Senators got up and talked about "our share—our State getting its share." Senators said to me, "Why, under this bill your State gets more than it puts in." That seemed to be an argument that nobody could refute. I have stood at this desk and fought appropriations some people in my State wanted, and I am going to continue to do so, because I have the conception—I may be wrong—that I am a Senator of the United States, and not simply trying to get my hands into the Public Treasury and get something for my own State. At some time we are all going to get around, I hope, to that platform. That does not mean, of course, to fight every appropriation that comes along. We have got to have money for great works in this country; but the idea seems to be to get "our share." I have seen Senators stand here and heard them solemnly talk about the "share of their State." What is this Public Treasury—merely a grab bag, to get "our part" and "our share"?

Both political parties declared practically for a budget system in 1916. How far have we gotten with it? How far will we get with it? We have from 27 to 29 committees in the Senate and in the other House, all appropriating money, with no regard one for the other, and no coordination one with the other. There is no business on earth that could last 60 days carried on in that kind of fashion. Economists of this country and business men are for it; the Chamber of Commerce of the United States have voted practically unanimously on the question of a budget, pleading with Congress for some kind of a budget. But, no; we will not give up the powers of different committees to appropriate money. Let the taxpayer go; let the people pay? What do we care? As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] said the other day, "Let the taxpayer kick; he needs the exercise." The principle now is "less taxes and more appropriations." It can not be done. If these appropriations are to go on, then heavy taxes must be levied. But the taxpayer is going to wake up pretty soon and take his exercise at the ballot box, for this country is piled up now with about all the taxation it can stand.

In the House of Representatives I notice that there is a proposition backed by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and by one of the Republican leaders for a budget commission. I am delighted to see that. There is on the calendar a bill for that purpose in the Senate, which was introduced by myself. I asked that the Appropriations Committee be discharged from its consideration, and I finally got the bill on the calendar, but there has been no chance to get it up. I propose after the 4th of March, if we can not tack it onto some of these appropriation bills, to make it my business to see if we can not get such a plan and get some information before Congress from economists and students of these questions as to a budget plan that we can adopt and have some correlation between our income and our expenditures.

Much as I believe in good roads, much as I have urged them in my State, I am not willing to go into such a plan as this, which is increasing now by leaps and bounds over the act which we passed in 1916, which was a fair act, and which went to our limit in times of peace to stimulate road construction; but we are blossoming out now with $200,000,000 more, and in another year or so we shall find another $200,000,000, and eventually this barrel will get to be the greatest pork barrel that we ever have had in the American Congress.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator from Iowa has been studying the budget system for a good while, and I desire to ask him, is it possible to adopt a budget system unless we have but one appropriations committee?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes.

Mr. WATSON. Is it workable, even with the present system of committees on the other House and in the Senate?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but I will say to the Senator that I do not believe it is as workable with so many committees as we now have as it would be if the committees were cut down. But those are all matters of information, I will say to the Senator, that will come out if a commission be appointed to report to Congress within a reasonable time.

Why should there not be such a commission? I have talked to Senators here who said, "Why, we do not propose to have some one from the outside tell us about our duties." Then, if you ask them what a budget system is, they say, "We do not know."

That is all I have to say, but I thought I had better take my 10 minutes now instead of later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to suggest to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that the amendment which he offered is divisible. The last section of his amendment covers an amendment which was adopted before the present occupant of the chair took the chair. The Chair will therefore be compelled to rule that the vote must first be taken upon the first division of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Chair is wrong. The last part of my amendment was not adopted on yesterday. I tried to strike that out, but failed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But let the Chair suggest that there has been a vote of the Senate to retain the clause which the Senator now seeks to strike out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but there has not been a vote of the Senate on the proposition to increase the first appropriation to $125,000,000 and to cut the other out. That is all one proposition; that is one amendment, so far as I am concerned; but I will leave that to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment should be divided under the circumstances, there having been an affirmative vote refusing to strike out the second section.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; but to my mind the amendment is not divisible, because it is one proposition; the one hangs on the other; but I appreciate the fact that probably the Senate might insist on a division. I want, however, to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two.

Leaving out the provisions of this bill entirely, I want to ask the chairman of the committee how much money is available, up to the 1st of July, 1919, for road-building purposes, under the act of 1916?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Seventy-five million dollars, including that which has already been expended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And without this provision here how much would be available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Twenty million dollars.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would make $95,000,000 altogether, that either has been expended or is available for those years?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; there could not be but $75,000,000 available for the five years. Twenty million dollars of that appropriation has not been expended for 1920.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to get this clear. I do not want any account taken of this division of the bill here at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under the act of 1916, how much is available up to June 30, 1919?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unexpended?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Unexpended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that I answer correctly when I say that, under the original law to which the Senator refers, for the fiscal year of 1920 there can not be more than $20,000,000 available, because that was all that was appropriated for that year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are $26,000,000 now available up to June 30, 1919, under the 1916 act? Is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That depends upon how much is unexpended for the year 1919.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We are on the year 1919 now; and how much has the department available to spend up to June 30, 1919—this year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Fifteen million dollars for 1919—this year—and for 1920, the next year, $20,000,000. It is $15,000,000 for the year 1919.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Fifteen million dollars for the year 1919 and $20,000,000 additional for 1920 would make only $35,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is not quite so large as the $190,000,000 or the $380,000,000 we were talking about a while ago.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That includes the proposed increase in the appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know; but we have $15,000,000 now for this year, and if we appropriate the $125,000,000 I propose, that would only give $140,000,000. So that the appropriation is not so formidable as the figures given a while ago would lead us to believe. I had about reached the conclusion to withdraw my amendment——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will examine page 3 of the report he will find all of these figures worked out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not had time to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not carry all the figures in my head.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the chairman of the committee has looked into the matter very carefully.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have; but I am obliged to refer to the figures in order to be strictly accurate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought the Senator could give me the information without any trouble or delay.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I said that there was $15,000,000 available for 1918 and $20,000,000——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] suggests to me that there was $70,000,000 carried over from the preceding year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That includes both the State and Federal appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not care anything about the State appropriations. What I want to know is the amount available from the National Treasury to aid in the improvement of these roads.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, here is a statement of it: For the fiscal year 1919, the present fiscal year, there will be available $35,000,000 from the Federal Treasury, which must be met by an equal amount from the State treasuries, making $70,000,000. The additional appropriation from the Federal Treasury of $50,000,000, to meet which an additional amount of $50,000,000 from the State treasuries must be appropriated, will make available for road improvement under this law from both Federal and State sources $170,000,000 for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but I want to leave out what the States are providing.

Mr. SWANSON. The States would pay $85,000,000, or one-half of the total amount, a sum equal to the amount paid by the Federal Government this year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator says that we have available for this year on the part of the United States $35,000,000.

Mr. SWANSON. In round numbers; yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Outside of what we propose here; so that if we add $50,000,000, it will make $85,000,000.

Mr. SWANSON. It will make $85,000,000 available from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And if we add $125,000,000 more, the total amount from the Federal Treasury will be $160,000,000?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes. If the Senator wants to know the amount for 1920, the original Federal act gave $20,000,000 for that year; an equal amount from the States to meet that would be $20,000,000 more; the additional Federal appropriation for 1920 of $75,000,000 and an equal amount from the States to meet that of $75,000,000 would make a total of $190,000,000 to be expended during 1920 under the law for Federal aid. If the bill goes through carrying the provisions for 1921, the amount available would be as follows: From the original Federal appropriation, $25,000,000; an equal amount from the States, $25,000,000; the proposed additional Federal appropriation contained in the amendment to the pending bill, $75,000,000, and an equal amount from the States of $75,000,000, making in all $200,000,000 available for this purpose, one-half to come out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we have not very much money available for the year 1919 when we come to consider the probable demands that are likely to be imposed upon us. Thirty-five million dollars will not go very far in the employment of the million men whom the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] says are out of employment now, which number is increasing very largely every week. I agree with him that we do not want to put into road building all of the money that is intended for the employment of labor; not at all; but we can put a larger amount than is now available in road building. We ought also to put several million dollars in irrigation works, as the Senator from Iowa suggests. As I stated yesterday, I have presented an amendment appropriating $50,000,000 for irrigation projects actually approved and under way, on which work can progress immediately, because we must not overlook the fact that if we want to do good, so far as the unemployed are concerned, we must get ready to make money available for it right away, and not in 1920 or in 1921.

The Senator from Iowa suggests that we ought to take advantage of the psychology of the times. I suggested that yesterday, and that is right. The National Government ought to go ahead. If it can not go ahead, or if it will not go ahead, how can we expect private enterprise to go ahead?

In line with that, Mr. President, I ask to insert in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an address delivered by N. B. Coffman, president of the Lewis County Reconstruction Congress, at Washington State Reconstruction Congress, at Tacoma, January 9, 1919, the point of which, the motto of which, is "go ahead." It expresses what I believe to be the real thought and desire of the country and the real necessity for the kind of action that the situation to-day requires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the address referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The address referred to is as follows:

"GO AHEAD."

[Address of N. B. Coffman, president Lewis County Reconstruction Congress, at Washington State Reconstruction Congress, Tacoma, Jan. 9, 1919.]

Let the people of the State of Washington grapple the subject of reconstruction with unfaltering faith and enthusiastic courage. Go right ahead now and do the big things in private enterprise and public betterment that they believe should or must be done soon. Then there will be no unemployment, no slacking up in business, no uneasiness about the future.

The normal condition of business as following the great war is, will be, and should be, if not checked by doubt, hesitation, and pessimism, one of enlargement and general prosperity arising out of multiplied resourcefulness and opportunity for trade expansion.

The keynote should be, "Go ahead."

Go ahead with the big plans for National, State, and county highway construction. Go ahead with the National and State land-settlement program.

Go ahead with big public improvements.

Go ahead with transportation equipment and facilities for enlarged handling of traffic.

Go ahead with employment of private capital for every manner of enlargement and betterment of manufacturing, trade, commerce, and housing. From the repairing of the pig sty to the construction of a labyrinth system of nation-wide, nation-built, paved post highways, go ahead.

Every great war has been followed by a period of prosperity, wages and commodities climbing to new high levels after the war. The shilling was the day's wage before the Revolutionary War. After it the day's wage stood around 4 shillings. The 50-cent wage before the Civil War climbed to $1.50 level after the war. The $2 wage before the great war has mounted to $4, with shorter hours. The wage scale may fluctuate. It will not permanently recede to any great degree. Prices of commodities have always followed the same trend. Antewar prices have gone for good. It is not cause for regret or apprehension, rather for congratulation and assurance. There will be no sudden or great drop unless forced by a holding back from normal industrial activity. If we do hold back and force a drop, it will come with a jar and a shock that will cost immeasurably more than the saving in wages and prices of commodities.

An operator in the Central West of nation-wide standing and recognized foresight analyzes the future in this way:

"In my opinion the United States is in for several years of very prosperous conditions. Of course, I may be wrong, but my conclusions are predicated upon the facts and conditions outlined below, to wit:

"1. For four and a half years Europe has been engaged wholly in the work of destruction, producing only such things as would aid in destruction."

After destruction must come construction. Go ahead, America, with European construction and rehabilitation.

"2. The supply of raw material, textiles, and other products which Europe does not itself produce has been depleted because of requirements incident to the war and consumption or replenishment."

People of western and central Europe must be housed, clothed, and fed. Go ahead, America; supply Europe with lumber, clothing, and food.

"3. The steel industry of the United States, as well as other of the larger industries, since the beginning of the war has been engaged practically 100 per cent in war work."

Traffic calls for trucks; the people, automobiles; farmers, tractors; railroads and builders, steel. Go ahead, steel plants; supply big business with its needs.

"4. For 18 months the industrial energy of the United States has been engaged in the single purpose of winning the war, during which time production has not been maintained at its normal ratio, resulting in a depleted supply of materials of every character."

Turn to, now. Push ahead, industry. Get back to normal. Replenish the supply. Go ahead.

"5. Farm products have been at a high price in the United States since 1914, and the farmers are more prosperous than they ever were before."

Busy manufactories and construction activities mean much employment and large consumption and maintaining of good prices for foodstuffs. Prosperous farmers buy freely, improve, and build. Go ahead. When the farmer prospers all business is good.

"6. Prices of farm products will remain at a high level at least for the next 12 months, for the reason (a) the world is short of fats and (b) while there is no grain shortage the price of wheat has been guaranteed by the United States Government for next year. This insures prosperity for farmers, as they will have a large acreage of wheat and a small corn acreage, resulting in the high prices for corn."

Go ahead, farmers. Plant confidently, cultivate carefully. Produce more abundantly. The world awaits eager and hungry for your products. Go ahead in full assurance of profitable prices.

"7. The world is short some 20,000,000 tons of shipping, and during such shortage the natural tendency will be for Europe to purchase her supplies from the nearest sources of production. For instance, a ship can make three round trips between New York and Liverpool in the time which it would be required for one trip to Sydney, Australia. Consequently, products of the United States will be favored over those of Australia and other distant countries of the world."

Commerce and traffic, wake up. The United States of America is the world's near-by storehouse. Build docks, wharves, terminals, ships, and traffic equipment. Get ready quickly. New and great markets map their boundaries across seas. Go ahead.

"8. Reconstruction of the areas of devastation in Europe must necessarily require immense quantities of raw materials and other products."

Who is to supply them? We who have the materials in greatest abundance. It is our opportunity. Let's go ahead.

"9. The United States is practically the only industrial country in the world whose industries have not been completely disrupted and which is in a position to furnish the requirements of the other peoples of the world."

We are the world's most resourceful people. Shall we not plan and undertake and accomplish up to our mighty man capacity? Or shall we sit by, occupied in matters of small moment, and fritter away our ability and our opportunities to do big things in a big way? No. Master minds must find a master's work. We must go ahead.

"10. The United States is the only country whose financial condition will enable it to assist the nations of Europe in replenishing their depleted supplies."

The United States comes out of this war the world banker. A good banker is always constructive. He builds up and makes resourceful his clientele and thus increases his business. We as a Nation can prosper only in so far as we strengthen and stabilize the brother nations with whom we have trade and traffic. It is up to us to replenish the depleted coffers of European nations. We must go ahead.

"11. During the past four and a half years there has been practically no building in the United States other than for industrial requirements and industrial housing purposes. In 105 cities of the United States delayed building amounts to more than $3,030,000,000."

If you are planning to build soon, build now. In an on-moving world to pause is to fall behind. The community that stops building stops growing. Go ahead; build.

"12. The rural districts of this country have experienced great prosperity, but have been unable to expend their money for betterments and improvements on account of Government prohibitions. For the same reasons the same conditions prevail in other sections of the United States, building operations not having been able to keep pace with normal requirements."

Manufacturers and dealers in building materials, stock up. Get ready for the spring demand. It is coming. It must come. Go ahead with turning out products. Place your orders now.

"13. Business can not of itself pick up until more shipping is available. As already stated, the world's shipping is some 20,000,000 tons short, but the United States will commission a million tons during November and December and peace will release four or five million tons of German shipping. In addition, the shipping heretofore required to transport men and munitions abroad will soon be available for carrying other supplies. So, with the opening of spring, the return of our troops should add a stimulus to business, and we should experience a demand for our products such as we have never before. With the probable exception of steel, the production of the basic industries of the United States has not increased, but has been depleted. There have been no new investments or developments and old developments have been operated to their maximum capacity. By reason of such operations and enforced production a state of depletion has been brought about which has not been replaced. Consequently it is doubtful if the productive capacity of the country will be able to meet future demands."

Capital, come out of your temerity. Cut loose. Invest in productive and carrying enterprises. Business is bound to be good and profits are assured. Don't hesitate. All-round courage compels good times by forcing things to move. Venture boldly into business. This is a country whose resources in men and materials have only been scratched over. Go ahead. Invest.

"14. Present stocks of practically all commodities are low, and this is especially true of lumber, which is only 46 per cent of normal at the mills and 75 per cent of normal with the retailers."

With business soon humming as it will be, normal stocks will be short of the demand. Catch up on that 54 per cent and 25 per cent shortage and then some. Go ahead.

"15. With the plentiful supply of money now existing, the high price of food products, and the probable demand for the total capacity production of American industries, is it at all logical to conclude that business is going to be poor?"

No; it is not logical or at all probable. Money is abundant for commercial and industrial upbuilding. Use it. Keep away from speculation. Productive use will not breed disaster. Keep on the job and there need be no setback. Everybody turn to and work. No loafers, no hungry. No one without employment. The State and the Nation can furnish plenty of work to take up the slack. Everybody everywhere get busy. Keep busy. Go to it. Go ahead.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if increasing this appropriation from $50,000,000 to $125,000,000 will not be futile in view of the enormous amount of work it is necessary to do in order to prepare for this work? Is it possible to arrange a plan and have a proper determination made by June 30, 1919, for the expenditure of $125,000,000 on road work?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator that under the law—this is the construction of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], but I have no doubt that he is correct—if this money is not spent prior to the first of July, 1919, it will be available throughout the whole year 1920. Therefore, if they have not the plans ready, of course they have got to get them ready. They have been working under this law since 1916, and if they have not the plans perfected to provide for the expenditure of more than twenty or thirty million dollars, it probably will be half a century before they can provide for the expenditure of $125,000,000; but I think they will "get a move on" if they have the money, and will get their plans ready, so that the money may be expended.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But does not the Senator recognize that under a spur of that kind they are apt to make many mistakes, and consequently waste a large part of the money upon roads that are not needed or upon roads upon which there is light travel or upon roads which would perhaps require a different construction from that proposed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, under the provisions of section 5, as it has been adopted, if it becomes a law, I do not think they will have very much trouble in ascertaining places at which to spend the money. I do not like that section myself; but, Mr. President, in view of the statement and the showing made here and the apparent opinion of the chairman of the committee that even if we appropriate this amount of money they could not expend it, I am going to withdraw my amendment. I think the statements that have been made demonstrate conclusively that the amount for 1920 and 1921 should not be appropriated in this bill; but, even if they are not eliminated, I think I shall vote for the bill, in order to make available the money for 1919, in the hope that the next Congress will eliminate the appropriations for 1920 and 1921 until the time comes when we know what we want, what we need, and what we can properly take care of. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Washington is withdrawn.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer an amendment as a substitute for section 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kendrick	Myers	Swanson
Bankhead	Kenyon	New	Thomas
Chamberlain	King	Overman	Thompson
Colt	Kirby	Page	Townsend
Cummins	Knox	Pittman	Trammell
Fletcher	La Follette	Pollock	Underwood
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Ransdell	Warren
Gore	McCumber	Shafroth	Watson
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard	Weeks
Henderson	McLean	Smith, S. C.	Wolcott
Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Smoot
Jones, Wash.	Martin, Va.	Spencer
Kellogg	Moses	Sterling

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] are absent on official business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish Senators would give attention to the reading of my proposed substitute for section 6 of this bill. I assure Senators that if they have any regard for the Treasury of the United States, and desire to establish in this country a complete nationalized system for road building, they will support this proposition.

I ask now that the substitute may be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of section 6, on page 37, it is proposed to insert the following:

That in order to establish, construct, improve, or maintain public roads that are now or may hereafter be needed for use as post roads, military roads, or for interstate commerce, there be, and hereby is, created a fund to be known as the United States highway fund. Said fund shall be raised in the manner herein provided, but the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to receive and place to the credit of said fund any money that may be contributed from other sources and to expend the same upon the order of the United States Highway Commission or in accordance with the conditions of the contribution.

That for the purpose of providing money for the United States highway fund the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue and sell, at par with accrued interest, coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $20 or multiples of that sum, said bonds to be payable in coin 50 years from the date of issue and to bear interest, payable in coin semiannually, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, the total amount of said bonds not to exceed $1,000,000,000, and the issue and sale of same not to exceed such amounts as may be necessary from time to time to enable the Treasurer of the United States to make payments from the United States highway fund to the several States in accordance with the provisions of this act. Bonds issued under authority of this act, or the income therefrom, shall not be subject to taxation of any kind for any purpose. Bonds authorized by this section shall be first offered at par as a popular loan under such regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as will give opportunity to the citizens of the United States to participate in the subscriptions to such loan, and in allotting said bonds the several subscriptions of individuals shall be first accepted and the subscriptions for the lowest amounts shall be first allotted. Any portion of any issue of said bonds not subscribed for as above provided may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one twenty-fifth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

That before any State shall be entitled to take advantage of the provisions of this act it shall establish by law a State highway commission having general supervision of road construction and improvement in that State, which said commission shall have general supervision of the expenditure of money received from the United States highway fund, subject only to the provisions of this act and of State laws not inconsistent herewith.

That the United States highway fund shall be apportioned and credited to the several States in the following manner: The United States highway commission, hereinafter created, shall ascertain in the most practicable manner from the best information available the total land area, the population according to the last Federal census, the total assessed valuation of all taxable property, and the total mileage of public highways in each of the several States, and shall compute the percentage of the total of each of these four items possessed by each State. They shall then compute the average of the four percentages for each State, and this average shall be the per cent of the $1,000,000,000 United States highway fund that shall be apportioned and credited to each State. Said commission shall notify the Treasurer of the United States of the result of their ascertainment and computation, which shall be made as of a date to be fixed by the commission. Such fund so apportioned shall be paid to the States only in accordance with the provisions of this act.

That whenever any State, through its duly authorized agents, shall apply for any part of its share of the United States highway fund, but not exceeding 20 per cent thereof in any year, and shall deposit with the Treasurer of the United States its bonds for such amount payable in 50 years and bearing interest, payable semiannually, at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue and sell, at par and accrued interest, in the manner prescribed in section 2, United States highway bonds to the amount that may be necessary to pay to said State the amount of money applied for, and upon the sale of said bonds shall pay over the proceeds to the custodian of the public funds of the State: Provided, That the bonds of any State shall not be accepted if the total amount of bonds of such State, including the bonds issued to take advantage of the provisions of this act, shall exceed 10 per cent of the amount of the assessed valuation of all taxable property in such State: Provided further, That any State desiring to do so may deposit with the Treasurer of the United States its 4 per cent bonds maturing in not less than 20 years, or may redeem its 50-year bonds at any time after 20 years from date of issue, but upon redemption of such bonds, whatever the period for which issued, such State shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in addition to the balance due on the principal after deducting the accumulated sinking fund, a premium of 2 per cent on such balance due on bonds redeemed, together with accrued interest. When the Treasurer of the United States shall receive any payment of interest on State bonds deposited in the manner above provided he shall devote three-fourths thereof to the payment of the interest due on the corresponding United States highway bonds, and one-fourth, herein designated as a sinking fund, he shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States to be used from time to time for the redemption of United States highway bonds as provided herein. The Treasurer of the United States shall keep an account with each State that shall deposit bonds and receive funds under the provisions of this act, and shall credit said State with interest compounded annually at the rate of 3 per cent per annum on the sinking funds paid in. Money received upon the principal of State bonds shall also be credited to the sinking fund, but no interest credit shall be allowed the State thereon. At the time of the maturity of the bonds deposited by any State, if all payments have been made when due, the Treasurer of the United States shall cancel said bonds and return them to the State issuing the same. Whenever and each time the sinking fund accumulation shall amount to $1,000,000, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall, and he is hereby directed to, go into the open market and purchase, at par if possible, $1,000,000 par value of the United States highway bonds. If unable to purchase all or any at par, then he is authorized and directed to pay such premium as necessary, determined by competition after public notice of not less than 30 days, but not exceeding a premium of 2 per cent and accrued interest. If he be unable thus to secure the full amount of bonds necessary to comply with this provision, then he is authorized and directed to call at par, plus premium of 2 per cent and accrued interest, such bonds, determined by drawing of bond numbers from among the largest denominations outstanding, as will make up the $1,000,000 purchase. These bonds thus purchased out of the sinking fund accumulation shall be retained in the United States Treasury, being stamped by the United States Treasurer "Nonnegotiable," but "kept alive," in order that the United States Government may receive for the sinking fund the benefit of the interest payments on the bonds thus purchased.

That on the 1st day of February of each year the Treasurer of the United States shall pay to the custodian of the public funds of each State, from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount of money equal to 2 per cent of the amount of State bonds said State has deposited with the Treasurer of the United States under the provisions of this act. The money so paid shall be expended by said State only in the maintenance of public highways. The Treasurer of the United States shall withhold the payment of money to any State under the provisions of this section in the event that such State default in payment of any interest or principal due, or in the event that the United States Highway Commission herein created shall certify to said United States Treasurer that money theretofore paid to said State for maintenance purposes has not been expended with reasonable effectiveness for the maintenance of public highways or that the State has failed to expend an equal amount of its own funds during the preceding 12 months for the same purpose.

That there is hereby created a United States Highway Commission, to be composed of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the chairman of the House Committee on Roads, and the Director of the Office of Public Roads. Such commission shall have only an advisory voice in the expenditure of the United States highway fund in the several States. It shall have its head office in the District of Columbia, but may create highway divisions, never exceeding in number one for each State, and may maintain a division office in charge of a United States highway engineer in each division. Said commission shall have power to employ such clerical and expert assistance as may be provided for by appropriations made by Congress from time to time, and may require the assistance and cooperation of the officers and employees of any department in its work.

That for the further aid and encouragement of highway improvement in the several States, the United States Highway Commission shall maintain in the District of Columbia a school for special instruction in practical highway and bridge engineering, the entrance requirements of which school shall include completion of preparatory courses in civil engineering and such other studies as the commission shall specify qualifying the student to enter upon the special study of the practical problems of highway and bridge engineering. The rules, regulations, and curriculum of said school shall provide for instruction for two years for one student from each congressional district, selected by competitive examination, but if there be no qualified applicant for admission from any congressional district such vacancy may be filled by the admission of a student from some other congressional district in the same State. Upon the admission of a student to the school of highway engineering such student shall be paid, as traveling expenses, 4 cents for each mile of distance necessarily traveled in going from his home to Washington, D. C., and at the end of each calendar month thereafter during the continuance of such student in said school he shall be paid $50 to cover living and incidental expenses. The United States Highway Commission shall make rules and regulations for the management of said school and shall have entire control of same, subject only to the Constitution and laws of the United States. In connection with said school said commission shall maintain a testing laboratory in which said commission shall cause tests to be made of road or bridge building material free of charge at the request of the duly authorized highways officials of any State.

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following amounts, or so much thereof as may be necessary:

For the payment of salaries of clerical and expert assistance for the United States Highway Commission, $10,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in May, 1916, when the first appropriation was made, similar to the one that is now proposed, for road building in the United States, I offered this substitute; but it was not agreed to by the Senate, and in offering it at that time I had no hope of its being accepted. I was told then that the appropriation proposed of $75,000,000 was an emergency matter; that it ought to be appropriated for the building of roads at once, although it extended over the period of five years, dividing, I may say, the $75,000,000 into five payments, to be expended under the act of April 16, 1916. I said at that time:

Mr. President, we are about to enter upon a policy of road building in the United States in which the Government of the United States is asked to participate. It is my belief that whenever that policy is entered upon by the Government the very best plan that can be devised by mortal man ought to be put in force at the beginning; and it is for that reason that I have submitted the amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment.

I also stated:

I do not want to take any credit whatever for the preparation or the working out of this great plan of road building. It is not due me; but in passing I want to say that above all and foremost in the drafting of this legislation stands the ex-Senator from Oregon, Jonathan Bourne, jr.

* * * * * * *

The act creating the Joint Committee on Federal Aid in the Construction of Post Roads became effective August 24, 1912, and a joint committee of five Members of the House and five Members of the Senate was appointed, consisting of the following: From the Senate, Jonathan Bourne, jr., chairman, Senators PENROSE, GRONNA, SWANSON, and OVERMAN. Appointed by the Speaker of the House were the following: Congressman SHACKLEFORD as vice chairman of the joint committee, with Congressmen LEE, McGILLICUDDY, MADDEN, and AUSTIN.

Shortly after organization the work began, and for 21 months they continued their labors before submitting their report to Congress. The data that were collected were presented in 17 chapters. I do not care how long the question of good roads may be before the people for consideration, the information collected, tabulated, and printed by this committee can always be referred to as the very best that it was possible to obtain in the world up to that time.

Now, Mr. President, I am fully aware that the building of good roads in the United States is one of the great and popular questions of the day. I am fully aware that the roads in the United States, taken as a whole, are not what they should be, and that in the near future there will be perhaps billions of dollars spent for the building and maintenance of good roads in this country. I might add that it is absolutely necessary, not only for the convenience of the traveling public, but for the convenience of the farmer to transmit his products to market, and, as a whole, I agree that the building of good roads is an investment on the part of the State and, where great highways are built, on the part of the Government. This substitute bill simply means, in substance, that the States will build the roads within the States, under State control, under State direction, and the work is to be paid for by the States through the Government of the United States lending its credit to the different States of the Union.

The substitute bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a billion dollars' worth of Government bonds, drawing 3 per cent per annum; and it provides that the States, after the sum due them under the provisions of the bill is ascertained, can have each year one-fifth of the amount. The States issue their own bonds. They can make application for the amount of the bonds deposited with the Treasury, provided the amount is within the amount allotted to them, the bonds to bear 4 per cent interest. The 1 per cent difference in rate of interest for the term of 50 years, with interest compounded as provided in the substitute, at the end of that time will pay the bonds in full and whatever expenditures provided for in the substitute. The debt amortizes itself in that time. The States simply pay interest at 4 per cent on the money they receive from the Government of the United States to build their own roads through the credit of the Government of the United States, and the difference between the interest rate for which the Government can sell its obligations and that which a State pays the Government—namely, 1 per cent—in 50 years pays off the obligation as originally made by the States.

No one can doubt this. It is as simple a business proposition as was ever presented to Congress. If there were any doubt about it, Mr. President, I would not be asking the Congress of the United States to authorize the issuing of these bonds; but I know that if the Secretary of the Treasury follows the directions of the bill—and he can not do otherwise—and places three-fourths of 1 per cent of the difference in the rate of interest in the Treasury of the United States, and, whenever there is a million dollars placed there from interest upon the bond, obligations of the Government must be purchased with that three-fourths of 1 per cent; the interest is compounded, and at the end of 50 years the Government will have enough money in the Treasury of the United States to pay the billion dollars of bonds.

Some may say that while we are placing bonds by the billions upon the market to-day, perhaps it would be impossible to place these 3 per cent bonds. These bonds are nontaxable bonds, and I have little doubt but that they can sell $200,000,000 of them each year for five years, and that is all that could be sold under the bill. I do not believe, of course, that all the States will take every dollar allotted to them, and therefore not as much as $200,000,000 of the bonds of the Government would have to be sold yearly. The amount would be whatever the States decided they wanted to spend upon the roads within the States, but it could amount to as much as $200,000,000.

No one, then, could say that the Government of the United States was taking from the taxes of the people money to build roads in the States upon some kind of a plan, and, as has been charged here, an unfair and discriminatory plan at that. Under existing law, I will say, there is more or less justification in saying that the distribution of the money is not fair and nondiscriminatory between States; but under the plan of my substitute I can not believe that anyone can think for one moment that it is unfair, for the allotment is based upon the total land area of the States and——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The plan which the Senator is proposing is the one which was proposed here two or three years ago, in substance what is known as the Bourne amendment, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I have stated. I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber at the time or not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was not present. I am perfectly familiar with that system, and I think it is a very admirable one, and I voted for it before.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I could only get Senators to take the time to study this plan, as some of the Senators have done, I do not believe there is a Senator who would give it attention and studied it carefully but that would admit that it is the best system that has ever been offered for the building of roads in our country.

Now, as to the allotment, it is based upon four qualifications—not three, as the present law provides, but four: First, the total land area of the State. Second, the population according to the last Federal census. Third, the total assessed valuation of all taxable property within the State. Fourth, the total mileage of public highways in each of the several States.

Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] offered an amendment to the pending bill adding a fourth requirement, and, instead of the total assessed value of all taxable property, he provided that it should be the amount of internal-revenue taxes paid by the State. I am not going to discuss that question now, because I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] the other day plainly showed how very unfair that would be to many of the Middle West States and the Western States, particularly, for he pointed out that the great corporations of this country, like the United States Steel Corporation and the Standard Oil Co., have their headquarters in the city of New York and are taxed by that State, whereas the property that produces the money is lying in other States of the Union. My provision here says that it shall be based upon the total assessed valuation of all taxable property.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator's amendment embrace personal property in the phrase "taxable property"?

Mr. SMOOT. It will. It will embrace the total assessed valuation of all taxable property; and wherever there is a State that imposes a tax on personal property, it will, of course, include that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to make this criticism of the Senator's plan; namely, that in many States personal property is not assessed, and in other States where it is assessed it is assessed very inadequately, only such things as jewelry, silver plate, and so forth, being assessed; so that taxable property as it is "get-at-able," so to speak, would be only real estate; which would be unjust to those States which have great personal assets.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, most of the States of the Union now assess personal property. I agree with the Senator that there is a discrimination between the rates of taxation on personal property in some of the States of the Union; but, of course, this applies to just what taxes are imposed by the State, and if a State has not assessed its property, then, under this plan, it could not complain of not receiving the proper apportionment, based upon the taxable property of the State.

I see that the hour of 3.30 has arrived.

The VICE PRESIDENT. You have two minutes yet by the clock in front of the Chair. Then you have 10 minutes after that to speak on the amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I was looking at the clock in front of me.

Another splendid thing in this provision is that it provides a fund for the maintenance of the roads. There is not a Senator, there is not a person in the United States who does not know that among the greatest mistakes and the most expensive comes from the fact that the roads after they are constructed are not maintained and repaired as they should be. If any State which builds good roads—I do not care what they may cost, whether it be $10,000 a mile or $20,000 a mile—allows the roads to deteriorate and no work to be done upon them for years, is adopting a policy which means great expense to the taxpayers in the end. This substitute provides that 2 per cent upon the value of the bonds that are deposited by the State with the Secretary of the Treasury shall be used for the repair and maintenance of these roads. If it is not used for that purpose, Mr. President, then the National Highway Commission says to the State officials, "This money shall not be paid to the States, and hereafter, unless it is expended as provided by law, no assistance shall go to the States."

I know some of the Western States that have expended upon their roads by piecemeal, by building dirt roads, by hauling in cobblestones one year and removing them the next, have roads to-day that are no better than they were 10 years ago. Such sums have made the roads cost the State nearly as much as if they had built in the first place good concrete and hard-surfaced roads.

What I want to do, Mr. President, is to point out a system that will apply to all parts of the United States, show the people of the United States what best to do in road building, how to do it, and if they have no one within the States who is familiar with road building now in vogue in the United States my substitute provides there shall be a school to educate inexperienced men how to construct modern roads and with no ultimate expense to the Government, as the one-fourth of 1 per cent provided for will take care of this item and every other expense provided in the substitute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if there is not another very valuable provision in his substitute with regard to maintenance of the roads. Usually I think by all competent engineers it is estimated that it requires annually about 4 per cent of the original cost to keep roads in good condition. This substitute provides that not only shall future help be withheld if the State does not expend the 2 per cent paid from the Treasury of the United States, but it shall be withheld if the State does not expend a similar amount in maintenance in order to always enjoy a good condition of the road that has been improved.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator for reminding me that I had not called the attention of the Senate to that fact. I recognized that I only had a few moments' time to cover this great question. What the Senator has said in relation to compelling the States to raise a similar amount for maintenance of these roads is absolutely correct. I believe myself it is one of the splendid provisions in the substitute.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask one further question. Before Senator Bourne, whose plan this is, or at least conceived this plan, made his report as a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, is it not true that he called to his aid a committee of his associates in the Senate who contributed what they could toward the perfection of his plan, and is not this a plan which received at the time the approval and concurrence of substantially all Senators, at least, upon this side of this Chamber?

Mr. SWANSON. I was on that commission.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is not speaking of the commission now. He is speaking of the fact, and it is a fact, that ex-Senator Bourne called 15 or 20 Senators together for the purpose of discussing this plan which he originated, as I have already stated, and we spent not one evening only but for weeks this question was discussed and all the wisdom of the Senators who gathered together, not all upon this side of the Chamber, was given in the formation and wording of this plan of road building.

Not only that, Mr. President, but Senator BOURNE spent weeks and months, and I am perfectly frank in saying nearly years, in consulting all classes of men in the United States in regard to it. He met in New York and Chicago and other great cities with the financiers of this Nation. He consulted them. He secured their approval. He consulted the best engineers in the United States, held meeting after meeting with them, and the plan met with their approval. I know, also, Mr. President, that he was assured by the banking interests of this country that the bonds issued for this purpose would find a ready market in the United States, and I have no doubt that they will in the near future.

Why not let the Government of the United States issue its credit to the States of this Union and let the States only pay the 4 per cent interest upon the money which they want to expend upon roads, and at the end of 50 years the obligation of the State is paid in full? The States would build the roads under this provision, and not only that but pay for the roads in the way provided.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Utah permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator has discussed the maintenance of roads. The wisest provision in the existing law is section 7 of the law which requires maintenance by the States. I should like to read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not do so, because I have only two minutes left.

Mr. SWANSON. It shows that these roads must be maintained by the States, or else they do not get another cent of money from the Federal Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the substitute which I have offered, it not only means that the Government provides 2 per cent, but the Senator must admit that all engineers agree that 4 per cent of the amount originally expended on roads ought to be expended on the maintenance and repair of the roads every year, and my substitute provides that in addition the State must provide 2 per cent additional. The best engineers of the United States have decided that the amount should be spent upon public roads, and under my substitute it must be spent, or no further assistance from the Government will be given.

If there were anything, Mr. President, in this proposition that any ordinary business man or any man in the United States could not understand, I would not be here asking support for it. But its very simplicity should appeal to Senators, showing that it is not a fad of some kind and can not work out. I say that it will work out. I say that if it is not adopted to-day, it will be adopted in the future just as surely as the people of the United States learn of the plan, and that is what they are going to do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless the Senator from Utah wishes to proceed on the bill itself, his time has expired on this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. My 10 minutes on the amendment have expired, and the only thing I could do now would be to take 10 minutes on the bill. I would prefer to reserve that at this time, and I will therefore yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes it the proper course to proceed with amendments while they are pending and with the bill after the amendments are disposed of. Otherwise it would be difficult to keep a record.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, speaking on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I have examined it with care. I think it is a meritorious plan, and if it were an original question, if it were 1916 and his plan was to be put in force, I would be inclined to vote for it. But I see some difficulties in the way of putting it in force now with another plan already in force which was adopted in 1916 and where the appropriations run until 1921.

I am not very familiar with the machinery, but I understand all the States have adopted this plan and are putting it in force. To adopt the Senator's plan now would require the States to provide for a new issue and a different issue of bonds. A number of legislatures have made provision so that they can take advantage of a larger appropriation than the one of 1916, but they have not made provision for issuing their bonds under the plan proposed by the Senator from Utah. I get what information I have from the road branch of the Government, which has had this matter in charge.

There is one other suggestion I should like to make. At that time undoubtedly the Federal Government could borrow money much more cheaply than the States. I doubt if the Federal Government can borrow money any cheaper to-day than the States can. State bonds are absolutely exempt from Federal taxation and exempt from State taxation.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. It is true that the interest on the liberty bonds may be taxed, but the other bonds are tax free. It is proposed here that these bonds shall be tax free, and I have no doubt they will sell at 3 per cent.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have very grave doubts, with the demand for money that the Government is going to have in the next two years, whether the Federal Government can sell these bonds at 3 per cent or sell them any cheaper than the States could sell their bonds. I know many States have issued their bonds free from taxation, free from Federal taxation, and they can be sold to-day just as cheaply if not cheaper than the Federal Government can sell its bonds. My State can sell bonds more cheaply.

The main objection that I see is in having two systems here, one of which has already been laid out and an appropriation made to carry it out and many of the States having made all arrangements to carry it out. The legislatures in many of the States will expire in a very few days and many of them have already expired. While I do believe the plan has many merits, yet I should hesitate to substitute it for the plan of the committee at this time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has said, I wish to state that I was a member of the joint commission of the House of Representatives and Senate which investigated this road question. Federal bonds can be sold much better or cheaper than State bonds. The fact is, a large majority of the States have a constitutional prohibition against issuing State bonds, and that plan would not be available until the State constitutions could be changed in the majority of the States. If I mistake not, there is a good majority of the States that have that prohibition in their State constitutions. Consequently, some of the States could not change their constitutions for three or four years, and this plan would not be available at all until their constitutions were changed so that the bonds could be obtained. My State could not do it; Florida could not do it. I think Minnesota has such a prohibition. The report of the Bourne Commission will show the States that made it absolutely prohibitory. Consequently our commission looked into that phase of it, and the present law, I think, was practically unanimously reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, but certainly by a large majority after they looked into it.

As to road improvement, there can not be any way under this law for the maintenance of roads, and a better method could not be provided or found anywhere than in section 7 of the present law. I wish to show how carefully the law was drawn. It has worked well and the results have been very satisfactory. Section 7 of the present law reads as follows:

SEC. 7. To maintain the roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States or their civil subdivisions, according to the laws of the several States. If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any road in any State constructed under the provisions of this act is not being properly maintained, he shall give notice of such fact to the highway department of such State, and if within four months from the receipt of said notice said road has not been put in a proper condition of maintenance, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall thereafter refuse to approve any project for road construction in said State or the civil subdivision thereof, as the fact may be, whose duty it is to maintain said road, until it has been put in a condition of proper maintenance.

I was a member of the Post Office Committee which reported the bill, and, as I remember, it was discussed here for several weeks. All amendments deemed necessary were offered and every safeguard given. The only dispute at the time was as to the amount of money the Federal Government should give for road construction. It seems to me, with this provision, we could not have a better law for the maintenance of the roads.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Utah now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah is adopted, every Senator here, of course, knows that that means no legislation during the present session on this subject. I do not think I am unfair to the Senator when I say that that is his purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that he is unfair when he makes that statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I will withdraw the statement.

I want to say this, further, and then I am through and ready to vote on this question. I repeat what I said. It means that there will be no legislation on this subject; but if there were, the measure is utterly impracticable. The Senator from Utah proposes to create a commission to put into operation its provisions and to superintend the spending of the billion dollars, or whatever the amount, as the case may be. Who comprise that commission? The chairman of the Post Office Committee of the Senate, the chairman of the Post Office Committe of the House, and one member to be selected from the Roads Administration.

Mr. President, if there were a greater political job than that ever put up, I do not know where to find it. The Senator puts in these chairmen, who are natural politicians and must be such, to administer this great project of road building. I will not be the chairman at that time, I know, but I do not hesitate to say that every Member of the Senate knows I have no capacity whatever for the administration of such a law as the Senator proposes. Besides, it would take the entire time of the chairmen of those committees. They could not possibly devote one moment of their time to any other business if they were going to administer such a law. I sincerely hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it had not been my intention to say anything in regard to this amendment, but the last suggestion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] I think needs some refutation. There could be possibly no political influences surrounding the commission which is provided for in this substitute. It has no discretion whatever. It is simply an administrative body to convey the money that is raised from the Federal Government to the States. The States determine, and the States alone determine, what roads shall be improved. They are improved entirely under the direction and supervision of the States and with the discretion or judgment of the States in that respect, with which the commission proposed has nothing whatever to do. I can hardly think, therefore, that it is vulnerable to the objection just made by the Senator from Alabama.

The objection made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is of a different kind. He says that in order that the States may avail themselves of the aid of the United States and issue their bonds in corresponding amounts, it would be necessary to amend some of the constitutions of the States. That is true. I think he is wrong, however, with regard to the proportion of constitutions that would necessarily have to be amended in order to accomplish that result. But that is neither here nor there. It is true that some constitutions must be amended in order to authorize the States to issue the obligations that are provided for in this amendment; but if this is the right way to deal with the subject, if there are safeguards in this plan that are not in other plans, if it will prevent a reckless and extravagant and wasteful expenditure of the public money, we ought to adopt the plan even though it will require a little time to put it into execution.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he is correct in his statement that it is not a majority of the States whose constitutions would have to be amended. The number is 13, I believe.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is my recollection that a minority of the States would require an amendment to their constitutions. My own State is one of the number. We would not be able to avail ourselves of this privilege until we had amended our constitution and authorized the issuance of bonds.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] objects to it, because it would interrupt the present plan. That is true, but why not interrupt the present plan if the present plan is wrong? All realize that this appropriation is simply an enlargement of the plan adopted a year or two ago, but those of us who believe that the Federal Government ought not to expend money in an improvement of the general roads of the country found in this plan a method of assisting the States quite as effective as the plan now in the law, and found in the plan a safeguard against these constant inroads upon the Public Treasury. If we appropriate $275,000,000 this year, we will appropriate $500,000,000 next year, and we will gradually by progression along that line, Mr. President, bankrupt the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield in just a moment.

In my own State, if we were to improve all our roads at $10,000 a mile, it would cost us more than a billion dollars to do it, but I suppose the public of my State expect eventually that the Congress of the United States will appropriate a billion dollars for the improvement of the highways in Iowa. Much as I would like to see the highways in my own State permanently and effectually improved, I am not willing and never have been willing to enter upon a policy which would call for that expenditure from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, those of us who were on the commission, and also on the committee in the Senate, did not favor the proposition in the amendment now pending, but took the ground that the same influences that would increase this appropriation would ultimately result in cancellation of the bonds of the States, and that ultimately those bonds would be canceled and be returned to the States through the same influence. Consequently those who examined it thoroughly looked upon it with hesitancy and reached the conclusion that this would be more reckless, and that the Government would not have any supervision over the roads and their construction. We reached the conclusion that this would be the more reckless plan of the two.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no accounting for a variety of opinion, I presume, for we all observe it in one way or another; but I can not see the weight of that suggestion.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] says we could not place the bonds of the United States at 3 per cent. I do not know whether we could or not, but the spirit of this bill is that the credit of the United States is 1 per cent per annum better than the credit of the several States. Taking the States as a whole that is true, because there was a most exhaustive inquiry made by the committee to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] refers, and that was the result of the inquiry. Taking the general indebtedness of the States and the general power of the States to borrow money, and comparing that with the ordinary and customary rates of Government obligations, the outcome was that the Government credit was about 1 per cent better than the credit of the States. If we were compelled, on account of the times, to issue Government obligations that must bear 4 per cent, then it follows that the State obligation would necessarily bear 5 per cent, because you will discover whenever you make that inquiry that the credit of the United States is a little better than the credit of any State.

Moreover, Mr. President, the immediate situation is not a good guide for us, on account of the variation in the laws respecting immunity from taxation. If we will put the obligations of the States upon exactly the same footing as to exemption from taxation that we put obligations of the Government, my observation will be found to be still true. There will be that difference. This plan enables us to help the States just as effectually as the plan of the committee, and without the expenditure of a penny from the Treasury of the United States, simply by utilizing the higher and better credit of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Before the Senator sits down I should like to ask him one question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long does the Senator think it would be before the construction of roads could be begun under the provisions of this amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. It would be long.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has expired, and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has once spoken on this amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the so-called Bourne plan, which is justly named for former Senator Bourne, was a very ingenious and wise disposition of these questions, in my judgment, and I have never heard any sound objection to it; but I must dissent from what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has just said about credit.

The very essence of the Bourne plan was that the credit of the General Government was 1 per cent better than the credit of the States. Undoubtedly that was true at that time, for a thorough examination was made of that question; but it is very far from being true to-day. I am not sure about the rates at which the bonds of States in the newer sections of the Union are selling, but I know that some of the bonds of the States of the East are selling on rather a better basis than are United States bonds. The bonds of the State of New Hampshire, for example, are selling at only a little lower percentage basis than are Government bonds. Certainly New Hampshire is not a rich State, which would have unusual credit.

I think the same is true of the State of Rhode Island. I have noticed the quotations of Rhode Island bonds recently, and I think it will be found that, taking the country by and large, this very essential qualification to carry out this plan would not be found sound, for I am confident that a large percentage of the States of the Union could finance themselves as well to-day as could the General Government. That has been true to a greater or less extent for years.

Senators may remember that last year we appropriated some eight hundred odd thousand dollars to reimburse the State of Massachusetts for money which was expended for the benefit of the General Government during the Civil War, and expended for the General Government because the State of Massachusetts could sell its bonds at a lower rate of interest than could the General Government. It has been generally true that the credit of the Commonwealth, which I in part represent, has been practically as good as that of the Government, and would have been quite as good if it had not been for the provision that United States bonds should be used as a basis for circulation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] on account of sickness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I note that he has not voted. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and will let my vote stand. I also will let this announcement stand for the rest of the voting on this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire if the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. NEW. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], but I am at liberty to vote on this amendment and on other amendments to the bill. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire if the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. KNOX. Then I withhold my vote, having a pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Borah	Harding	Page	Spencer
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Penrose	Wadsworth

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment inserting section 6 it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That when any officer or enlisted man in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps of the United States shall be or shall have been detailed for labor in the building of roads or in other highway construction or repair work which is or was not exclusively necessary to subserve military purposes, the pay of such officers or enlisted men shall be equalized to conform to the compensation paid to civilian employees in the same or like employment; and the sum due to each such officers or enlisted man, as herein provided, shall be computed by the Secretary of Agriculture and paid out of the appropriation herein made and deducted from the allotment made to the State wherein such employment was had and such equalized compensation incurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it is clear to my mind that that amendment would be utterly impossible of execution, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I heard the amendment hurriedly read, and I do not know that I fully understand it. I think I am in favor of it, but I should like to have the mover of the amendment explain it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I am very glad to explain the amendment. It simply provides that in the construction of these roads, paid for by Federal aid, if any enlisted men or officers of the United States Army are employed they shall receive the same wages that are paid civilian laborers on construction work; in other words, that the soldiers who are paid $30 a month shall not be compelled to work for $30 a month when civilians side by side with them are getting $3, $4, and $5 per day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment, as requested by the Senator from Florida.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the object of this amendment, because I do not understand that there is any proposition to work soldiers now in the Army upon road construction. I do not know by what authority they can be assigned to the building in the States of roads and highways not required for military purposes. While, of course, I think everyone would be willing to equalize their pay, if it were possible, it looks to me as if it would simply add confusion to the bill when there is no possibility of such a thing ever happening under its provisions.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it seems to me that if this amendment prevails it would, by implication, carry authority to detail soldiers of the Army to work on these roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is, if it is agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. If it is agreed to, it seems to me the effect of it would be that soldiers could be detailed to work on the roads.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The amendment simply provides that if any of the soldiers of the Army are utilized in the construction of roads they shall receive the same rate of wages as civilians so employed. Men who enlisted in the Army to fight in France have been employed in building roads at almost every cantonment in the United States, and many of them on military roads leading to and from the cantonments. At this time men who are awaiting discharge from the United States Army and are anxious to go home are being worked on certain of these roads at $30 per month when the usual civilian pay is from $3 to $5 per day. The amendment simply provides that that practice shall not be continued.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator from New Jersey state that soldiers in the Army are now being worked on anything but military roads in connection with the cantonments and other establishments of that kind?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have in my office—received this morning—five letters from enlisted men complaining that they are kept at work on military roads. These roads lead to and from cantonments, but they will be utilized by the States as highways when the cantonments are abandoned. It is done everywhere.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is difficult to understand from the reading of the amendment exactly what it does provide. Does it mean that if hereafter, under this appropriation, the United States Army shall detail men for work on roads in a State they shall receive the same pay as civilian workers or does it mean that they shall be paid for their past work wherever they have performed such work on military roads?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is not retroactive; it simply applies to the appropriation contained in the pending bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. On the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor. His time has not expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I simply rise to congratulate the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] for offering this amendment. It is very refreshing now to see him show solicitude for the soldier, and I congratulate him and the State he so well represents.

I recall that some two or three weeks ago, when we had up the bill providing for appropriating a hundred million dollars for some Europeans, who never understood and never will understand or comprehend our institutions, I tried to get an amendment attached to that bill to pay soldiers of the American Army two months' bonus, and my distinguished friend, the Senator from New Jersey, was active in opposition to that amendment. He was frank enough and manly enough, as is his attitude always, and courageous enough to come and tell me that he believed the amendment then offered to be political propaganda. He did not tell anybody else; he simply told me. I am going to tell him that I believe he is sincere in offering this amendment. I believe there is virtue in it, and the State that he represents and the Nation and its soldiers are to be congratulated that he, after some delay, has been converted to the idea that the private soldier has some rights in this country, and that if millions are to be "dished out" for the benefit of contractors, if millions are to be dished out for the benefit of Bolshevists, the American private soldier has a few rights. So, I congratulate the Senator from New Jersey upon his belated conversion.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator has revealed to the Senate a private conversation that I had with him, and in view of the fact that his remarks imply to some extent a criticism of me, I wish to explain to him why I was opposed to the amendment providing for two months' pay to every enlisted man in the Army. I did not believe that that was a practical solution of the problem. I believe that there are probably two million or two and a half million men who do not want charity of this kind, men who have plenty of means to take them back to their civil pursuits without that bonus being paid by the Government. I said to the Senator that I believed a better plan, if it could be provided, would be to send these men back to the draft boards, there demobilize them, and allow the draft boards to take care of their problems, such as the payment of their allotments, which have been so greatly delayed; the payment of dependency claims; the payment of back pay; and arranging for the transfer and conversion of their life insurance, which at the present time, left to the department, is in a chaotic condition, and then provide, where the soldier is out of employment, that the draft board should pay $30 a month, to him or to his family, even for two, three, four, five, or six months—that they should find the men who really need the help and pay it in that manner.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a minute?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that—

> No Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The Senator from New Jersey has spoken twice and the Senator from Arizona once.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to speak upon the bill now, Mr. President, and I have that right at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not while the amendment is pending.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, so as to provide that the soldiers who work upon the roads shall be paid 1 per cent more than the civilians, and upon that amendment I wish to speak.

I wish to assure the Senator from New Jersey that I would not be guilty of revealing private conversations with other Senators here; but I recalled his frank and manly statement, and I was not criticizing the Senator—I have no right to do that—for it was a manly thing for him frankly to tell me his views about the matter and I respect him for it.

I will say further that his proposal and his method of paying the soldiers a bonus was a more scientific and a more accurate one than the one I presented myself, and I am converted to his method. I am not speaking the language of criticism. He converted me to his view, that the money to be paid as a bonus ought to be paid through the local draft boards.

I have been converted to the Senator's method of paying the bonus. The Finance Committee, when it brings in the conference report on the revenue bill, is going to bring in a provision for a bonus of $60 to each soldier and each officer, and I am in favor of it. Will the Senator vote against the conference report because that provision is in it?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is a question which at present I do not care to answer, because I have not seen the conference report. I do not know what it provides, but I will say to the Senator that I intend to introduce a bill embodying the provisions I have outlined to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. That the soldiers shall be paid by the local draft boards?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the soldiers can be still kept in commission, as I understand from Gen. Crowder that they can be.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator will find me at least an active if not an effective supporter of his plan. That is all I have to say. I would not resort to the unparliamentary procedure, either privately or otherwise, of saying that the Senator's present amendment was offered for political effect, because that would be unparliamentary, however true. It is not true in this case, and I am going to vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not lose sight of the fact that there is no authority in this bill at all to authorize the detail of soldiers or officers in the construction of the roads proposed to be constructed under its provisions. It simply provides that those men who have been discharged from the military service shall have the preference in employment. My judgment is that if such an amendment as this were adopted it would by implication authorize the Secretary of War to detail these men to work upon these roads, and that ought not to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MOSES. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN] to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The roll call resulted—yeas 33, nays 33, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the amendment of the committee, the yeas are 33 and the nays are 33, so the amendment is rejected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I reserve the right to offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on January 31 I gave notice of a motion to suspend the rules with reference to general legislation on a general appropriation bill in order to enable me to offer the amendment upon which I have submitted some remarks this morning, and I am now about to make that motion. Before I do so I desire to say that, in case the motion to suspend the rules prevails and I am permitted to offer the amendment which accompanied the notice, I shall ask leave to perfect the amendment by excluding from the repeal sections 2 and 3 of the first espionage act, so that it will repeal section 1 of the first act and section 4 of the second. Sections 2 and 3 are the sections to which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] referred this morning. I want to say, however, that when I shall perfect the amendment in this respect it will not represent what I think should be the amendment. I am aware, however, that there are Senators who feel that those sections ought not to be repealed. That is not my view; but I am willing, if I can get it, to take half a loaf instead of the entire loaf.

Mr. President, I move at this time that the provisions of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI, prohibiting an amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, be, for the purpose of offering the amendment to which I have referred, suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that the question of agreeing to section 6 as amended is before the Senate, so that this motion will not be in order now. We must first dispose of section 6.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to section 6 as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado calls for the yeas and nays. Is the call sustained. [A pause.]

Mr. FRANCE. I would like to have the amendment stated.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I understand that the question now is upon section 6 as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the section which appropriates $200,000,000 for roads. I think those who advocate it should not shrink from going upon record. I think those who are opposed to it should have a chance to go upon record.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], but I am at liberty to vote upon this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORE. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 51, nays 17, as follows:

So section 6 as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I voted inadvertently on the amendment just preceding this one, offered, I think, by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FREYLINGHAUSEN]. The vote was a tie. While I do not ask that the result be changed at this time, in view of the fact that a vote on it has been reserved in the Senate, I want to say now that I shall vote for that amendment. There is no reason in the world why these young men who are wearing the uniform of the United States, if put to public employment on roads and other work, should not receive the same pay as civilians. It is the same rule that was applied in the Northwest, where the young men in uniform were compelled to work in the production of spruce lumber; they were paid civilian wages, and did splendid work. Of course, there was deducted from their monthly pay the salaries that they received as soldiers, which was perfectly proper. So I shall change my vote when the matter comes up again.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for a question? I should like to ask the Senator if soldiers in active service have ever been put to work on roads other than military roads? If soldiers are to do this kind of work at all—if there is any possibility of their being put into this kind of work—I shall——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must enforce the unanimous-consent agreement. We are talking on nothing.

Mr. STERLING. In view of the statement of the Senator from Oregon, I made the inquiry.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I call up the amendment I offered yesterday to the bill.

The SECRETARY. On page 14——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the agreement, the amendments to sections 7 and 8 must be first disposed of. The question now is on section 7.

Section 7 was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Upon what amendment did we just vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 7.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, has section 7 been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 7 has just been agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have an amendment that I should like to offer to it. I move to reconsider the vote whereby it was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, section 7 is pending; and the Senator from Alabama offers an amendment to it, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, in line 18, after the word "material," and on page 38, in line 2, after the word "material," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "equipment and supplies."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to section 7 as amended.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to offer an amendment to the section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 7, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That none of the sums made available under section 6 shall be expended except on such roads as may be designated as part of a national highway system to be laid out by the engineers of the construction division of the United States Army or of the War Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to section 7 as amended.

Section 7 as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the adoption of section 8.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, section 8, as I recall, is the section which makes an additional appropriation of $3,000,000 for the building of roads in forest reserves. The Government now has a fund for that purpose; and I can conceive of no reason why we should add to it, except that we have $3,000,000 left in the Treasury not yet disposed of. I do not believe that that is necessary. It is a very trifling sum, but I hope it will be voted out of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado knows as much about western conditions as I think he does, his criticism is hardly justified. Fifty-two per cent and more of the best land in my State is in reservations; and yet I find a Senator from the West opposing the Government, on its own property, building the roads which are absolutely essential to it, and which may possibly work some benefit to a section of the country that has already been overburdened with taxation from the General Government and is receiving no compensation whatever from it.

Of all the things in this bill, this is the one above all others which should appeal to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, just a word.

This appropriation is made in the bill in recognition of the principle which found place in the original act. When that was under consideration, the matter was debated at length, and the equity of the States in which there were great national forests for an additional appropriation to take care of roads in those forests was completely thrashed out and was entirely vindicated. The appropriation is quite in keeping with the original appropriation, which, in addition to the $75,000,000 provided therein, provided an appropriation of $1,000,000 each year for 10 years for the construction of roads in the national forests.

These great areas contribute nothing whatever to the Public Treasury. They contribute nothing either to the National Treasury or to the State treasury. They contribute nothing for the building of roads. They contribute nothing for the support of schools. As they are kept out of the general body of property in the State from which the taxation must be drawn in pursuance of the policy of the National Government, at least the National Government ought to contribute something toward the construction of the necessary roads through these great areas.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. What do you want with a road in a forest reserve? There is nothing there but a forest.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to answer the question of the Senator.

In the first place, these great forests lie between densely populated and important agricultural and mining sections. There is no communication between these different sections except by roads through the forests. My county of Lewis and Clark, for the purpose of establishing communication facilities with the adjacent valley of the Deer Lodge, three years ago took upon itself the burden of a large expense for constructing a road through this national forest.

In the second place, these national forests are preserved because of the value of the timber in them. The timber is subject to being destroyed by enormous forest fires, and roads and trails are necessary through the forests in order that they may be protected from fire that is likely to destroy not only the forests themselves but property held by private owners in the immediate vicinity and adjacent to them; and there are many other considerations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the section that is now under discussion is one that becomes vitally interesting to the States which contain forest reservations. There are millions and millions of acres in Colorado. We have 14,000,000 acres of land that have been withdrawn for forest purposes. These are practically Government lands, and it is necessary, in order to get access to the interior of them and also in approaching and leaving them, that there should be roads. Under our law none of this land can be the subject of taxation. Fourteen million acres of land have been withdrawn from taxation in the State of Colorado. Is it possible that we are to have no roads constructed there by reason of the fact that it is Government land? It seems to me the Government ought to be required to build roads in the interior. They can not ask the counties, but the counties are doing it to a certain extent, because it is necessary for them to get to the railroads.

Mr. President, it seems to me, in view of the fact that this is Government property and the State can not raise a dollar by taxation upon it, we ought to have a law at this time that will give at least some development, meager though it may be, of roads upon the public domain.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the section the following proviso:

Provided, That no officer or soldier of the Army shall be detailed for work on the roads which come within the provisions of this section and other provisions of this act.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I voted against the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey not because I did not entertain the idea that if a soldier or an officer was detailed and assigned to this road work he should be paid the same compensation that was paid to civilians engaged in similar employment, because I am heartily in sympathy with the idea that if they should be so detailed they should draw similar compensation, but I am unalterably opposed to the idea that men who have been drafted into the Army or men who have enlisted in the Army should be detailed for other work than that contemplated upon their being called into the military service. Therefore it is my idea that we can best dispose of this question by adopting a specific provision prohibiting the detail of officers or soldiers for road work.

I can not contemplate or conceive the idea scarcely that the War Department and those having in charge our military affairs would so far violate the proprieties, would be guilty of such injustice to the officers and soldiers who have been called into the military service, as to assign them to do work of this nature and expect them to do it at the compensation they now receive. But as there seems to be some apprehension that some one may perchance be guilty of this injustice to our soldiers and our officers, I am willing to place a specific provision in the bill providing that officers and soldiers shall not be detailed for carrying on any of the work embraced within the appropriations here made. Therefore I have offered the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the trouble with the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is that it does not meet the difficulty. The soldiers have been employed on what are nominally military roads, but which inure exclusively to the benefit of the States in which they are built. That is the way they get around it. I know it has been done in my own State. I know it has been done in Virginia, near Camp Humphreys. I am told that at one time they had as many as 40,000 men building a piece of road that is going to be a part of the main road to Richmond, and they call it a military road. You never will reach this difficulty until you pay the soldiers as the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey does.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will be very glad to accept an amendment to the amendment offered by myself, providing that they shall not be detailed or assigned to roads contemplated under the provisions of the bill or any other class of roads.

Mr. LODGE. That does not meet it. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey meets it, and I propose to support that amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. My idea is not to authorize the department and those having control over our soldiers to detail them for road work, and if you provide a compensation for them it indicates that it is the mind of the legislative branch of the Government that they shall have such authority. I am opposed to granting that authority.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey because, certainly, if soldiers are to be assigned to work upon these roads which are either technically or in fact within the provisions of the bill, they should be paid the same as those who work beside them; but I am very anxious that no amendment shall be adopted which would seem to suggest to the War Department that they ought to continue to employ young men who have been conscripted for military purposes in the building of roads. There is no reason now to continue them in the building of military roads. That might have been true during the time the war was pending, but there is no longer any occasion for employment in that respect.

Whatever amendment is adopted, whether that of the Senator from New Jersey or the Senator from Florida, or both—and I shall support both—I hope we will not in the future have any information coming to the Senate that boys who have been conscripted are held for the purpose of building public roads, military or otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me? I agree with him entirely, but the amendment of the Senator from Florida does not meet the difficulty. That is the trouble.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment of the Senator from Florida certainly expresses the view of the Senate, and we can adopt both.

Mr. LODGE. Ah! if we adopt both.

Mr. BORAH. This is not a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if my amendment does not remedy the situation so far as the appropriations provided in this bill are concerned?

Mr. LODGE. I am not interested in protecting the appropriations in this bill. That does not concern me. What I am interested in is to prevent soldiers from being used to do State work—and that is done under the cover of military roads.

Mr. BORAH. It ought to be distinctly understood that the Senate is in favor of demobilizing these men and that nothing should detain, retard, or embarrass that demobilization. We do not want them retained for the purpose of building roads or policing Russia or policing Turkey or any other place. They should be permitted to go home and take up the work which they left under the command of their Government.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I call his attention to the proposed amendment. I invite his attention particularly to the fact that his amendment says no work that is not definitely or distinctively or exclusively military; no road building that is not exclusively military. I ask the Senator what system does his amendment suggest, as to how it shall be decided whether a particular road is a military work or otherwise? Does not the amendment of the Senator leave it open to 50 different commanders in 50 different parts of the country to render different kinds of decisions as to whether it is distinctively military or civil work? And, finally, does it not leave it solely and wholly to the commander of the men to be the sole and the only judge as to whether the work is military road work or road work for State uses? The Senator from Massachusetts used that expression.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, it is quite true that the question as to what constitutes military roads and what does not constitute military roads might be open to many constructions, but in the building of the cantonments the roads within the cantonments were strictly military roads. Through special orders from the War Department—I think it is the Quartermaster's Department that has control of that—certain roads were designated. Those are military roads, but in many cases the commander of the post has built other roads leading to and from the city adjacent to the cantonment and has utilized the labor of enlisted men. I have seen some of these roads. The men themselves have boasted of the fact that they built them during the stress of war, when it was necessary, in order to facilitate the traffic to the camp, that they should be built.

But now the criticism I get from the enlisted men is that the commanding officers, in order to keep the men employed, are building roads and highways that are not military roads and that will not be used for military roads, but will be used for the main line of traffic and travel in the States. There is bitter complaint from these men that they have become road gangs. What I want to do is to avoid that.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator, then, the distinction he wishes to draw between those roads ordered by the War Department, military roads, and those roads which the commanders of camps assume to build on their own initiative?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I say there is great confusion regarding the two types of roads. I want to stop holding the men in camp to build roads for the community in which the camp may be located.

Mr. LEWIS. I agree with the Senator. I think every Senator in this Chamber agrees with the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. These men want to go home and to go back to their old employment.

Mr. LEWIS. I am only anxious to have the Senator see the difficulty. Those who wish to vote with him would like an amendment, if he would prefer to present it himself, that specifically designates who shall determine what road is a military road from the kind of road he objects to, or an amendment that so defines the subject that by voting for it they do not vote against the military road ordered by the War Department in order to exempt the kind of road that may be ordered by a post commander within a State.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They do not need any soldier labor for military roads. The need for all military roads is over; but these men should be prohibited from performing any labor on any of the roads. If in the battalions or regiments that are held in camp any of the men voluntarily want to go out and work on the construction of these highways, I am providing, by changing and perfecting my amendment, that any soldier who volunteers to do that work will be allowed to do so under military command, and that he shall be paid the same wages that are paid for civilian labor.

Mr. LEWIS. Since the Senator has kindly suggested that he is what he calls perfecting his amendment, possibly when presented in a perfected state it will remedy some of the evils that I fancy would spring from it as originally it was offered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator, of course, can take advantage of my use of probably the wrong term. I simply tried to meet the objection of some Senators, who believe the amendment would be in better form if it were changed in that regard.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to certain remarks made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in his very able discussion of the espionage act. The Senator made the proposition to repeal sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act of 1917 and section 4 of the act of 1918. I think this is very important as bearing on the question whether we should repeal that at this time. I am as much in sympathy with the idea which the Senator put forth as anybody. I am as much in favor of the liberty of the press and the liberty of speech as any Senator in this Chamber. But, Mr. President, it seems to me these sections should be carefully revised at this time and should not be repealed until we know what we are doing.

Section 1 of the espionage act provides that—

> Whoever for the purpose of obtaining information respecting the national defense with intent or reason to believe that the information to be obtained is to be used to the injury of the United States, or to the advantage of any foreign nation, goes upon—

And so forth, and obtains certain information. I have not the time to read it, but Senators will remember what it is. The same section provides that—

> Whoever, for the purpose aforesaid, and with like intent or reason to believe, copies, takes, makes, or obtains, or attempts, or induces, or aids another to copy, take, make, or obtain, any sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blue print, plan, map, model, instrument, appliance, document, writing, or note of anything connected with the national defense * * * or whoever, lawfully or unlawfully having possession of, access to, control over, or being intrusted with any document, writing—

Going on and designating the same instruments as before—

> willfully communicates or transmits or attempts to communicate or transmit the same to any person not entitled to receive it, or willfully retains the same and fails to deliver it on demand to the officer or employee of the United States entitled to receive it—

Shall be punished—

> Provided, That whoever shall violate the provisions of subsection (a) of this section in time of war shall be punished—

And that—

> Whoever, in time of war, with intent that the same shall be communicated to the enemy, shall collect, record, publish, or communicate, or attempt to elicit any information with respect to the movement, numbers, description, condition, or disposition of any of the armed forces, ships, aircraft, or war materials of the United States—

Shall be punished.

This is a thing that is necessary in war time to prevent anyone by communication of any kind sending information to the injury of this country to the enemy.

Section 1, which is sought to be repealed by the proposition of the Senator from Idaho, being section 1 of Title XII, provides that—

> Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter.

What I say is that by the section which it is sought to repeal the material in writing which one gathers under section 1 of the espionage act is made nonmailable matter. It has to do with communication with the enemy; and, of course, after the material is sent the damage is done and this Government must, as it has done, supervise all communications of that kind and prevent them from being carried in the mail.

Of course I realize that the war is practically over and there might be no harm in communicating in violation of section 1, but we ought to think about it. The war is not legally over, and it may start again actually. I think we should carefully consider whether we should repeal section 1 of Title XII at this time.

I am quite sure that no Senator here would object if a bill were brought in to accomplish what the Senator from Idaho desires, taking away from the Postmaster General the arbitrary power which he has now under this act as to many communications; but until I have further time to examine this question and study it with care I would not wish to vote to repeal section 1 of Title XII of the act.

I have no doubt that the power has been abused; all such power is liable to be abused; and I would like to see a bill brought in here revising these provisions and protecting the public, because I do not think at this time arbitrary restrictions as to mailable matter which can do no harm in this country should continue. But I think we should consider carefully whether we are going to take away the provision which makes all these documents and this information nonmailable matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the question before the Senate is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a few moments ago, when the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] was before the Senate, it occurred to me that it was simply going to lead to confusion in legislation, for I had not heard up to that time that there had been even any attempt upon the part of officers to work their men on State roads. Of course I condemn that proposition as heartily as any man can, and I am willing to vote for any proposition to prevent it. It seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, if properly worded, strikes at the root of this evil. It prohibits, or at least that is its object, the working of our soldiers upon roads. While I voted against the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey, I did so, first, because, as I have said, I did not know that such had been the practice, and, secondly, it seems to me that the evil might still exist and the soldiers be worked upon the roads just the same if they were paid the wages of ordinary civilian labor; in other words, they would probably be under coercion anyway. I am opposed to that, and, therefore, I am quite in sympathy with what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said. I am willing to have almost any amendment adopted which will correct this evil. It seems to me if we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Florida, if it is properly worded, we should cure the evil without any question about it whatever.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. As I understood the amendment, it applies only to soldiers working upon roads covered by this appropriation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suppose that would be about all the authority we have to exercise, as to something pertaining to roads covered by this appropriation. That was what the Senator from New Jersey tried to correct by his amendment. I want to go as far in this bill as I can lawfully go, and in a parliamentary manner, to prohibit the use of soldiers who are already in the service in the construction of roads or in doing any other work that is not in connection with the military service.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I voted against the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I did so because we had provided in the bill for the honorable discharge of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and I thought in doing that we perhaps had gone far enough, and because I also believed that soldiers in active service had not been detailed to do work on other than military roads; but it has been so constantly asserted in the Senate time and time again that soldiers have been so employed, and that they are likely to be so employed in the future—a thing to which I am utterly opposed—that I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida prohibiting the employment of soldiers for such purposes. To "make assurance double sure," I might say that if the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey is again offered I shall vote for that also.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Florida will be adopted. I think it covers the whole question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered provides that if any of these soldiers are to be detailed on the highways for which appropriation is made in this bill they shall first voluntarily consent to the employment, and that then they shall receive the same pay as do civilians who are employed in like work upon such highways.

The amendment also provides that if any officer or enlisted man shall be detailed for any highway work other than that on military roads he shall receive the same pay as civilians. The amendment of the Senator from Florida does not go that far. Therefore I think that if we will wait until the bill is in the Senate, if I am permitted to reoffer my amendment then, all that the Senator seeks to secure will be secured if my amendment shall be agreed to.

Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I have modified my amendment. May I now offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would be an amendment in the third degree. The Senator can read his amendment now to the Senate in his time; the Senate can then reject the amendment of the Senator from Florida and adopt the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, if it chooses to do so, when the amendment is subsequently offered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I shall wait until the bill is in the Senate, and then I shall reoffer my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to sections 7 and 8 as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I now ask for a vote on the amendment which I sent to the desk, which I introduced yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 11, at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That whenever an employee is required to work on such holidays he shall be allowed compensatory time on one of the six days following the holiday upon which such service is performed, or, if he so elects, he may be paid for overtime in lieu thereof.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that amendment simply proposes to extend the practice which now prevails as to legal or other holidays set aside for the purpose by the President. Other governmental employees do not work on holidays, and yet they receive their pay. It is necessary for some postal employees to work on those days, and it seems perfectly reasonable, in fact it is carrying out the general provisions of the law, that they shall be given their pay for the work or shall be allowed compensatory time. I think the chairman of the committee is in favor of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to the committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 15, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment to which the Senator's amendment is offered has already been agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it out of order to offer an amendment to that section as it now stands in the bill, it having been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must be reconsidered before the amendment can be offered at the place where the Senator is offering it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I can offer my amendment in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator reserves a separate vote on the committee amendment, he can then offer to amend the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand, then, that the committee amendment, on page 33, having been adopted, it is not now open to any further amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not, unless the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, or unless the Senator reserves a separate vote on the amendment, and offers to amend it when it comes into the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Secretary to read to the Senate my proposed amendment to the amendment, and then I will ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 16, of the amendment already agreed to, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That no assistant postmaster or supervisory official shall receive a less salary than $100 per annum in excess of the sixth-grade salary provided for clerks and carriers in post offices of the first and second classes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator wish to amend the same section?

Mr. MOSES. I wish to ask if the committee amendments have all been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be in a moment, the Chair presumes. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. If the committee amendments have been disposed of, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to be added as a new section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

That the provisions of the fifth and sixth sections of the act entitled "An act establishing post routes, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, for the transmission of official mail matter, be, and they are hereby, extended and made applicable to all communications necessitated to national banking associations, State banks, trust companies, and other banking institutions in connection with the business of collecting installment payments upon subscriptions to any issue of the liberty or victory loan.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the act referred to in the amendment? The Chair does not know anything about it.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, having in mind the decisions of the Senate made, reversed, and made again yesterday afternoon, it seems to me that this amendment clearly is in order; but, if the point of order is to be made and maintained against the amendment which I have offered, I think it is incumbent upon me to point out that this is not new legislation beyond the scope of what the Senate has already done in connection with this bill. If there is any proper place in any legislation for the insertion of the subject matter which my amendment covers, the Post Office appropriation bill is the place, because my amendment extends the franking privilege to the banking institutions in connection with mail which they may have to send out concerning the collection of installment payments on liberty loans.

It is well known that, in spite of the high-paid artists, the high-salaried directors, and all the oratory, all the cartoons, all the advertising, and all the mass meetings held throughout the country in order to make the liberty-loan drive a success, it was, after all, the work of the banks of the country that put us "over the top" every time there was a drive. In the prosecution of that work they have used their resources in carrying the installment payments of those who were unable to pay for their bonds in full, and often they have done so at a loss in connection with the use of the funds thus employed. They have had to employ extra clerks and they have been obliged to carry on extensive correspondence because of their work in connection with the liberty-loan campaigns.

The extension of the franking privilege I here ask is not a general extension of the franking privilege such as has heretofore been asked for and voted down so often in the Senate and in the other House, but it is an extension of the franking privilege for a single patriotic purpose for a time which will soon expire. The granting of the privilege carries a recognition of all the meritorious work done by the banking institutions of the country in connection with one of the Nation's greatest needs.

I wish to say further, Mr. President, that we shall soon be entering upon another liberty or victory loan drive, in which the work of the banks will be still more necessary than heretofore, and to which they may find it much more difficult to bring as great success as they have achieved in the prior drives. I think that anything that Congress may do to show its recognition of the work done by the banks, or to aid them in the still greater task which they soon must confront, would be in line with the generous spirit which Congress is showing toward all the agencies which have contributed to the successful outcome of the war.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I inquire if the Chair has ruled on the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The Chair was inquiring what is the act referred to in the proposed amendment. The Chair now knows. Does the Senator from Alabama insist on his point of order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer an amendment as a new section, and ask that it be read. It is not in conflict with the amendment which has already been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section as follows:

SEC. —. That when any officer or enlisted man in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps of the United States shall be or shall have been detailed for labor in the building of roads or in other highway construction or repair work which is or was not exclusively necessary to subserve military purposes, the pay of such officers or enlisted men shall be equalized to conform to the compensation paid to civilian employees in the same or like employment; and the sum due to each such officer or enlisted man, as herein provided, shall be computed by the Secretary of Agriculture and paid out of the appropriation herein made and deducted from the allotment made to the State wherein such employment was had and such equalized compensation incurred: Provided, That no enlisted man of the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps of the United States shall be detailed for any such duty except by his own consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a moment. I wish to suggest one little change in the amendment, by striking out the words "which is or was not exclusively necessary to subserve military purposes."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey accept the proposed modification of his amendment?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I accept the modification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago, under a misapprehension as to the status of the matter, not recalling that the House had made an appropriation of $1,000,000 for motor-vehicle truck service, the Senate rejected the proposed amendment offered by the Senate committee which cut down the House appropriations from $1,000,000 to $300,000. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee, beginning on line 11, page 28, and extending to line 10, on page 29, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. KING. I ask for a division.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee, beginning on line 11, page 28, which proposes to strike out lines 11 to 17 and to insert the matter printed in italic, extending down to and including line 10, on page 29, was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. What is the status of the amendment now with reference to the appropriation? What did we do the other day? Did we reduce it?

Mr. KING. We increased it; that is to say, the House made an appropriation of a million dollars. The Senate committee reduced it to $300,000, but that amendment was rejected, the Senate forgetting that it was a substitue for the House provision, so that if the motion which I have now made prevails we will then be called upon to vote upon the Senate committee amendment reducing the amount to $300,000, instead of leaving it at a million dollars.

Mr. BORAH. With that statement, I am in favor of the motion.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator how his amendment will affect the soldier vote?

Mr. KING. I have not taken that into account.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the question recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$300,000" and inserting "$70,000."

In support of that amendment I wish to say that the Postmaster General has stated in a report which has been submitted, and to which attention has been called by at least two Senators, that $70,000 was all that he required; and the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, testifying in regard to this matter, stated, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] reported upon the floor of the Senate a few days ago, that unless he could have $8,000,000 he did not care for anything.

We would really be doing the proper and wise thing to appropriate nothing; but the Postmaster General has stated that he will be satisfied with $70,000, and it seems to me that with that report we ought not to increase it to $300,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, in behalf of the committee I submit that this amendment ought to be adopted in the form in which the committee proposed it and for the amount that the committee suggested. The action of the committee was taken after very careful consideration, much more careful than any Senator on the floor has been able to give the subject now, and not only after a full hearing of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, but after a full understanding of the Postmaster General's views and after hearing the inspectors who investigated this subject.

Let me say, Mr. President, that there were things of which we did not approve in connection with the way this experiment has been made. We believed that the accounts have been padded by the men who were conducting this experiment, without the consent, we hope, of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General; but we wish to have a real, reasonable, and accurate opportunity of measuring what this service is before we finally relegate it to the rear, as we would do by appropriating only $70,000.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposition reported by the Senate committee, and unanimously reported by that committee, embraces two kinds of experiments—first, the kind which the Postmaster General has said that $70,000 would permit him to make, and, second, another and a vastly more important character of experiment, which is the experiment in county rural parcel post express.

The Senate knows, I think, that one of the great objects that were expected to be accomplished by the rural delivery service was handling parcel post matter from the country, the rural sections, to the towns and villages. That service has fallen down absolutely, so much so that if you take the rural routes of the United States, they average one parcel incoming to the towns and seven outgoing from the towns to the rural sections per route throughout the United States. And more than that, We propose to use the greater part of this money to experiment in a number of counties, at least one in each State, to see what a parcel post county express system will do. The people who live in the towns and cities and villages get express facilities. They get parcel post service from the Government, operated on the railroads. It is impossible to put this parcel post service in connection with the mail routes for two reasons:

First, because the carriers do not desire to increase the size and cost of their equipage, and therefore oppose it; second, because it has a tendency to slow the mails, so much so that the patrons themselves do not patronize it and support it as they would do otherwise. Our idea is to try this service separate from the existing mail-route service but as a part of one system as a whole.

In my judgment the Senate would do wisely—I have no interest in the matter except the fact that I have studied it and think I understand it—to stand by what the committee has done and to keep this amount of $300,000 in the bill, so that both of these experiments can be conducted simultaneously.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as the Senator from Georgia has well stated, $1,000,000 was appropriated for this purpose by the House. It came to the Senate and investigations were made, and the profits were found to be not as large as were reported in the estimates made in connection with the automobile routes. The Senate committee thought this matter ought to be tested.

It is not a waste of $300,000. It is simply an investment, which, we think, will return more to the Government than it costs; and, as the Senator has well said, the parcel post is the country express. The reason why the parcel post was adopted was because it was impossible to get the express companies to carry parcel post out into the country. The cities had express, but they could not get to the country. There has been a great demand from the country to have their products, both pro and con, brought to the railroads, carried to the large cities, and have a means of communication between the country and the cities.

The experiment showed an immense profit. I wish to say, in justice to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, that these were estimates of profits made and not actual counts, and inspectors went there and investigated on certain days, and the profits reported by them were less than were estimated.

I am satisfied that there is a great need in the country for service of this kind. There are sections of the country where railroads can never be built; where there are distances of 20, 30, or 40 miles intervening between railroads; where there will be no possibility of ever having railroads. We now have the automobile, and the idea is that the automobile, to some extent, can supply the needs of the country where possibly it will be years before they will have any railroad facilities so that products can be sent by express. In that way the farmers can send their produce to the towns and the town people can send their patronage out to the farmers. In addition to that, a great many farmers have an idea that this can be developed so that the producer can be brought in direct contact with the consumer.

We direct experiments with both of these systems—first, as recommended in the case of the $70,000, immediately around the towns; second, to see if the country express can be made a success in the rural districts. The experiments that have been made have not been satisfactory. Very frequently these routes have paralleled railroad routes and did not extend into sections of the country where there were no railroads. We have drawn provisions that would require these two experiments to be made in the way stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. We require the accounts to be accurately kept. We give them an opportunity to select the routes where the system can be a success, and it seems to me that this experiment should be made. Nearly all the country people with whom I have been in communication—farmers' associations, people that produce—want a country express, and they are nearly unanimous for this service. We can never determine whether or not it can be made a success until the experiment is made. Seventy thousand dollars will not make an adequate experiment. It would only keep up one-fourth of the service that we already operate.

Mr. HARDWICK. We want to try the experiment in every State of the Union. We could hardly do it in one of them for $70,000.

Mr. SWANSON. That amount would merely enable them to keep in operation a few routes that are being operated at present.

The House thought $1,000,000 ought to be given for this purpose. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General thought he could take $8,000,000 and show an immense return to the Government in the way of profits. This is not money wasted. This is a business proposition, to see if by experimenting with $300,000 you can not add to the Post Office Department a system of country express, bringing the producer and the consumer in close contact, and thus make it a profit, and not a loss, to the Government.

We do not want them to come in here next year and say that they have not had enough money for the purpose of making adequate experiments. I would be willing to vote the amount contained in the House provision, because I believe a million-dollar expenditure would show $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 of profit to the Government. The only difference of opinion has been as to whether the routes we have had have been as profitable as claimed; but I am satisfied that in the aggregate the experiment has shown that the money spent last year has brought in as much as was expended.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has correctly stated that the Senate amendment was adopted unanimously by the subcommittee; but I feel that it is fair to state to the Senate that I had no faith, and have none now, or very little, in this provision. I am willing, however, under the language that we put in, to try this experiment for another year.

The fact of the matter is that $300,000 was appropriated last year for this very purpose, and the report of the Post Office Department as to the operation of this system by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General was simply condemnatory in almost every particular. No experiment that was at all reliable was made. The representatives of the Post Office Department appeared before us, and said that they could establish seven routes at $10,000 per route, which would demonstrate whether or not this thing was feasible; but the Senator from Georgia and other Senators felt that we ought to extend the experiment a little further than under the provisions of the old law, and I finally consented to adopt that proposition. The Senate ought to know, however, that this experiment as it was tried last year was a failure, an ignominious failure; and it was bolstered up by reports from the carriers to the people who administered it for the purpose of deceiving the Congress. There was no question whatever about that. There could be no other purpose in it than to make it appear that it was a more useful and valuable institution than the facts actually disclosed.

I voted for this provision in the first place, a year ago, because I thought there was a great possible field at least for the operation of a sort of truck express. The more we have learned about it, the more the facts have been disclosed to us, the more I am convinced that it never can succeed; but still I am perfectly willing to continue the test under the restrictions placed upon it by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, although I preferred in the first place that we should grant simply the $70,000, because the Postmaster General said he could make an experiment with that so as to test it out and know what to do in the future. I still think, however, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] opened the field a little bit, and perhaps presented another aspect which ought to be disclosed through experiments.

Therefore I am willing that the provision of the Senate committee shall be adopted, and I shall support it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator, if this plan shall be carried on to any very great extent, whether it will not have the effect, first, of tremendously increasing the number of Federal employees, multiplying to a large extent the expenses of the Post Office Department, and ultimately putting hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of people under the civil service; and will it not also result in curbing the construction of interurban electric-railroad systems, which in the past have done so much to link rural communities with the cities and rural communities with each other, and hurt the railroads, which are now struggling for existence, struggling for enough revenue—not only the large railroad systems, but the smaller, interurban railroad systems?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am not so much interested in that; that is, I am not disturbed over it, because I am confident that unless this experiment proves that this is a really valuable facility in the interest of the people, it will not be continued; and if the demonstration shows that it is needed in the interest of the people of the country, I am not particularly interested in what happens to some other instrumentality of commerce. But, convinced as I am now that if it were left to me alone I should say that a demonstration has already been made sufficient to satisfy me that this scheme never can succeed, if I had time enough to disclose the facts that were brought out I perhaps could convince others that that was true; and yet, being finite, and very finite, and limited in my vision into the future, I am still willing to continue the experiment for another year under the restrictions we have thrown around it. The majority of the committee thought $300,000 was not too much—that is the same appropriation that we made last year—and I therefore consented that that might go in, although I wanted the amount made $70,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. A moment ago the Senator made the statement that the experiment heretofore had proven a failure. Will the Senator tell us in what respect it has proven a failure, and why, in the mind of the department, it was a failure?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it would take a long while, but I will say in brief that it was a failure because it did not answer any useful purpose, the useful purpose for which it was instituted. The department, or those immediately in charge, the carriers, padded the reports of what they were doing. They carried mail in this way that ought to have been sent by post, and that was paid for by the Government to go by post They put those in as returns of the system, in order to make it appear less of a financial loss than it really was. Furthermore, it was not instituted in the places where possibly there could have been a good test of it. There were many things that entered into it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Are the people who padded the reports still at large?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are still at large; and the singular part of it is that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General did not think that of much consequence anyway, because after they got their reports of receipts all in they commenced by a series of arbitrary reductions to cut out this much and that much, 33⅓ per cent for one thing and 50 per cent for another, with the hope that finally they would get to a basis that might be approximately correct, but with no foundation of fact as to what the cost was or what the receipts were. We have tried to prevent that in this bill, and to get an experiment that would be a faithful exposition of what the operation really is.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. I think the Senator from Michigan might also have added that while it was reported to the committee that the experiment was a financial success, it developed that it was only a financial success because the first-class mail was diverted from other means of transportation and carried in these trucks, very frequently delaying the delivery of the mail, and I think the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General agreed that without carrying first-class mail it can not be made a financial success.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In answer to the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from Michigan said a moment ago that the people who had padded these returns were still at large. Can the Senator tell me whether or not they are still in the employ of the Government?

Mr. WEEKS. As far as I have any information, they are in the employ of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Are they likely to carry on these new experiments, and report on the money we are giving in this bill?

Mr. WEEKS. I am not sure about that. I should perhaps say to the Senate that the Postmaster General and the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General are not at all in harmony in connection with this system, except that the Postmaster General is trying to eliminate those people who are guilty of padding the returns. A specific case with reference to padding of returns is that of the transporting of mail between Baltimore and Gettysburg, Pa. The return indicated a very large amount of first-class mail carried, but the actual experiments developed that there were some days when there was none, and the average amount carried was only one-tenth of that reported by the carriers. Who was responsible for that I do not know, except the carrier himself on some kind of basis had made a false return.

Mr. HARDWICK. May I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, as I believe the Senator will agree, that I am sure we have safeguarded that situation as much as we can.

Mr. WEEKS. I should have said I voted for the appropriation of $300,000, because I thought the experiment had been so badly done and safeguards had been placed around it by the committee of such a character that as long as they had undertaken it we felt we had better have a fair and businesslike experiment made and returns made to Congress next year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to submit a motion to suspend the rules, if this is the proper time to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is as good as any.

Mr. BORAH. Before making the motion to suspend the rules, I will offer an amendment to the bill by adding a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," passed and approved June 15, 1917; also that section 4 of the act passed and approved May 16, 1918, known as the second espionage act, be repealed.

I offer that as a new section to the bill. I do not care to discuss it if I can have a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I now move, in accordance with notice which I gave January 31, 1919, for a suspension of the rules, as follows:

I move that the provision of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI, prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, be suspended for the purpose of offering the following amendment—

Which amendment, Mr. President, I have just stated, and I do not think it necessary to restate it in order to get the motion before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. The question is, Shall the rule be suspended for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to offer his amendment?

Mr. BORAH. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I want to make a point of order against the motion to suspend the rule for the reason that we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement on this bill, and we have agreed unanimously to proceed with it through the regular parliamentary stages to its passage. My point is that if we can change the unanimous-consent rule under which we are operating to make this amendment in order, we can change the rule for any other purpose and make any other proposition in order. It is a violation absolutely of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rules of the Senate are not set aside by the unanimous-consent agreement. The point of order is overruled. The yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I understand the amendment of the Senator from Idaho is to repeal the so-called espionage law and amendments thereto.

Mr. BORAH. This is simply a motion to suspend the rule. If the motion prevails, then I will offer an amendment to provide for the repeal of section 1 of the first espionage act and section 4 of the second espionage act, which have reference alone to the power of the Postmaster General to exclude certain matter from the mail.

Mr. ASHURST. I always differ from the distinguished Senator from Idaho with reluctance, and I am rather amazed that such an amendment should be offered. Is the question debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, the question is not debatable.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is whether the Senate will suspend the rule. If it does, then the Senator from Arizona will have 10 minutes. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], but upon this question I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

Mr. KNOX. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The roll call resulted—yeas 25, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the question, the yeas are 25 and the nays 39. So the Senate refuses to suspend the rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the following amendment to be inserted at the close of the bill.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 1. The office of postmaster in each class shall hereafter be a nonpolitical office, and shall be within the classified civil service, and appointments thereto shall be made in accordance with the civil-service rules and, so far as practicable, by promotion, or transfer, upon merit, without regard to politics, from the employees of the Post Office Department, subject to the permanent civil-service regulations and requirements.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was in hopes that the Senator from Alabama would not make a point of order. I suppose the point of order is good. It was the purpose of the amendment merely to establish the merit system instead of mere partisan politics in the appointment of these officials.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was absent the other day when the provision found on page 15, which is an amendment reported by the committee, was under consideration, and I think it was adopted in a pro forma way by the Senate. I refer to the provision commencing on line 7, page 15. The amendment authorizes the Postmaster General to contract in his discretion for pneumatic mail tube service in the city of New York, and so forth. I move to reconsider the action of the Senate by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment was agreed to four or five days ago, and it is too late for a motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know when it was agreed to.

Mr. KING. It was agreed to several days ago.

Mr. BANKHEAD. About a week ago.

Mr. KING. I can say the amendment was accepted several days ago. I did not learn until a few days after it had been accepted by the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press his motion to reconsider. I have always been opposed to pneumatic tubes and always voted against them; but it seems to me this is a very harmless provision. There was a difference of opinion as to whether the pneumatic tube is a failure or a success. This simply leaves it in the discretion of the Postmaster General to find out whether it is a success and to simply keep the tubes until the experiment is absolutely completed and it is determined whether it is a success or not. It is done without cost to the Government. I see no reason why the tubes should now be taken out. We might reconsider our action and afterwards find it was a mistake not to have the tubes. They might be utilized and I see no reason why they should not be kept there; in other words, I see no reason why this provision should not be retained in the bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that when the bill was passed about a year ago, the President vetoed it because of the provision in the bill providing for pneumatic tubes. It seems to me in the light of the action of the President and in view of the opposition of the Postmaster General, it would be very unwise and improper for us to insert it in the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know whether the Postmaster General is opposed to it or not. I do not know anything about that. I have never heard from him about it. I know I fought and antagonized the appropriation for pneumatic tubes. I did not think it was a success. I fought it when I was in the House and always believed we spent more money than was justified by the good we got out of it, but there is a difference of opinion. Commissions have investigated it. I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] investigated it and thought it ought to be experimented with. All the objection is that the Postmaster General is opposed to it, and I concur with him in it. This authorizes him, if the mail can not be more economically carried without these tubes, to carry it over the pneumatic tubes. The second provision is that pending this experiment for a year or two the tubes shall be kept in their present place without expense to the Government. What harm can be done by this provision?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I find that the amendment was agreed to last Friday, a week ago yesterday, and there was no suggestion of a motion to reconsider within the time prescribed by the rule. Therefore the motion now comes too late.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to ask for a separate vote on the amendment in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What amendments have been reserved?

Mr. THOMAS. I reserve the right to make a point of order against sections 5 and 6.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to reserve the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] to the road provision with reference to the use of convict labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in all amendments not reserved.

Mr. KING. If it is permissible under the rules, I also reserve the right to raise the point of order in the Senate with respect to the amendment found on page 15, known as the pneumatic-tube amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole that are not reserved. They are concurred in, without objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against sections 5, 6, and 8—that they are general legislation attached to an appropriation bill and are, therefore, obnoxious to the rule of the Senate upon that subject.

Mr. SWANSON. This specific question was debated at length and passed on yesterday by the Senate; the point of order was overruled after full debate and, on a yea-and-nay vote, the Senate sustained that decision.

There has also been some question as to whether or not a point of order which had once been raised and decided as in Committee of the Whole could be renewed in the Senate. There has been a conflict of opinion as to that; but the Chair has formerly held—I do not know whether that decision has been subsequently reversed—that under the rule the point of order must be made as in Committee of the Whole. The late Senator Clarke, of Arkansas, at one time took the ground that when a point of order had been decided as in Committee of the Whole the matter had been finally determined; and, acting as President pro tempore, he declined to consider a renewal of the point of order in the Senate. The raising of the point of order now has been precluded by the action of the Senate when it passed judgment upon the matter on yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announced as to the pending bill on yesterday that the Chair would not pass upon points of order or upon any question involved in the road controversy, for the reasons then given. So it is now up to the Senate to decide this question.

Mr. THOMAS. If the matter is to be decided by a vote of the Senate, of course I know what the decision will be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course, it would be an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and would be decided the same way. It would not make the slightest difference in the world.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I withdraw the point of order, Mr. President, as, of course, it is a foregone conclusion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Everybody knows that. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] reserved for a separate vote an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to an amendment beginning in line 3, after the words "Providing further," to strike out from the House text the words down to and including the words "District of Columbia," in line 7, and proposed to insert an item relative to the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I raise the point of order against this amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. It is not general legislation.

Mr. KING. I ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the amendments will be ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to offer in the Senate an amendment which I offered as in Committee of the Whole on yesterday, which was lost by a tie vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 15——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will have to move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to, if he is going to offer his amendment to the amendment of the committee. His amendment is out of order at present. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] withdrew his point of order, and the Chair put the question to the Senate on the amendment, and the amendment was concurred in. Now, the Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment to the committee amendment, but the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will have to be reconsidered if the amendment to the amendment is to be presented by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Then, I offer the amendment, Mr. President, in the form of a new section, to come in at the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

SEC. —. That any money expended by the United States Government in the construction of military roads in any State to and from (but not within) any cantonment, aviation field, or any property used for military or naval purposes, shall first be deducted from the amount apportioned to such State under this appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the purpose of again bringing this amendment to the attention of the Senate is because of the manner in which it was voted upon on yesterday and the result of that vote, and also to call attention to the desirability of equalizing the advantages to be derived by the several States under the provisions of this act.

In many of the States where military establishments were set up there were many miles of enduring roads built wholly by soldier labor and paid for wholly out of the military appropriations. The men who built those roads had enlisted to fight the Hun, but they became much more familiar with the concrete mixer than with the machine gun. While I am not questioning the military utility of the roads thus built, I do know that they extend over many miles in length; that they are wholly suitable for roads proposed to be created in this bill; and that, if they are to be taken over into the systems which the States thus benefited will create under this measure, it is only a matter of equity that those States should have the cost of those roads deducted from their allotment under this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not catch the reading of the amendment, and I ask to have it again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. MOSES.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have voted that amendment down on one or two occasions, and I hope it will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. MOSES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when the name of Mr. MOSES was called). The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] desires to have the announcement made that he is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN], and therefore would withhold his vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I observe that that Senator has not voted, and I transfer my pair with him to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—20.

France	Kendrick	New	Sterling
Frelinghuysen	Kenyon	Norris	Sutherland
Gore	La Follette	Page	Wadsworth
Jones, Wash.	Lenroot	Penrose	Warren

Dillingham	King	Robinson
Fall	Knox	Saulsbury
Fernald	Lodge	Sherman

So Mr. MOSES's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there was an amendment reserved by me. Will that amendment be read in its order or what status will it occupy? It is to be acted upon again in the Senate, as I understand. Unless it is acted upon in the Senate favorably, it will not become a part of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will have to reconsider the vote. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I could not understand the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair said the vote will have to be reconsidered whereby the amendment was adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has not been adopted in the Senate. I reserved it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that; and then the Senator went out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not go out, Mr. President. The amendment was not called up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, without objection, to make the record straight, the vote whereby the amendment of the committee was concurred in is reconsidered. The Secretary will state the amendment reserved by the Senator from Georgia for a separate vote in the Senate.

The SECRETARY. There was added at the end of section 6, after the word "marines," in line 15, the following amendment offered by Mr. KIRBY:

And provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended for improvements whereon convict labor is employed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in a number of the States convicts have been put upon the public roads. In my own State I had the privilege of breaking up the convict lease system and turning the convicts over to the counties, where, under the county authorities, their entire time is given in the fresh air and under humane treatment to work upon the public roads. Our public road system is based upon the use of convicts. We have found that is the very best way that the convicts can be handled, and all the friends of reform in the treatment of convicts, especially in the States of mild climate, agree that it is by far the best way to handle them.

Of course, in the State of Georgia and in all States where there are unemployed laborers who desire work, there will be a chance afforded them to work on this enterprise. A road may stretch for quite a number of miles, and to exclude the use of any convicts on any part of the roads would be unwise and would seriously interfere with the existing mode of construction. No exclusion of the unemployed who desire work would take place, I feel absolutely certain; but to exclude entirely the use of convict labor in those States, especially in States where the climate is mild, where all the convicts are used on road work, would handicap those States in doing this work. In my own State it would be impossible at this time to employ free labor to do the road work. There is not labor sufficient to do the work now in the State, and many demands for labor are made in the State that can not be filled. There are no unemployed in the State, and I do not believe that there will be any unemployed this year in the State in which I live, of the class of unskilled labor that will do this work. I think we can trust the State authorities in this matter to handle it in the spirit of the bill. If this amendment is insisted upon, a number of them will be handicapped in their road work.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I presented this amendment because I thought it ought to become a part of the bill. We have talked here about improving conditions for the benefit of the returning soldier; we have said that he should be given the preference in the construction of these improvements for which the money is provided by this appropriation; and, if we are going to permit convicts to work on these roads to the exclusion of other labor, we are in effect obtaining this money from the Government under false pretenses. That is about what it amounts to.

The condition in my State is that we work the convicts on the State farm. I helped to destroy the convict lease system in my State, which was an outrage against labor, decency, and humanity there, and very scandalous conditions attached to the operation of it, and inhuman treatment resulted to the convicts employed under the contract. We work the roads by taxation in my State, and here we tax the people and give this money back to the State to improve the roads. I say that when you put a convict on the road you deprive the man who has not committed an offense, and who is not a criminal, and who has paid the taxes, of the opportunity to go out there and work on the road and get some of this money back. You deprive him of the opportunity for employment.

The convict on the farm is subject to the State's control. He is not required to work any more than he ought to be required to work. Nobody has any interest in doing that; and he can not produce enough crops to affect the price of crops. He therefore does not come in competition with the farmer. If you put him on the road, he does deprive the free man, who has paid his taxes and has not violated the law, of that opportunity for employment, and comes in competition directly with his labor.

I do not think that ought to be encouraged under a bill that is proposed to bring relief to the discharged soldier and give him an opportunity for employment upon his return home.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in the State of North Carolina we work convicts on the farm, and then the counties also work their convicts. That does not interfere at all with free labor. We work free labor and convicts. They do not work together. The convict gang works one part of a road, and the free labor works another part of the road, so that under this very bill which we propose to amend here we have used money to build the great highways through my State partly by free labor and partly by convict labor.

If we get this money we will use the soldiers, but at the same time we will not have enough free labor to build the roads unless we can use our convicts. If we send the convicts back to the penitentiary, or send them back to the farm, we can do scarcely any road building.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, we are proceeding on the theory that we will need this authority to give the soldiers employment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, certainly we will need the North Carolina soldiers. We will work them on the road; we will pay them the salary and work them without regard to the convicts. The convicts will do their part, and the free labor will be paid, and every one of them will be employed.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Can you not under the provisions of this amendment—it was intended in no other way—work the free labor on roads upon which convicts are not employed? You can say, "We will build this road, and this road, and this road with free labor."

Mr. OVERMAN. This will not interfere with the free labor. It will not interfere with the soldiers. We will give employment to every one of them, as we have been doing for two years under the appropriation we have and under the law to which this is amendatory. Now you want to deprive us of the appropriation we got two years ago and stop the convicts from working on the great central highways of the country.

As I say, free labor is not interfered with. There is no competition. There will be no competition. We will work all the soldiers that can be worked and that will accept employment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in the State of Colorado we passed a law allowing 10 days off of a sentence for each month's service in road building, and the result was marvelous. The men who were convicts willingly, eagerly sought to be placed on the road. They did the work more rapidly than the ordinary person employed. It made them healthy. It gave them strength, so that when they left the prison, instead of having the prison pallor upon them, they were vigorous, strong, and could readily get employment. It has been a wonderful success in that State and has resulted in no opposition whatever to the convicts being used upon the State roads in the State of Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator should also state that convict labor in the State which we represent is devoted to road building under what is called the honor system. The convicts in Colorado work in squads, without guards. They select their own foremen. They are responsible for their return to prison whenever called upon. They are paid wages, the same wages which others draw. Their work is excellent, just as good as can be found anywhere; and the effect upon the morale of the prison population has been simply wonderful.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state, further, that although they have no guards—that while they are working in the daytime there is nobody watching over them except an unarmed superintendent, and at night no one but a guard who is himself a convict—we have no more escapes than occurred in the prisons before the time when that law was adopted.

On account of the great benefit which it has been to the State, it seems to me that that should be taken into consideration when we pass on this matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I simply desire to say a word.

It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will have this effect if it is adopted: You are going to take these convicts off the road. Then what are you going to do with them? You must return them to the walls of the penitentiary or somewhere else where they can be employed, and necessarily you will put them to manufacturing different products for the market, thereby putting them in direct competition with skilled free labor. Now, does anybody want to do that?

That is all I want to say. I am against this amendment. I think it is very bad indeed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want to state that the facts in reference to North Carolina, as stated by the Senator from that State, are practically the same that exist in my State. There was opposition to the use of convict labor to any extent upon what we call the State farm. There was unrest among some, whether well-founded or not, on the ground that the products of this labor would come in competition with the products put upon the market by free labor.

It is now the universal custom in my State to put the convicts upon the roads. We have the taxing system there, and the convicts are employed in road building, not to the exclusion of free labor; and under this good-roads bill free labor can be employed to supplement the convict labor without any detriment whatever to the caste of those of free labor who do the work. If the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should be agreed to, it would necessarily force us to employ them only on the roads for which the State itself had appropriated. We could not use them in conjunction with this appropriation to carry out the coordinated work that is here contemplated. It would demoralize the whole system. It would cause us not to coordinate. We could not have anything like the perfect system that could be worked out otherwise if this amendment should prevail.

I sincerely hope the amendment will be defeated. It will serve no good purpose whatever, but will create confusion.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss this amendment. I rise simply for the purpose of expressing my regret that I was not here to vote on suspending the rules for the consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I was called out of the Chamber on account of the illness of a friend, and was unable to be present to vote for that amendment, of which I very much approve, and I am sorry that it was not adopted.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I want to say just a word with regard to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

New Mexico was the pioneer in this respect. As a Territory she first began in the United States the work of using convicts upon the public roads. We had quite a problem in handling our convicts. We did not know how to use them in any other way, so as not to bring them in competition with free labor; and so New Mexico first established the system of using her convicts in public road building.

I sincerely hope that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to have a division on it, anyway. The Senate all voted for it the other day.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, as there will be no roll call on the passage of this bill, and as there are certain features of the bill which I can not bring myself to approve, I desire the RECORD to show that I voted against the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. WEEKS conferees on the part of the Senate.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the second deficiency bill, H. R. 15140.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

RECESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I now move that the Senate take a recess until 2.45 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. The Roosevelt memorial exercises are to take place in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 3 o'clock, and I ask that the Senate recess until 2.45 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Sunday, February 9, 1919, at 2.45 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 8, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and ever blessed God, whose mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, we bless Thee for that providence which has upheld, sustained, and guided us through all the past. Continue, we beseech Thee, Thy blessings unto us that we come more and more into Thy kingdom under the leadership of the world's Great Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday were read and approved.

NATIONAL CEMETERY IN FRANCE.

Mr. FOSTER and Mr. KELLEY of Michigan rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] rise?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter written to the Secretary of War by one of the leading lawyers of the State of Michigan, urging the establishment of a national cemetery in France.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the letter referred to:

JANUARY 24, 1919.

Hon. NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BAKER: I am informed by the Secretary to the President that a letter which I wrote to the President on December 27 has been referred to you. This letter related to the establishment in Europe of an American cemetery, wherein the soldiers of this country who died in Europe may be interred in a proper and decent manner. I am also informed that some Congressman has introduced a resolution on this subject, but I have not that resolution before me, and therefore do not know just what it is.

The idea I have in mind is this, as I think was fully stated in my letter to the President, that we ought to obtain two or three thousand acres of land somewhere in France or Belgium, preferably in France, that could be converted into a cemetery which would be large enough for all the deceased soldiers over there, and have their remains transferred there as soon as possible. While the Government has said, as I understand it, that it will cause to be shipped home the remains of such soldiers as their relatives desire to have brought home for burial, yet I am satisfied that many will feel, as did ex-President Roosevelt, that they would not prefer to have the remains brought to the United States for burial, and indeed it would be an almost impossible thing, and a gruesome one as well, to attempt to bring the remains of very many to this country after they have already been buried for several months.

If anything is to be done along this line it ought to be done promptly. Yourself and myself, as lawyers, know that we would have no right to purchase land in a foreign country even for burial purposes without some sanction by the Government of that country allowing us to do so, and a part of what we would need would be a provision by which we would have supervision of the property and the right to travel to and from it with such soldiers, servants, and agents as we might see fit to employ, and, of course, this would be a perpetual right, as the cemetery would be supposed to be perpetual. Then again, if the right were granted us by the Government of France we might have difficulty in getting title to the property that we needed or wanted, as some would perhaps refuse to sell, and others would hold us up for an excessive price, and, therefore, the only seemingly practical way would be for the French Government, or whatever country we might want to locate it in, by proper law passed, to purchase for us these lands, and, of course, would have the right to put in the act a condemnation clause where it became necessary. I would suggest that this cemetery be located not far from one of the battle fields where our boys fought so valiantly, and that the matter be taken up at once so that when spring comes we could begin transferring the remains of our boys into this cemetery. We have a large number of soldiers over there now who might be used for the purpose of aiding in this work, and I take it we could find plenty of people over there whom we could employ to assist in this work. In other words, it ought to be done quickly and before the markers which have already been put up to mark the graves have been destroyed or decay. I should judge from what I hear of the resolution which has been presented in Congress that the contemplation was to have several burying grounds. Of course, that might be necessary, but it would take legislation in other lands wherever the burying grounds were located, and it occurs to me that it would be more practical to have it all in one place, as above suggested, and the work handled along the lines as above suggested.

You probably have seen the cemetery at Chattanooga, wherein the remains of many of the Union soldiers are buried who fell on the battle fields near there. When I first saw that cemetery I was impressed with the idea that so many men were buried there when their relatives and friends lived in the same country and might have had their remains taken home for burial, but it is very certain that there would be a large number of our American boys whose remains would not be sent back to the United States; many of them have no friends who would ask to have them sent back home, as we certainly ought to honor them, as well as honor our country, by arranging for a decent burial place, and I know of no better way than the one I have suggested. I would, therefore, suggest that if the resolution already offered in Congress does not provide for one central cemetery, as above suggested, that it be amended accordingly. I am satisfied that the people of this country without exception would be pleased to have this work done, and that we would have no trouble when once it was understood throughout the country, and the matter should be carried through Congress without delay, because every Congressman would be deluged with letters if people knew this was up before them to have this carried through.

Please pardon me for taking so much of your time on this matter, but I deem it very essential and important, and, as above suggested, something ought to be done just as soon as possible. If you have any suggestions of where I can help you get this through Congress by writing the Members of Congress from this State, with all of whom I am very well acquainted, I would be glad to take it up.

Respectfully, yours, ———— ————.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12996. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 13232. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, between Traill County., N. Dak., and Polk County, Minn.;

H. R. 12997. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13273. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto, approved October 6, 1917; and

H. R. 1607. An act for the relief of David E. Gray.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5534. An act granting the consent of Congress to Oliver Cabana, jr., Myron S. Hall, E. G. Connette, William F. MacGlashan, John H. Bradley, and M. A. Hurt, to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12996. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 13273. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto approved October 6, 1917;

H. R. 13353. An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies;

H. R. 1607. An act for the relief of David E. Gray;

H. R. 12997. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio; and

H. R. 13232. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, between Traill County, N. Dak., and Polk County, Minn.

DIGEST AND MANUAL.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 557 (H. Doc. No. 1779).

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document 2,000 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, the same to be bound and distributed through the folding room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman propose that these be put to the credit of the Members?

Mr. FOSTER. It is proposed to distribute them through the folding room.

Mr. DYER. Is that the understanding? I know we have had trouble in the past to get even a copy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

E. F. KEISTER.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, House resolution 547, to pay the clerk of the late Representative ROBBINS salary for one month.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 547.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to E. F. Keister, clerk to EDWARD E. ROBBINS, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania at the time of his death, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUBEY. I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request relating to Lincoln's birthday, and I ask to proceed for not more than one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, for a number of years my colleague from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] has read Lincoln's Gettysburg speech on Lincoln's birthday. I am sure my colleagues will all regret that this year, on account of illness, he will not be able to perform that duty. I believe the custom should be continued, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker of the House shall designate some Member to read, after the approval of the Journal on the 12th, Lincoln's Gettysburg speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Speaker designate somebody to read Lincoln's Gettysburg speech. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 3 o'clock p. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 3 o'clock p. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOUR OF MEETING MONDAY, FEBRUARY 10.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday, February 10.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday, February 10. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1037).

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk proceeded to read the conference report.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report, and ask that the statement be read in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 5, 10, 35, 37, 38, 50, 54, 55, 58, 59, 112, 120, 121, 122, 123, 127, 131, 140, 186, 187, 189, 208, 211, 218, 222, 223, 235, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 329, 330, 332, 333, 352, 362, 377, 378, 379, 381, 394, 405, 407, 410, 444, 445, 488, 490, 491, 493, 498, 499, 500, 509, 516, 518, 519, 539, 540, 541, 553, 559, 587, 588, and 594.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 7, 8, 9, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 56, 57, 60, 61, 62, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, 79, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 119, 124, 126, 128, 130, 132, 133, 134, 136, 137, 138, 139, 141, 142, 143, 145, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 170, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 181, 182, 183, 184, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 209, 210, 212, 213, 217, 219, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 255, 256, 258, 260, 262, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 271, 278, 279, 280, 281, 283, 284, 286, 287, 288, 290, 291, 293, 294, 295, 296, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 326, 327, 328, 331, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 342, 343, 344, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 353, 354, 355, 356, 358, 359, 360, 361, 363, 364, 365, 366, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 380, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 388, 389, 390, 392, 396, 398, 400, 401, 402, 403, 406, 408, 409, 411, 412, 413, 415, 416, 419, 422, 423, 427, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 468, 470, 471, 472, 473, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 481, 482, 483, 486, 487, 489, 494, 496, 497, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 517, 520, 521, 522, 524, 525, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 536, 537, 538, 543, 545, 546, 547, 549, 551, 552, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 560, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 579, 580, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 589, 590, 591, 592, and 593; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 1, line 5 of the bill, strike out the comma after the word "partnerships"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The term 'paid,' for the purposes of the deductions and credits under this title, means 'paid or accrued' or 'paid or incurred,' and the terms 'paid or incurred' and 'paid or accrued' shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed under section 212."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"DIVIDENDS.

"SEC. 201. (a) That the term 'dividend' when used in this title (except in paragraph (10) of subdivision (a) of section 234) means (1) any distribution made by a corporation, other than a personal service corporation, to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property or in stock of the corporation, out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or (2) any such distribution made by a personal service corporation out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, and prior to January 1, 1918.

"(b) Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or any year thereafter shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or, in the case of a personal service corporation, from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits; but any earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed.

"(c) A dividend paid in stock of the corporation shall be considered income to the amount of the earnings or profits distributed. Amounts distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

"(d) If any stock dividend (1) is received by a taxpayer between January 1 and November 1, 1918, both dates inclusive, or (2) is during such period bona fide authorized or declared, and entered on the books of the corporation, and is received by a taxpayer after November 1, 1918, and before the expiration of 30 days after the passage of this act, then such dividend shall, in the manner provided in section 206, be taxed to the recipient at the rates prescribed by law for the years in which the corporation accumulated the earnings or profits from which such dividend was paid, but the dividend shall be deemed to have been paid from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits.

"(e) Any distribution made during the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years; but any distribution made during the remainder of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated between the close of the preceding taxable year and the date of distribution, to the extent of such earnings or profits, and if the books of the corporation do not show the amount of such earnings or profits, the earnings or profits for the accounting period within which the distribution was made shall be deemed to have been accumulated ratably during such period."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"(b) When property is exchanged for other property, the property received in exchange shall for the purpose of determining gain or loss be treated as the equivalent of cash to the amount of its fair market value, if any; but when in connection with the reorganization, merger, or consolidation of a corporation a person receives in place of stock or securities owned by him new stock or securities of no greater aggregate par or face value, no gain or loss shall be deemed to occur from the exchange, and the new stock or securities received shall be treated as taking the place of the stock, securities, or property exchanged.

"When in the case of any such reorganization, merger, or consolidation the aggregate par or face value of the new stock or securities received is in excess of the aggregate par or face value of the stock or securities exchanged, a like amount in par or face value of the new stock or securities received shall be treated as taking the place of the stock or securities exchanged, and the amount of the excess in par or face value shall be treated as a gain to the extent that the fair market value of the new stock or securities is greater than the cost (or if acquired prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date) of the stock or securities exchanged."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"NET LOSSES.

"SEC. 204. (a) That as used in this section the term 'net loss' refers only to net losses resulting from either (1) the operation of any business regularly carried on by the taxpayer, or (2) the bona fide sale by the taxpayer of plant, buildings, machinery, equipment or other facilities, constructed, installed, or acquired by the taxpayer on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war; and when so resulting means the excess of the deductions allowed by law (excluding in the case of corporations amounts allowed as a deduction under paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234) over the sum of the gross income plus any interest received free from taxation both under this title and under Title III.

"(b) If for any taxable year beginning afted October 31, 1918, and ending prior to January 1, 1920, it appears upon the production of evidence satisfactory to the commissioner that any taxpayer has sustained a net loss, the amount of such net loss shall under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary be deducted from the net income of the taxpayer for the preceding taxable year; and the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for such preceding taxable year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252. If such net loss is in excess of the net income for such preceding taxable year, the amount of such excess shall under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary be allowed as a deduction in computing the net income for the succeeding taxable year.

"(c) The benefit of this section shall be allowed to the members of a partnership and the beneficiaries of an estate or trust under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"FISCAL YEAR WITH DIFFERENT RATES.

"SEC. 205. (a) That if a taxpayer makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, his tax under this title for the first taxable year shall be the sum of: (1) The same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917 and under Title I of the revenue act of 1917, which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates for the calendar year 1918 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period: Provided, That in the case of a personal service corporation the amount to be paid shall be only that specified in clause (1).

"Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917, and by Title I of the revenue act of 1917, shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by this act, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of such tax imposed by this act, or, in the case of a personal service corporation, the amount specified in clause (1), the excess shall be credited or refunded in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

"(b) If a taxpayer makes a return for a fiscal year beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the tax under this title for such fiscal year shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified for the calendar year 1918 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified for the calendar year 1919 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the entire period.

"(c) If a fiscal year of a partnership begins in 1917 and ends in 1918 or begins in 1918 and ends in 1919, then notwithstanding the provisions of subdivision (b) of section 218, (1) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year begins shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership net income (determined under the law applicable to such year) equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year, and (2) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year ends shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership net income (determined under the law applicable to such calendar year) equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year: Provided, That in the case of a personal service corporation with respect to a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the amount specified in clause (1) shall not be subject to normal tax."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"PARTS OF INCOME SUBJECT TO RATES FOR DIFFERENT YEARS.

"SEC. 206. That whenever parts of a taxpayer's income are subject to rates for different calendar years, the part subject to the rates for the most recent calendar year shall be placed in the lower brackets of the rate schedule provided in this title, the part subject to the rates for the next preceding calendar year shall be placed in the next higher brackets of the rate schedule applicable to that year, and so on until the entire net income has been accounted for. In determining the income, any deductions, exemptions or credits of a kind not plainly and properly chargeable against the income taxable at rates for a preceding year shall first be applied against the income subject to rates for the most recent calendar year; but any balance thereof shall be applied against the income subject to the rates of the next preceding year or years until fully allowed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following inclosed in parentheses: "including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and, on page 14, line 19 of the bill, after "business," insert a comma and the following: "including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 20, line 3, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "12 months" and insert "30 days"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"(12) (a) At the time of filing return for the taxable year 1918 a taxpayer may file a claim in abatement based on the fact that he has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition) resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for such taxable year, or from the actual payment after the close of such taxable year of rebates in pursuance of contracts entered into during such year upon sales made during such year. In such case payment of the amount of the tax covered by such claim shall not be required until the claim is decided, but the taxpayer shall accompany his claim with a bond in double the amount of the tax covered by the claim, with sureties satisfactory to the commissioner, conditioned for the payment of any part of such tax found to be due, with interest. If any part of such claim is disallowed, then the remainder of the tax due shall on notice and demand by the collector be paid by the taxpayer with interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month from the time the tax would have been due had no such claim been filed. If it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such substantial loss has been sustained, then in computing the tax imposed by this title the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income. (b) If no such claim is filed, but it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable year 1919 the taxpayer has sustained a substantial loss of the character above described, then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for the taxable year 1918 and the tax imposed by this title for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(e) Personal service corporations shall not be subject to taxation under this title, but the individual stockholders thereof shall be taxed in the same manner as the members of partnerships. All the provisions of this title relating to partnerships and the members thereof shall so far as practicable apply to personal service corporations and the stockholders thereof: Provided, That for the purpose of this subdivision amounts distributed by a personal service corporation during its taxable year shall be accounted for by the distributees; and any portion of the net income remaining undistributed at the close of its taxable year shall be accounted for by the stockholders of such corporation at the close of its taxable year in proportion to their respective shares."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 23, line 10, of the Senate engrossed amendments after "administration" insert "or settlement"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 23, line 14, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "or" and insert "of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "distributed, such corporation shall not be subject to the tax imposed by section 230, but the stockholders or members thereof shall be subject to taxation under this title in the same manner as provided in subdivision (e) of section 218 in the case of stockholders of a personal service corporation, except that the tax imposed by Title III shall be deducted from the net income of the corporation before the computation of the proportionate share of each stockholder or member"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 118: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"CREDIT FOR TAXES.

"SEC. 222. (a) That the tax computed under Part II of this title shall be credited with:

"(1) In the case of a citizen of the United States, the amount of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid during the taxable year to any foreign country, upon income derived from sources therein, or to any possession of the United States; and

"(2) In the case of a resident of the United States, the amount of any such taxes paid during the taxable year to any possession of the United States; and

"(3) In the case of an alien resident of the United States who is a citizen or subject of a foreign country, the amount of any such taxes paid during the taxable year to such country, upon income derived from sources therein, if such country, in imposing such taxes allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States residing in such country; and

"(4) In the case of any such individual who is a member of a partnership or a beneficiary of an estate or trust, his proportionate share of such taxes of the partnership or the estate or trust paid during the taxable year to a foreign country or to any possession of the United States, as the case may be.

"(b) If accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits by the taxpayer, or if any tax paid is refunded in whole or in part, the taxpayer shall notify the commissioner who shall redetermine the amount of the tax due under Part II of this title for the year or years affected, and the amount of tax due upon such redetermination, if any, shall be paid by the taxpayer upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252. In the case of such a tax accrued but not paid, the commissioner as a condition precedent to the allowance of this credit may require the taxpayer to give a bond with sureties satisfactory to and to be approved by the commissioner in such penal sum as the commissioner may require, conditioned for the payment by the taxpayer of any amount of tax found due upon any such redetermination; and the bond herein prescribed shall contain such further conditions as the commissioner may require.

"(c) These credits shall be allowed only if the taxpayer furnishes evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the amount of income derived from sources within such foreign country or such possession of the United States, and all other information necessary for the computation of such credits."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 125: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than six months"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(1) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236; and

"(2) For each calendar year thereafter, 10 per cent of such excess amount.

"(b) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' five-sixths of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) and four-fifths of the tax imposed by paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I of the revenue act of 1917."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert a comma and the following: "except that:

"(1) In the case of life insurance companies there shall not be included in gross income such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as is paid back or credited to or treated as an abatement of premium of such policyholder within the taxable year.

"(2) Mutual marine insurance companies shall include in gross income the gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "238; or (e) in the case of a foreign corporation, by the authority of any foreign country (except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes, and taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed), upon the property or business"; and on page 40 of the bill, lines 22 and 23, strike out "paragraphs (2) and (3)" and insert "paragraph (2) and in clauses (a), (b), and (c) of paragraph (3)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 37, line 24, of the bill, after "business," insert a comma and the following: "including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 159: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 159, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33, line 9, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "12 months" and insert "30 days"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 160: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 160, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"(10) In the case of insurance companies, in addition to the above: (a) The net addition required by law to be made within the taxable year to reserve funds (including in the case of assessment insurance companies the actual deposit of sums with State or Territorial officers pursuant to law as additions to guarantee or reserve funds); and (b) the sums other than dividends paid within the taxable year on policy and annuity contracts;

"(11) In the case of corporations issuing policies covering life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan continuing for life and not subject to cancellation, in addition to the above, such portion of the net addition (not required by law) made within the taxable year to reserve funds as the commissioner finds to be required for the protection of the holders of such policies only;

"(12) In the case of mutual marine insurance companies, there shall be allowed, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them, and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment and the payment thereof;

"(13) In the case of mutual insurance companies (other than mutual life or mutual marine insurance companies) requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses, there shall be allowed, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, (unless otherwise allowed under such paragraphs) the amount of premium deposits returned to their policyholders and the amount of premium deposits retained for the payment of losses, expenses, and reinsurance reserves and a semicolon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 161: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 161, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"(14) (a) At the time of filing return for the taxable year 1918 a taxpayer may file a claim in abatement based on the fact that he has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition) resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for such taxable year, or from the actual payment after the close of such taxable year of rebates in pursuance of contracts entered into during such year upon sales made during such year. In such case payment of the amount of the tax covered by such claim shall not be required until the claim is decided, but the taxpayer shall accompany his claim with a bond in double the amount of the tax covered by the claim, with sureties satisfactory to the commissioner, conditioned for the payment of any part of such tax found to be due, with interest. If any part of such claim is disallowed then the remainder of the tax due shall on notice and demand by the collector be paid by the taxpayer with interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month from the time the tax would have been due had no such claim been filed. If it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such substantial loss has been sustained, then in computing the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income. (b) If no such claim is filed, but it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable year 1919 the taxpayer has sustained a substantial loss of the character above described then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for the taxable year 1918 and the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 169: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 169, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "in computing the tax as provided in subdivision (a) of section 205, the tax computed for the entire period under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited against the net income computed for the entire period under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917 and under Title I of the revenue act of 1917, and the tax computed for the entire period under Title III of this act at the rates prescribed for the calendar year 1918 shall be credited against the net income computed for the entire period under this title; and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 171: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 171, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "8" inserted by said amendment insert the figures "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

"(c) If a domestic corporation makes a return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, only that proportion of this credit shall be allowed which the part of such period within the calendar year 1918 bears to the entire period."

And on page 42 of the bill, after line 20, insert the following new paragraph:

"If accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits by the corporation, or if any tax paid is refunded in whole or in part, the corporation shall at once notify the commissioner who shall redetermine the amount of the taxes due under this title and under Title III for the year or years affected, and the amount of taxes due upon such redetermination, if any, shall be paid by the corporation upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of taxes overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 252. In the case of such a tax accrued but not paid, the commissioner as a condition precedent to the allowance of this credit may require the corporation to give a bond with sureties satisfactory to and to be approved by him in such penal sum as he may require, conditioned for the payment by the taxpayer of any amount of taxes found due upon any such redetermination; and the bond herein prescribed shall contain such further conditions as the commissioner may require."

And on page 42 of the bill, line 21, at the beginning of the line, insert the letter "b" in parentheses.

And the Senate agree to the same.

"CONSOLIDATED RETURNS.

"SEC. 240. (a) That corporations which are affiliated within the meaning of this section shall, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, make a consolidated return of net income and invested capital for the purposes of this title and Title III, and the taxes thereunder shall be computed and determined upon the basis of such return: Provided, That there shall be taken out of such consolidated net income and invested capital, the net income and invested capital of any such affiliated corporation organized after August 1, 1914, and not successor to a then existing business, 50 per cent or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive. In such case the corporation so taken out shall be separately assessed on the basis of its own invested capital and net income and the remainder of such affiliated group shall be assessed on the basis of the remaining consolidated invested capital and net income.

"In any case in which a tax is assessed upon the basis of a consolidated return, the total tax shall be computed in the first instance as a unit and shall then be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them, or, in the absence of any such agreement, then on the basis of the net income properly assignable to each. There shall be allowed in computing the income tax only one specific credit of $2,000 (as provided in section 236); in computing the war-profits credit (as provided in section 311) only one specific exemption of $3,000; and in computing the excess-profits credit (as provided in section 312) only one specific exemption of $3,000.

"(b) For the purpose of this section two or more domestic corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated (1) if one corporation owns directly or controls through closely affiliated interests or by a nominee or nominees substantially all the stock of the other or others, or (2) if substantially all the stock of two or more corporations is owned or controlled by the same interests.

"(c) For the purposes of section 238 a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid (but not including taxes accrued) by such foreign corporation during the taxable year to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States upon income derived from sources without the United States, which the amount of any dividends (not deductible under section 234) received by such domestic corporation from such foreign corporation during the taxable year bears to the total taxable income of such foreign corporation upon or with respect to which such taxes were paid: Provided, That in no such case shall the amount of the credit for such taxes exceed the amount of such dividends (not deductible under section 234) received by such domestic corporation during the taxable year."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"SEC. 250. (a) That except as otherwise provided in this section and sections 221 and 237 the tax shall be paid in four installments, each consisting of one-fourth of the total amount of the tax. The first installment shall be paid at the time fixed by law for filing the return, and the second installment shall be paid on the fifteenth day of the third month, the third installment on the fifteenth day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on the fifteenth day of the ninth month, after the time fixed by law for filing the return. Where an extension of time for filing a return is granted the time for payment of the first installment shall be postponed until the date of the expiration of the period of the extension, but the time for payment of the other installments shall not be postponed unless the commissioner so provides in granting the extension. In any case in which the time for the payment of any installment is at the request of the taxpayer thus postponed, there shall be added as part of such installment interest thereon at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per month from the time is would have been due if no extension had been granted, until paid. If any installment is not paid when due, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall become due and payable upon notice and demand by the collector."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 214: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 214, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "imposing an income tax"; and the Senate agree to the same.

"CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES POSSESSIONS.

"SEC. 260. That any individual who is a citizen of any possession of the United States (but not otherwise a citizen of the United States) and who is not a resident of the United States, shall be subject to taxation under this title only as to income derived from sources within the United States, and in such case the tax shall be computed and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as in the case of other persons who are taxable only as to income derived from such sources."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"PORTO RICO AND PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

"SEC. 261. That in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands the income tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the revenue act of 1916 as amended.

"Returns shall be made and taxes shall be paid under Title I of such act in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, as the case may be, by (1) every individual who is a citizen or resident of Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands or derives income from sources therein, and (2) every corporation created or organized in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands or deriving income from sources therein. An individual who is neither a citizen nor a resident of Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands but derives income from sources therein, shall be taxed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands as a nonresident alien individual, and a corporation created or organized outside Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands and deriving income from sources therein shall be taxed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands as a foreign corporation. For the purposes of section 216 and of paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234 a tax imposed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands upon the net income of a corporation shall not be deemed to be a tax under this title.

"The Porto Rican or Philippine Legislature shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal the income tax laws in force in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, respectively."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 231: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 231, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "equal to the sum of the following:

"FIRST BRACKET.

"30 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 312) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital;

"SECOND BRACKET.

"65 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital;

"THIRD BRACKET.

"The sum, if any, by which 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit (determined under section 311) exceeds the amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets.

"(b) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation (except corporations taxable under subdivision (c) of this section) a tax equal to the sum of the following:

"FIRST BRACKET.

"20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 312) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital;

"SECOND BRACKET.

"40 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

"(c) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation which derives in such year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, a sum equal to the sum of the following:

"(1) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (a) as the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income. In computing such tax the excess-profits credit and the war-profits credit applicable to the taxable year shall be used;

"(2) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (b) as the part of the net income not attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income.

"For the purpose of determining the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts, the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to gross income derived from such Government contract or contracts and from other sources, respectively, shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

"(d) In any case where the full amount of the excess-profits credit is not allowed under the first bracket of subdivision (a) or (b), by reason of the fact that such credit is in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, the part not so allowed shall be deducted from the amount in the second bracket.

"(e) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' the tax imposed by this title shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title II of the revenue act of 1917."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment number 233: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 233, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 303. That if part of the net income of a corporation is derived (1) from a trade or business (or a branch of a trade or business) in which the employment of capital is necessary, and (2) a part (constituting not less than 30 per cent of its total net income) is derived from a separate trade or business (or a distinctly separate branch of the trade or business) which if constituting the sole trade or business would bring it within the class of 'personal service corporations,' then (under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) the tax upon the first part of such net income shall be separately computed (allowing in such computation only the same proportionate part of the credits authorized in sections 311 and 312), and the tax upon the second part shall be the same percentage thereof as the tax so computed upon the first part is of such first part: Provided, That the tax upon such second part shall in no case be less than 20 per cent thereof, unless the tax upon the entire net income, if computed without benefit of this section, would constitute less than 20 per cent of such entire net income, in which event the tax shall be determined upon the entire net income, without reference to this section, as other taxes are determined under this title. The total tax computed under this section shall be subject to the limitations provided in section 302."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 234: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 234, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Any corporation whose net income for the taxable year is less than $3,000 shall be exempt from taxation under this title"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 236: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 236, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) In the case of any corporation engaged in the mining of gold, the portion of the net income derived from the mining of gold shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this title, and the tax on the remaining portion of the net income shall be the proportion of a tax computed without the benefit of this subdivision which such remaining portion of the net income bears to the entire net income."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 242: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 242, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) If the corporation was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, then, except as provided in subdivision (d), the war-profits credit shall be the sum of:

"(1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and

"(2) An amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital, for the prewar period, of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer; but such amount shall in no case be less than 10 per cent of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year. Such average percentage shall be determined by the commissioner on the basis of data contained in returns made under Title II of the revenue act of 1917, and the average known as the median shall be used. If such average percentage has not been determined and published at least 30 days prior to the time when the return of the taxpayer is due, then for purposes of such return 10 per cent shall be used in lieu thereof; but such average percentage when determined shall be used for the purposes of section 250 in determining the correct amount of the tax.

"(d) The war-profits credit shall be determined in the manner provided in subdivision (b) instead of in the manner provided in subdivision (c), in the case of any corporation which was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, if (1) a majority of its stock at any time during the taxable year is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a corporation which was in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, or if (2) 50 per cent or more of its gross income (as computed under section 233 for income tax purposes) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 243: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 243, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "e" in parentheses; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 254: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 254, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus: Provided, That the commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in which tangible property is included in invested capital at a value in excess of the stock or shares issued therefor, containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, the value of the tangible property at the time paid in, the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor, and the amount included under this paragraph as paid-in surplus. The commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 257: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 257, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "25"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 259: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 259, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "25." And on page 62, line 14, of the bill, after the word "lowest," insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That in no case shall the total amount included under paragraphs (4) and (5) exceed in the aggregate 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 263: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 263, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

"(a) Where the commissioner is unable to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

"(b) In the case of a foreign corporation;

"(c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

"(d) Where upon application by the corporation the commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital, nor (2) in which 50 per cent or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under section 233 of Title II) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

"SEC. 328. (a) In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year, as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business, bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. In the case of a foreign corporation the tax shall be computed without deducting the specific exemption of $3,000 either for the taxpayer or the representative corporations.

"In computing the tax under this section."

"In cases in which the tax is to be computed under this section, if the tax as computed without the benefit of this section is less than 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer, the installments shall in the first instance be computed upon the basis of such tax; but if the tax so computed is 50 per cent or more of the net income, the installments shall in the first instance be computed upon the basis of a tax equal to 50 per cent of the net income. In any case, the actual ratio when ascertained shall be used in determining the correct amount of the tax. If the correct amount of the tax when determined exceeds 50 per cent of the net income, any excess of the correct installments over the amounts actually paid shall on notice and demand be paid together with interest at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per month on such excess from the time the installment was due."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 270: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 270 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 65 of the bill, lines 22 and 23, strike out "section" and insert "subdivision"; and the Senate agree to the same.

"If such predecessor trade or business was carried on by a partnership or individual, the net income for the prewar period shall, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, be ascertained and returned as nearly as may be upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for corporations in Title II, including a reasonable deduction for salary or compensation to each partner or the individual for personal services actually rendered.

"In the case of the organization as a corporation before July 1, 1919, of any trade or business in which capital is a material income-producing factor and which was previously owned by a partnership or individual, the net income of such trade or business from January 1, 1918, to the date of such reorganization may at the option of the individual or partnership be taxed as the net income of a corporation is taxed under Titles II and III; in which event the net income and invested capital of such trade or business shall be computed as if such corporation had been in existence on and after January 1, 1918, and the undistributed profits or earnings of such trade or business shall not be subject to the surtax imposed in section 211, but amounts distributed on or after January 1, 1918, from the earnings of such trade or business shall be taxed to the recipients as dividends, and all the provisions of Titles II and III relating to corporations shall so far as practicable apply to such trade or business: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any trade or business the net income of which for the taxable year 1918 was less than 20 per cent of its invested capital for such year: Provided further, That any taxpayer who takes advantage of this paragraph shall pay the tax imposed by section 1000 of this act and by the first subdivision of section 407 of the revenue act of 1916, as if such taxpayer had been a corporation on and after January 1, 1918, with a capital stock having no par value.

"If any asset of the trade or business in existence both during the taxable year and any prewar year is included in the invested capital for the taxable year but is not included in the invested capital for such prewar year, or is valued on a different basis in computing the invested capital for the taxable year and such prewar year, respectively, then under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary such readjustments shall be made as are necessary to place the computation of the invested capital for such prewar year on the basis employed in determining the invested capital for the taxable year."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"Provided, That if such previous owner was not a corporation, then the value of any asset so transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition (at the date when acquired by such previous owner) with proper allowance for depreciation, impairment, betterment, or development, but no addition to the original cost shall be made for any charge or expenditure deducted as expense or otherwise on or after March 1, 1913, in computing the net income of such previous owner for purposes of taxation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"(1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period. Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax imposed by this title, the excess shall be credited or refunded to the corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

"(b) If a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the tax for such fiscal year under this title shall be the sum of (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under subdivision (b) or (c) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the entire period.

"(c) If a partnership or a personal service corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, it shall pay the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period.

"Any tax paid by a partnership or personal service corporation for any period beginning on or after January 1, 1918, shall be immediately refunded to the partnership or corporation as a tax erroneously or illegally collected."

And on page 67, line 5, of the bill, after "corporation" insert the following inclosed in parentheses: "other than a personal service corporation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 289: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 289, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

TITLE IV.—ESTATE TAX.

"SEC. 400. That when used in this title—

"The term 'executor' means the executor or administrator of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator, any person who takes possession of any property of the decedent; and

"The term 'collector' means the collector of internal revenue of the district in which was the domicile of the decedent at the time of his death, or, if there was no such domicile in the United States, then the collector of the district in which is situated the part of the gross estate of the decedent in the United States, or, if such part of the gross estate is situated in more than one district, then the collector of internal revenue of such district as may be designated by the commissioner.

"SEC. 401. That (in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1916, as amended, and in lieu of the tax imposed by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917) a tax equal to the sum of the following percentages of the value of the net estate (determined as provided in section 403) is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

"1 per cent of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000;

"2 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

"3 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $250,000;

"4 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

"6 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $750,000;

"8 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $750,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;

"10 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000;

"12 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

"14 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

"16 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

"18 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000;

"20 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $5,000,000 and does not exceed $8,000,000;

"22 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000; and

"25 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,000,000.

"The taxes imposed by this title or by Title II of the revenue act of 1916 (as amended by the act entitled 'An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes,' approved Mar. 3, 1917) or by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917, shall not apply to the transfer of the net estate of any decedent who has died or may die while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war or from injuries received or disease contracted while in such service, and any such tax collected upon such transfer shall be refunded to the executor.

"SEC. 402. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

"(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate;

"(b) To the extent of any interest therein of the surviving spouse, existing at the time of the decedent's death as dower, courtesy, or by virtue of a statute creating an estate in lieu of dower or courtesy;

"(c) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has at any time created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (whether such transfer or trust is made or created before or after the passage of this act), except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title;

"(d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent;

"(e) To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth; and

"(f) To the extent of the amount receivable by the executor as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life; and to the extent of the excess over $40,000 of the amount receivable by all other beneficiaries as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

"SEC. 403. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

"(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

"(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and such amounts reasonably required and actually expended for the support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered, but not including any income taxes upon income received after the death of the decedent, or any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes;

"(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property, real, personal, or mixed, which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property as included in the decedent's gross estate;

"(3) The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts, to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes, or to or for the use of any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since December 31, 1917; and

"(4) An exemption of $50,000;

"(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States—

"(1) That proportion of the deductions specified in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated, but in no case shall the amount so deducted exceed 10 per cent of the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States;

"(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property, real, personal, or mixed, which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property is included in that part of the decedent's gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States; and

"(3) The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts, to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes, or to or for the use of any domestic corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes within the United States. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since December 31, 1917; and

"No deduction shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 404 the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident not situated in the United States.

"For the purpose of this title stock in a domestic corporation owned and held by a nonresident decedent, and the amount receivable as insurance upon the life of a nonresident decedent where the insurer is a domestic corporation, shall be deemed property within the United States, and any property of which the decedent has made a transfer or with respect to which he has created a trust, within the meaning of subdivision (c) of section 402, shall be deemed to be situated in the United States, if so situated either at the time of the transfer or the creation of the trust, or at the time of the decedent's death.

"In the case of any estate in respect to which the tax under existing law has been paid, if necessary to allow the benefit of the deduction under paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) or (b) the tax shall be redetermined and any excess of tax paid shall be refunded to the executor.

"SEC. 404. That the executor, within 60 days after qualifying as such, or after coming into possession of any property of the decedent, whichever event first occurs, shall give written notice thereof to the collector. The executor shall also, at such times and in such manner as may be required by regulations made pursuant to law, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth (a) the value of the gross estate of the decedent at the time of his death, or, in case of a nonresident, of that part of his gross estate situated in the United States; (b) the deductions allowed under section 403; (c) the value of the net estate of the decedent as defined in section 403; and (d) the tax paid or payable thereon; or such part of such information as may at the time be ascertainable and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax.

"Return shall be made in all cases where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $50,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The commissioner shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

"SEC. 405. That if no administration is granted upon the estate of a decedent, or if no return is filed as provided in section 404, or if a return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector shall make a return and the commissioner shall assess the tax thereon.

"SEC. 406. That the tax shall be due one year after the decedent's death; but in any case where the commissioner finds that payment of the tax within one year after the decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate he may grant an extension of time for the payment of the tax for a period not to exceed three years from the due date. If the tax is not paid within one year and 180 days after the decedent's death, interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the expiration of one year after the decedent's death shall be added as part of the tax.

"SEC. 407. That the executor shall pay the tax to the collector or deputy collector. If the amount of the tax can not be determined, the payment of a sum of money sufficient, in the opinion of the collector, to discharge the tax shall be deemed payment in full of the tax, except as in this section otherwise provided. If the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax as finally determined, the commissioner shall refund such excess to the executor. If the amount of the tax as finally determined exceeds the amount so paid, the collector shall notify the executor of the amount of such excess and demand payment thereof. If such excess part of the tax is not paid within 30 days after such notification, interest shall be added thereto at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the expiration of such 30 days' period until paid, and the amount of such excess shall be a lien upon the entire gross estate, except such part thereof as may have been sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

"The collector shall grant to the person paying the tax duplicate receipts, either of which shall be sufficient evidence of such payment and shall entitle the executor to be credited and allowed the amount thereof by any court having jurisdiction to audit or settle his accounts.

"SEC. 408. That if the tax herein imposed is not paid within 180 days after it is due, the collector shall, unless there is reasonable cause for further delay, proceed to collect the tax under the provisions of general law or commence appropriate proceedings in any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to be sold under the judgment or decree of the court. From the proceeds of such sale the amount of the tax, together with the costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by the court, shall be first paid, and the balance shall be deposited according to the order of the court to be paid under its direction to the person entitled thereto.

"If the tax or any part thereof is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to or in the possession of, any person other than the executor in his capacity as such, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement out of any part of the estate still undistributed or by a just and equitable contribution by the persons whose interest in the estate of the decedent would have been reduced if the tax had been paid before the distribution of the estate or whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate, it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution. If any part of the gross estate consists of proceeds of policies of insurance upon the life of the decedent receivable by a beneficiary other than the executor, the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiary such portion of the total tax paid as the proceeds, in excess of $40,000, of such policies bear to the net estate. If there is more than one such beneficiary, the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiaries in the same ratio.

"SEC. 409. That unless the tax is sooner paid in full, it shall be a lien for 10 years upon the gross estate of the decedent, except that such part of the gross estate as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration, allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be divested of such lien. If the commissioner is satisfied that the tax liability of an estate has been fully discharged or provided for, he may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, issue his certificate releasing any or all property of such estate from the lien herein imposed.

"If (a) the decedent makes a transfer of, or creates a trust with respect to, any property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth) or (b) if insurance passes under a contract executed by the decedent in favor of a specific beneficiary, and if in either case the tax in respect thereto is not paid when due, then the transferee, trustee, or beneficiary shall be personally liable for such tax, and such property, to the extent of the decedent's interest therein at the time of such transfer, or to the extent of such beneficiary's interest under such contract of insurance, shall be subject to a like lien equal to the amount of such tax. Any part of such property sold by such transferee or trustee to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth shall be divested of the lien and a like lien shall then attach to all the property of such transferee or trustee, except any part sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

"SEC. 410. That whoever knowingly makes any false statement in any notice or return required to be filed under this title shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

"Whoever fails to comply with any duty imposed upon him by section 404, or, having in his possession or control any record, file, or paper, containing or supposed to contain any information concerning the estate of the decedent, or, having in his possession or control any property comprised in the gross estate of the decedent, fails to exhibit the same upon request to the commissioner or any collector or law officer of the United States, or his duly authorized deputy or agent, who desires to examine the same in the performance of his duties under this title, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered, with costs of suit, in a civil action in the name of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 292: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 292, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That where such water transportation lines are in competition between American ports with foreign water transportation lines from adjacent foreign ports, the tax imposed under this subdivision on amounts paid for water transportation between American ports shall not exceed the amount of the transportation tax to which such foreign water transportation lines are subjected by their government corresponding to this tax."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 297: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 297, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and at the end thereof insert the following new paragraph:

"The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filling the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due."

And on page 85, line 19 of the bill, strike out "November 1, 1918" and insert "April 1, 1919."

And on page 86, line 16 of the bill, insert after "policy" a colon and the following:

"And provided further, That on all policies covering life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy by which a life is insured not in excess of $500, issued on the industrial, or weekly or monthly payment plan of insurance, the tax shall be 40 per cent of the amount of the first weekly premium or 20 per cent of the amount of the first monthly premium, as the case may be."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"SEC. 1007. That section 6 of such act of December 17, 1914, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to the manufacture, sale, distribution, giving away, dispensing, or possession of preparations and remedies which do not contain more than 2 grains of opium, or more than one-fourth of a grain of morphine, or more than one-eighth of a grain of heroin, or more than 1 grain of codeine, or any salt or derivative of any of them in 1 fluid ounce, or, if a solid or semi-solid preparation, in 1 avoirdupois ounce; or to liniments, ointments, or other preparations which are prepared for external use only, except liniments, ointments, and other preparations which contain cocaine or any of its salts or alpha or beta eucaine or any of their salts or any synthetic substitute for them: Provided, That such remedies and preparations are manufactured, sold, distributed, given away, dispensed, or possessed as medicines and not for the purpose of evading the intentions and provisions of this act: Provided further, That any manufacturer, producer, compounder, or vendor (including dispensing physicians) of the preparations and remedies mentioned in this section shall keep a record of all sales, exchanges, or gifts of such preparations and remedies in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall direct. Such record shall be preserved for a period of two years in such a way as to be readily accessible to inspection by any officer, agent, or employee of the Treasury Department duly authorized for that purpose, and the State, Territorial, District, municipal, and insular officers named in section 5 of this act, and every such person so possessing or disposing of such preparations and remedies shall register as required in section 1 of this act, and, if he is not paying a tax under this act, he shall pay a special tax of $1 for each year, or fractional part thereof, in which he is engaged in such occupation, to the collector of internal revenue of the district in which he carries on such occupation as provided in this act. The provisions of this act as amended shall not apply to decocainized coca leaves or preparations made therefrom, or to other preparations of coca leaves which do not contain cocaine?'

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 542: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 542, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That where a premium is charged for the issuance, execution, renewal or continuance of such bond the tax shall be 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged: Provided further, That policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subdivision;" and the Senate agree to the same.

"(d) (1) There is hereby created a board to be known as the 'Advisory Tax Board,' hereinafter called the board, and to be composed of not to exceed six members to be appointed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The board shall cease to exist at the expiration of two years after the passage of this act, or at such earlier time as the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may designate.

"Vacancies in the membership of the board shall be filled in the same manner as an original appointment. Any member shall be subject to removal by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall designate the chairman of the board. Each member shall receive an annual salary of $9,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary expenses when absent from the District of Columbia on official business.

"(2) The commissioner may, and on the request of any taxpayer directly interested shall, submit to the board any question relating to the interpretation or administration of the income, war-profits or excess-profits tax laws, and the board shall report its findings and recommendations to the commissioner.

"(3) The board shall have its office in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia. The expenses and salaries of members of the board shall be audited, allowed, and paid out of appropriations for collecting internal revenue, in the same manner as expenses and salaries of employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue are audited, allowed, and paid.

"(4) The board shall have the power to summon witnesses, take testimony, administer oaths, and to require any person to produce books, papers, documents, or other data relating to any matter under investigation by the board. Any member of the board may sign subpœnas and members and employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue designated to assist the board, when authorized by the board, may administer oaths, examine witnesses, take testimony, and receive evidence."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 569: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 569, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) That the paragraph of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, reading as follows: 'Refunding taxes illegally collected (internal revenue): To refund and pay back duties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws,' is repealed from and after June 30, 1920; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit for the fiscal year 1921, and annually thereafter, an estimate of appropriations to refund and pay back duties or taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, and to pay judgments, including interest and costs, rendered for taxes or penalties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 578: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 578, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 132, line 11 of the Senate engrossed amendments, after the word "States," insert the following: "at the instance of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 581: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 581, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 133, line 7, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out the parenthesis, and also in line 8 of said page strike out the parenthesis; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 595: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 595, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "1402"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 596: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 596, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "1403"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 597: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 597, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "1404"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 598: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 598, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "1405"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 599: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 599, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 1406. That all persons serving in the military or naval forces of the United States during the present war who have, since April 6, 1917, resigned or been discharged under honorable conditions (or, in the case of reservists, been placed on inactive duty), or who at any time hereafter (but not later than the termination of the current enlistment or term of service) in the case of the enlisted personnel and female nurses, or within one year after the termination of the present war in the case of officers, may resign or be discharged under honorable conditions (or, in the case of reservists, be placed on inactive duty), shall be paid in addition to all other amounts due them in pursuance of law, $60 each.

"This amount shall not be paid (1) to any person who though appointed or inducted into the military or naval forces on or prior to November 11, 1918, had not reported for duty at his station on or prior to such date; or (2) to any person who has already received one month's pay under the provisions of section 9 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917; or (3) to any person who is entitled to retired pay; or (4) to the heirs or legal representatives of any person entitled to any payment under this section who has died or may die before receiving such payment. In the case of any person who subsequent to separation from the service as above specified has been appointed or inducted into the military or naval forces of the United States and has been or is again separated from the service as above specified, only one payment of $60 shall be made.

"The above amount, in the case of separation from the service on or prior to the passage of this act, shall be paid as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and in the case of separation from the service after the passage of this act shall be paid at the time of such separation.

"The amounts herein provided for shall be paid out of the appropriations for 'pay of the Army' and 'pay of the Navy,' respectively, by such disbursing officers as may be designated by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

"The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy respectively shall make all regulations necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 600: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 600, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the section number "1408" in the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the number "1407"; and the Senate agree to the same.

"SEC. 1408. That every person who on or after April 6, 1917, has entered into any contract, undertaking, or agreement, with the United States, or with any department, bureau, officer, commission, board, or agency under the United States or acting in its behalf, or with any other person having contract relations with the United States, for the performance of any work or the supplying of any materials or property for the use of or for the account of the United States, shall, within 30 days after a request of the commissioner therefor, file with the commissioner a true and correct copy of every such contract, undertaking, or agreement.

"Whoever fails to comply with such request of the commissioner shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"The commissioner shall (when not violative of the technical military or naval secrets of the Government) have access to all information and data relating to any such contract, undertaking, or agreement, in the possession, control or custody of any department, bureau, board, agency, officer or commission of the United States, and may call upon any such department, bureau, board, agency, officer or commission for a full statement and description of any allowance for amortization, obsolescence, depreciation or loss, or of any valuation, appraisal, adjustment or final settlement, made in pursuance of any such contract, undertaking, or agreement."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 602: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 602, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "1409"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment making a further clerical change.

On amendment No. 3: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment making a further clerical change.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

The action of the conferees on amendments Nos. 1 to 4, inclusive, will make the term "person" wherever used in the act include partnerships and corporations, as well as individuals; and the term "corporation" include associations, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment defined the term "life insurance company" as used in the Senate life insurance amendments; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 6: The House bill defined a "Government contract." The Senate struck out this definition. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the House definition and providing that the term "Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive," when applied to certain Government contracts "includes all such contracts which, although entered into during such period, were originally not enforceable, but which have been or may become enforceable by reason of subsequent validation in pursuance of law."

On amendment No. 7: This amendment defines the term "military or naval forces of the United States"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 8: This amendment provides that wherever in the act the term "present war" is used it shall mean the war in which the United States is now engaged against the German Government; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 9: This amendment provides that for the purposes of this act the date of the termination of the present war shall be fixed by proclamation of the President; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 11: This amendment defines the term "personal service corporation" to mean a corporation whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the principal owners or stockholders, who are themselves regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and in which capital (whether invested or borrowed) is not a material income producing factor. The House recedes with an amendment providing that the term "personal service corporation" shall not include a foreign corporation nor any corporation 50 per cent or more of whose gross income consists either (1) of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal, or (2) gains, profits, commissions, or income, derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment struck out the definition of the term "dividend" as it appeared in the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 13: This amendment provides that the terms "paid or incurred" and "paid or accrued" when used in the income-tax title shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed under action 212; and the House recedes with an amendment defining the word "paid" when used for the purpose of computing the deductions and credits.

On amendment No. 14: This amendment defines the term "dividends." The House recedes with an amendment effecting clerical changes and providing that if any stock dividend is received by a taxpayer between January 1 and November 1, 1918, or is during such period bona fide authorized or declared, and entered on the books of the corporation, and is received after November 1, 1918, and before the expiration of 30 days after the passage of this act, then such dividend shall be taxed to the recipient at the rates prescribed by law for the years in which the corporation accumulated the earnings or profits from which such dividend was paid; and declaring that any distribution made during the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years, but that any distribution made during the remainder of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings accumulated between the close of the preceding taxable year and the date of distribution, to the extent of such earnings or profits. With the exception of the aforementioned changes and the modification of the amendment to cover the case of the personal service corporation the dividend definition in practical effect is the same as the definition in the House bill. The House bill taxed all dividends received by the taxpayer at the rates in effect in the year in which the dividend was received.

On amendments Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 21: The Senate amendment provided that no gain or loss shall be deemed to occur from the exchange when—in connection with the reorganization, merger, or consolidation of a corporation—a person receives in place of securities owned by him new securities of no greater aggregate par or face value, "or when a person or persons owning property receive in exchange for such property stock of a corporation formed to take over such property." This amendment also provides that when property is exchanged for other property, the property received in exchange shall, for the purpose of determining gain or loss, be treated as the equivalent of cash to the amount of its fair market value. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the clause relating to corporations formed to take over the property of individuals and adding a provision that when—in the case of any reorganization, merger, or consolidation—the aggregate par or face of the securities received is in excess of the aggregate par or face value of the securities exchanged, the amount of such excess shall be treated as a gain to the extent that the fair market value of the new securities is greater than the cost of the securities exchanged (or their value on March 1, 1913, if acquired prior to that date).

On amendment No. 22: This amendment is a change in section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 23: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 24: This amendment provides that inventories for the purpose of determining net income under the income-tax title shall be taken upon the basis determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 25: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 26: This amendment provides for the deduction of net losses sustained during one taxable year from the net income of the taxpayers for the preceding or succeeding taxable years. The House recedes with amendments making clerical changes and confining the application of this section to net losses sustained during taxable years beginning after October 31, 1918, and ending prior to January 1, 1920.

On amendment No. 27: The Senate bill struck out section 239 of the House bill (which dealt with the computation of income taxes for the fiscal year 1917–18) and inserted as section 205 a general provision dealing with the computation of the income tax for any fiscal year ending during a calendar year for which the rates of tax differ from those of the preceding calendar year. The House, as a necessary result of its action under amendment 285, recedes with an amendment providing that the tax for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918 shall be the sum of (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917, and under Title I of the revenue act of 1917, which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of the tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates for the calendar year 1918 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period. A similar method is also provided for fiscal years beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919.

On amendment No. 28: This amendment provides that whenever parts of a taxpayer's income are subject to rates for different calendar years the part subject to the rates for the most recent calendar year shall be placed in the lower brackets, the part subject to the rates for the next preceding calendar year shall be placed in the next higher brackets, and so on until the entire net income has been accounted for. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the reference to any personal exemption or other specific exemption contained in the Senate bill, and providing that in determining the income any deductions, exemptions, or credits of a kind not plainly and properly chargeable against the income taxable at rates for a preceding year shall first be applied against the income subject to rates for the most recent calendar year, but that any balance thereof shall be applied against the income subject to the rates of the next preceding year or years until fully allowed.

On amendment No. 29: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 30: The House bill levied a normal income tax of 12 per cent upon the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216, but provided that the tax upon the first $4,000 of such excess amount in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States should be 6 per cent. The Senate bill provided the same rates for the calendar year 1918, but provided that the normal income tax for each calendar year thereafter shall be 8 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216, except that in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the tax shall be 4 per cent upon the first $4,000 of such excess amount; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 31: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 32: The following table shows the House and Senate surtax rates:

The House recedes.

On amendment No. 33: This amendment provides that in the case of a bona fide sale of mines, oil, or gas wells, or any interest therein, where the principal value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, the portion of the surtax attributable to such sales shall not exceed 20 per cent of the selling price of such property or interest; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 34: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 35: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 36: The House bill specifically provided that the term "gross income" should include the salaries of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States or of any State, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia. The Senate bill struck out this provision. The House recedes with an amendment making the salaries of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, subject to the income tax.

On amendment No. 37: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 38: The House bill provided that gross income for the purpose of the income tax should not include the proceeds of life insurance policies paid upon the death of the insured to individual beneficiaries or to the estate of the insured. The Senate bill broadened this provision by providing that gross income should not include the proceeds of life insurance policies paid upon the death of the insured; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 39: The House bill proposed to make the interest from certain State and municipal bonds subject to the surtax. The Senate in this amendment struck out the provision, thereby making all the interest from State and municipal bonds exempt from income taxes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 40: This amendment made the interest from bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation exempt except as otherwise provided under amendment No. 41. The House recedes with an amendment providing that every person owning any tax-free securities shall submit in his income-tax return a statement showing the number and amount of such obligations owned by him, and the income received therefrom.

On amendment No. 41: This amendment provides that the interest from bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation shall be exempt from income tax only to the extent provided in the war-finance corporation act; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 42, 43, and 44: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 45: The House bill provided that gross income for the purpose of the income tax does not include income accruing to the Government of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico, or any political subdivision thereof. The Senate bill extended this exemption to include Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and all other possessions of the United States, and any political subdivisions thereof; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 46, 47, 48, and 49: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 50: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 51: This amendment limits the exemption from income tax of the income from the United States of persons in the military or naval forces to the period of the present war; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 52: This amendment limits the exemption from income tax of salaries of persons in the military or naval service to those in active service; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 53: The House bill limited the exemption of the salaries of those in the military and naval forces from income tax to those serving abroad or at sea. The Senate change in this limitation has been explained in amendment No. 52; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 54: The House bill limited the exemption from income tax of the income from the United States of persons in the military or naval forces to so much of the income as did not exceed $3,500. The Senate bill eliminated this limit; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 55: This amendment provides that in the case of a device which a taxpayer has invented and which has been accepted by the War and Navy Departments since April 6, 1917, for use in the present war and which has been put into actual use as a basis for successful major operation by the United States Government in the war, and that if the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, no tax shall be imposed for the year 1918 on the royalties received or any amount received in lieu of royalties by the taxpayer for the use of such devices; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 56: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 57: This amendment provides that in the case of nonresident alien individuals gross income includes all amounts received (although paid under a contract for the sale of goods or otherwise) representing profits on the manufacture and disposition of goods within the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 58 and 59: The House bill provided that one of the deductions in computing net income should be payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession for purpose of the trade or business of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity. The Senate amendment broadened this provision by providing that the deduction should be of payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property for purposes of the trade or business; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 60: This amendment provides that interest paid or accrued on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after Sept. 24, 1917), the interest upon which is wholly exempt from taxation under the income tax title as income to the taxpayer, shall not be allowed as a deduction in computing net income; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 61: In the case of a nonresident alien individual, the House bill limited the interest deduction to interest paid during the taxable year. The Senate amendment extended the deduction to interest accrued during the taxable year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 62: This amendment authorizes a deduction in computing net income for taxes assessed against local benefits when such benefits are not "of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 63: This amendment authorizes, in the case of a nonresident alien individual, a deduction for certain taxes imposed by the authority of any foreign country upon property or business, to the extent that the income from such property or business is subject to taxation under this title; and the House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 64: The House bill required a loss to be sustained and charged off during the taxable year before it could be allowed as a deduction in computing net income. The Senate bill only required the loss to be sustained during the taxable year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 65: The House bill provided that in determining net income a reasonable allowance should be made for exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in the trade or business. The Senate bill provided that a reasonable allowance should be made in computing net income for the depreciation of property used in the trade or business. The House recedes with an amendment providing that in computing net income a reasonabe allowance should be made for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in the trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence.

On amendment No. 66: The House bill provided that a nonresident alien individual should be entitled to deduct in computing net income a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in the trade or business within the United States. The Senate bill permitted a nonresident alien individual to avail himself of the deduction for exhaustion, wear, tear, and obsolescence to the extent that they are connected with (taxable) income arising from sources within the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 67: This amendment extended the amortization provision to vessels constructed or acquired on or after April 6, 1917, for the transportation of articles or men contributing to the prosecution of the present war; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 68: The House bill made the amortization deduction discretionary; the Senate bill makes it compulsory; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 69: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 70: The House bill provided that the amortization deduction should not include amounts otherwise allowed under the income-tax title for depreciation, exhaustion, or wear and tear. The Senate amendment provides that the amortization deduction shall not include any amount otherwise allowed under the income-tax title or previous acts of Congress as a deduction in computing net income; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 71, 72, 73, 74, and 75: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 76: The House bill limited the deduction for "amortization" by providing that in the case of a nonresident alien individual "this deduction shall be allowed only as to facilities within the United States," and that in no case shall the deduction for "amortization" exceed 25 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of such deduction. The Senate amendment strikes out the above limitations; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 77: This amendment authorizes a reasonable allowance for the depletion of oil and gas wells in place of a similar allowance "for actual reduction in flow and production" as authorized by the House bill and adds a proviso "that in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, discovered by the taxpayer, on or after March 1, 1913, and not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, where the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost, the depletion allowance shall be based upon the fair market value of the property at the date of the discovery, or within 12 months thereafter." The House recedes with an amendment changing the valuation period from 12 months to 30 days.

On amendments Nos. 78 and 79: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 80: This amendment provides that if it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable years 1919 and 1920 the taxpayers (a) has for the first time ascertained the amount of a loss sustained during the preceding taxable year and not deducted from the gross income therefor, or (b) has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition), resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for the preceding taxable year, then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for such preceding taxable year, and the income taxes for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. The House recedes with amendments (1) limiting the allowance for losses sustained during the taxable year to losses resulting from the actual payment of rebates on sales of the previous year in pursuance of contracts made during such year; (2) limiting the deduction for falling inventories to the taxable year 1919; and (3) permitting the taxpayer to take advantage of this deduction at the time of making his return by filing a claim in abatement accompanied with a bond in double the amount of the tax covered by the claim.

On amendment No. 81: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment making a further clerical change.

On amendment No. 82: Nonresident alien individuals, by the House bill, were authorized to deduct certain expenses "only if and to the extent that they are connected with a trade or business carried on within the United States." This amendment authorizes such deductions to be made if and to the extent that they are connected with "income arising from a source within the United States"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by amendment No. 82; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 84 and 85: Under the House bill a taxpayer would not be permitted to deduct in computing net income premiums paid on group insurance policies for the benefit of employees. Under the Senate bill such premium will be an allowable deduction. The House bill provided that premiums paid on any life insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee, of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer shall not be allowed as a deduction when the taxpayer or anyone financially interested in such trade or business is a beneficiary under such policy. The Senate amendment provides that in the case of such policies the premiums shall not be allowed as a deduction when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 86: This amendment provides that for the purpose of computing the normal tax, the amount received as dividends from insurance companies taxable under section 504, and amounts received as dividends from personal service corporations out of earnings or profits upon which income tax has been imposed by act of Congress shall be allowed as credits; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the reference to insurance companies taxable under section 504 of the Senate bill.

On amendment No. 87: This amendment complies with the terms of the War Finance Corporation act by providing that the interest from the bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation shall not be subject to the normal income tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 88: This amendment is a clerical change to carry out the policy of exempting the interest from State and municipal bonds from income tax; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 89, 90, and 91: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 92: This amendment provides that personal-service corporations shall not be subject to taxation under the income tax title, but that the individual stockholders thereof shall be taxed in the same manner as the members of partnerships. The House recedes with an amendment making minor clerical changes.

On amendment No. 93: This amendment provides for the taxation of "income collected by a guardian of an infant to be held or distributed as the court may direct"—a class of income whose status under the House bill was uncertain; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 94: This amendment allows, in the case of estates and trusts, a deduction for amounts which, pursuant to the terms of the will or deed creating the trust, are paid to or permanently set aside for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals; and the House recedes with amendments making clerical changes and confining the deductions to amounts contributed to or permanently set aside for governmental purposes or corporations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual.

On amendment No. 95: This amendment provides that in determining the net income of the estate of any deceased person during the period of administration there may be deducted the amount of any income properly paid or credited to any legatee, heir, or other beneficiary; and the House recedes with a clerical change.

On amendment No. 96: This amendment provides that any income of an estate during the period of administration or settlement permitted to be deducted from the net income upon which tax is to be paid by the fiduciary shall be accounted for by the beneficiary; and the House recedes with a clerical amendment.

On amendments Nos. 97, 98, 99, 100, and 101: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 102: This amendment eliminates the necessity of proving fraud when earnings of a corporation are allowed to accumulate for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon the stockholders or members; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 103 and 104: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 105: This amendment provides that, when the Commissioner of Internal Revenue certifies that an accumulation of profits is, in his opinion, to enable the stockholders of a corporation to avoid payment of the surtaxes, such corporation shall not be subject to the corporation income tax or the excess or war profits taxes, but that the stockholders shall be subject to taxation in the same manner as in the case of stockholders of a personal service corporation. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment adopting the Senate amendment, but providing that in case a corporation is taxed on the basis of this amendment in the manner provided for personal service corporations, it shall also be subject to the excess or war profits taxes.

On amendments Nos. 106, 107, 108, 109, and 110: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 111: This amendment provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue instead of the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify the cases in which, in his opinion, the accumulation of earnings is unreasonable for the purpose of the business; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 112: This amendment is a clerical change due to the method of taxing insurance under section 504 of the Senate bill; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 113: In the case of income tax withheld at the source the tax in the House bill was at the rate of 12 per cent. The Senate reduced the rate to 8 per cent to comply with the normal income-tax rate after 1918 in the case of citizens or residents of the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 114: In the case of many American securities taken over and held by foreign Governments the owners of the securities are unknown to the withholding agent. This amendment provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may authorize the tax to be deducted and withheld from the interest upon any securities the owners of which are not known to the withholding agent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 115: This amendment provides that in the case of tax-free-covenant obligations in which the interest is payable to a partnership the obligor shall withhold a tax equal to 2 per cent the same as in the case of interest from such obligations payable to individuals; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 116: This amendment is the same as amendment No. 114, except that in this case it applies to tax-free-covenant obligations; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 117: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 118: The House bill provided that a citizen of the United States might credit against his income tax the amount of any income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid to any foreign country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands upon income derived from sources therein and allowed a similar credit to an alien resident if his country makes reciprocal provisions. The Senate amendment entirely rewrites the section and broadens it to include a credit for taxes paid to any possession of the United States, which is also to be given to an alien resident of the United States. The House recedes with an amendment providing that if any deduction is allowed for taxes accrued in any possession or foreign country, the commissioner may require the taxpayer to give a surety bond providing for the payment of any tax found to be due the Government in case too great a deduction shall be allowed for accrued taxes in our possessions or any foreign country. The amendment as agreed to also provides that if such accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits by the taxpayer, or if the tax paid is refunded in whole or in part, the taxpayer shall notify the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall redetermine the amount of the tax due, and the amount of the tax due shall be paid by the taxpayer, or the amount of the tax overpaid shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer.

On amendment No. 119: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 120 and 121: The House bill required every person having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over if single or if married and not living with husband or wife, or of $2,000 or over if married and living with husband or wife, to file an income-tax return. The Senate bill required income-tax returns from individuals having a gross income of $1,000 or over if single or if married and not living with husband or wife, or of $2,000 or over if married and living with husband or wife; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 122 and 123: The House bill basis for requiring fiduciary return in the case of single and married persons was the same as the basis for requiring individual returns. The Senate changed the basis to gross income, as it did in the case of individual returns; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 124: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 125: The House bill provided that, except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no extension of time for filing returns of income tax shall be for a longer period than two months. The Senate bill struck out the House limitation and left the time of extension to the discretion of the commissioner. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment providing that, except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no extension of the time for making the return shall be for a longer period than six months.

On amendment No. 126: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 127: This amendment exempts insurance companies from the income-tax provision, because the Senate bill proposed a separate and distinct tax on the investment income of insurance companies; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 128: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 129: The House bill levied upon the net income of domestic corporations an income tax of 18 per cent, but provided that the rate should be 12 per cent upon so much of the amount of the net income subject to the tax as does not exceed the sum of (1) the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year, plus (2) the amount paid during the taxable year out of earnings or profits in discharge of bonds and other interest-bearing obligations outstanding prior to the beginning of the taxable year, plus (3) the amount paid during the taxable year in the purchase of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1918. The House bill taxed the net income of foreign corporations at the same rate with slight modifications because of the different situation in the case of foreign corporations. The Senate amendment changes the corporation income-tax rate for the calendar year 1918 to a flat rate of 12 per cent and for each calendar year thereafter to a flat rate of 8 per cent. It also provides that for the purpose of the Federal railway control act of March 21, 1918, five-sixths of the corporation income tax for 1918 and three-fourths of the tax for future years shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I of the revenue act of 1917.

The House recedes with an amendment fixing the corporation income tax for the calendar year 1918 at a flat rate of 12 per cent and for each calendar year thereafter at a flat rate of 10 per cent and providing that for the purposes of the Federal railway control act five-sixths of the corporation income tax for 1918 and four-fifths of the tax for each calendar year thereafter shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I of the revenue act of 1917.

On amendment No. 130: This amendment adds to the list of corporations exempt from income tax corporations organized and operated exclusively for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 131: The House bill exempted from income tax certain farmers', fruit growers', and like associations. The Senate amendment extends the exemption to cover cooperative societies but restricts the deductions heretofore allowed to associations or societies of this class which sell for or to nonmembers; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 132: This amendment strikes joint stock land banks out of the list of corporations exempt from income tax. It also includes personal-service corporations among the corporations exempt from the corporation income tax, Senate amendment numbered 92 having made the stockholders of a personal-service corporation individually liable to income taxes in the same manner as members of a partnership; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 133 and 134: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 135: The House bill provided that in computing the gross income of life insurance companies there should not be included such portion of any premium received "within the taxable year" as is paid back or credited to or treated as an abatement of premium within the taxable year; and also provided a rule for computing gross income in the case of mutual marine insurance companies. The Senate amendment strikes out these provisions, in pursuance of the Senate plan to tax insurance companies on the basis of investment income. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the House provisions but omitting the requirement in the case of a life insurance company that premiums to be excluded from gross income must be received "within the taxable year."

On amendments Nos. 136 and 137: These amendments propose to make foreign corporations selling raw materials in the United States to be manufactured here under an agreement that certain profits on the manufacture and disposition of the finished products shall be paid to the foreign corporation include such profits in computing gross income; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 138 and 139: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 140: The House bill provided that in computing net income rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity, could be allowed as a deduction. The Senate amendment broadens this deduction provision by providing that rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property may be allowed as a deduction in computing net income; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 141: This amendment provides that interest paid or accrued on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after Sept. 24, 1917), the interest upon which is wholly exempt from taxation under the income tax title as income to the taxpayer, shall not be allowed as a deduction in computing net income; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 142: In the case of a foreign corporation, the House bill limited the interest deduction to interest paid during the taxable year. The Senate bill extended the deduction to interest accrued during the taxable year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 143: This amendment authorizes a deduction for taxes assessed against local benefits when such benefits are not "of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 144: This amendment authorizes, in the case of a foreign corporation, a deduction for certain taxes imposed by the authority of any foreign country upon property or business to the extent that the income from such property or business is subject to taxation under this title; and the House recedes, with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 145: In the case of corporations the House bill required losses sustained during the taxable year to be charged off before allowing them to be deducted in computing the net income. The Senate amendment allowed losses sustained to be deducted although the taxpayer may not be able to charge them off during the taxable year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 146: The House bill provided that in computing the net income of a corporation there should be deducted the dividends received from a corporation subject to income tax. The Senate amendment provides that amounts received by corporations as dividends from insurance companies not subject to income tax, and amounts received as dividends from a personal service corporation out of earnings or profits upon which income tax has been imposed by act of Congress, shall be deducted in computing net income. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the specific reference to insurance companies, since, by reason of the recession of the Senate from its amendment No. 127, such companies are subject to income tax.

On amendment No. 147: The House bill provided that in determining net income a reasonable allowance should be made for exhaustion, wear, and tear of the property used in the trade or business. The Senate amendment provides that a reasonable allowance shall be made in computing net income for the depreciation of property used in the trade or business. The House recedes with an amendment providing that in computing net income a reasonable allowance shall be made for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of the property used in the trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence.

On amendment No. 148: This amendment permits a foreign corporation to avail itself of the deduction for exhaustion, wear, tear, and obsolescence of property outside the United States to the extent that they are connected with income arising from sources within the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 149: This amendment extends the amortization provision to vessels constructed or acquired on or after April 6, 1917, for the transportation of articles or men contributing to the prosecution of the present war; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 150: The House bill made the amortization deduction discretionary. The Senate bill makes it compulsory; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 151: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 152: The House bill provided that the amortization deduction should not include amounts otherwise allowed under the income-tax title for depreciation, exhaustion, or wear and tear. The Senate amendment provides that the amortization deduction shall not include any amount otherwise allowed under the income-tax title or previous acts of Congress as a deduction in computing net income; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 153, 154, 155, 156, and 157: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 158: The House bill limited the deduction for amortization by providing that in the case of a foreign corporation "this deduction shall be allowed only as to facilities within the United States," and that in no case shall the deduction for amortization exceed 25 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of such deduction. The Senate amendment strikes out the above limitation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 159: This amendment authorizes a reasonable allowance for the depletion of oil and gas wells in place of a similar allowance "for actual reduction in flow and production" as authorized by the House, and adds a proviso "that in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, discovered by the taxpayer on or after March 1, 1913, and not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, where the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost, the depletion allowance shall be based upon the fair market value of the property at the date of discovery, or within 12 months thereafter." The House recedes with an amendment changing the valuation period from 12 months to 30 days.

On amendment No. 160: The Senate bill carried a new and separate scheme of taxation for insurance companies, and this amendment strikes out as superfluous special deductions provided in the House bill for computing the net income of such corporation. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the House deductions and making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 161: This amendment provides that if it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable years 1919 and 1920 the taxpayer (a) has for the first time ascertained the amount of a loss sustained during the preceding taxable year and not deducted from the gross income therefor, or (b) has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition) resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for the preceding taxable year, then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for such preceding taxable year, and the income taxes and excess-profits or war-profits taxes for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. The House recedes with amendments (1) limiting the allowance for losses sustained during the taxable year to losses resulting from the actual payment of rebates on sales of the previous year in pursuance of contracts made during such year; (2) limiting the deduction for falling inventories to the taxable year 1919; and (3) permitting the taxpayer to take advantage of this deduction at the time of making his return by filing a claim in abatement accompanied with a bond in double the amount of the tax covered by the claim.

On amendment No. 162: The House bill authorized foreign corporations to deduct certain expenses "only if and to the extent that they are connected with a trade or business carried on within the United States." The Senate amendment authorizes such deductions to be made if and to the extent that they are connected with "income arising from a source within the United States"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 163: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by amendment No. 162; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 164: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 165: This amendment complies with the terms of the War Finance Corporation act by providing that the interest from bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation shall not be subject to the corporation income tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 166: This amendment is a clerical change to carry out the policy of exempting the interest from State and municipal bonds from income tax; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 167 and 168: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 169: This amendment changes the method of computing income taxes for fiscal years begining in 1917 and ending in 1918; and the House recedes with an amendment providing that in such cases, the excess-profits tax computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited against the net income computed for the entire period under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917 and under Title I of the revenue act of 1917, and the tax computed for the entire period under Title III of this act at the rates prescribed for the calendar year 1918 shall be credited against the net income computed for the entire period under this title.

On amendment No. 170: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 171: In the case of foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein, the House bill required the corporation income tax to be withheld at the source at the rate of 18 per cent. The Senate reduced the rate to 8 per cent. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that tax shall be withheld at the rate of 10 per cent.

On amendments Nos. 172, 173, 174, and 175: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 176 and 177: The effect of the Senate amendments is to extend the benefit of the credit for taxes to taxes paid to all possessions of the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 178 and 179: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 180: This amendment provides that in the case of a corporation which makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918 any tax paid for such fiscal year under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 or Title I of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited against the tax imposed by this title. The House recedes with an amendment (1) limiting the allowance to that proportion of the credit for foreign taxes which the part of the fiscal year falling within the calendar year 1918 bears to the entire period; and (2) safeguarding the allowance by a provision inserted in subdivision (a) that if accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits, or if any tax paid is refunded in whole or in part, the taxes due shall be redetermined, and authorizing the commissioner to require bond, in the case of claims based upon taxes accrued but not paid, conditioned for the payment by the taxpayer of any amount of tax found due upon any such redetermination. Provision is also made in amendment 169 that in the case of a corporation which makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the part of the war-profits and excess-profits taxes attributable to the calendar year 1917 shall be credited against the net income (not against the tax) for such year.

On amendment No. 181: This amendment strikes out section 239 of the House bill (which dealt with the computation of income taxes for the fiscal year 1917–18) as a part of the general change made by section 205 of the Senate bill, which—as explained in connection with amendment No. 27—provides a general method for computing the income tax for any fiscal year ending during a calendar year for which the rates of tax differ from those of the preceding calendar year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 182: This amendment is a change in section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 183: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 184: This amendment provides that when the accounting period is changed as provided under section 226, only such portion of the $2,000 corporation credit allowed under subdivision (c) of section 236 shall be allowed as the number of months in the period for which the return is made bears to 12 months; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 185: This amendment provides for the computation of the income, excess profits and war profits taxes of affiliated corporations on the basis of a consolidated return of their net income and invested capital. The House recedes with an amendment providing:

(1) That there shall be taken out of such consolidated net income and invested capital, the net income and invested capital of any such affiliated corporation organized after August 1, 1914, and not successor to a then existing business, 50 per cent or more of whose gross income consist of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

(2) That two or more domestic corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated (1) if one corporation owns directly or controls through closely affiliated interests or by a nominee or nominees substantially all the stock of the other or others, or (2) if substantially all the stock of two or more corporations is owned or controlled by the same interests.

(3) Retaining (out of the part of the Senate amendment which permitted the consolidation of foreign corporations affiliated with a domestic corporation and provided that in such consolidations, the total tax, computed as a unit, shall be reduced by the credit for foreign taxes authorized in section 238) only the features relating to the credit for foreign taxes, which are stated in the following terms:

> For the purposes of section 238 a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid (not including taxes accrued) by such foreign corporation during the taxable year to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States upon income derived from sources within the United States, which the amount of any dividends (not deductible under section 234) received by such domestic corporation from such foreign corporation during the taxable year bears to the total taxable income of such foreign corporation upon or with respect to which such foreign taxes were paid: Provided, That in no such case shall the amount of the credit for such taxes exceed the amount of such dividends (not deductible under section 234) received by such domestic corporation during the taxable year.

On amendment No. 186: This amendment added a new "Part" to the income tax title and provided a separate tax on the investment income of life insurance companies and mutual insurance companies in lieu of all other taxes imposed in the bill upon such companies; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 187: This amendment is a change in section number; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 188: The House bill provided for the payment of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes in three installments, at intervals of two months. The Senate amendment provides for the payment of these taxes in four quarterly installments, the first to be paid at the time fixed by law for filing the return. The House recedes with amendments making clerical changes and providing that where an extension of time for filing a return is granted, the time for payment of the first installment shall be postponed until the expiration of the extension, but the time for payment of the other installments shall not be postponed unless the commissioner so provides in granting the extension.

On amendment No. 189: The House bill provided that where an extension of time for filing an income-tax return is granted the taxpayer may pay his tax in a single payment on or before the expiration of the period of extension. The Senate amendment struck out the House provision and substituted a provision providing (1) that in the case of any tax of not over $200 paid at the time of the filing of the return, there should be allowed a discount of 1 per cent, and (2) that where an extension of time for filing the return has been granted no interest shall be added to the tax if the whole amount of the tax is paid on or before the time the third installment would be due if no extension had been granted; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 190, 191, and 192: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 193 and 194: The House bill provided that if a false or fraudulent return is made with intent to evade the tax, in addition to other penalties provided by law for false or fraudulent returns, there should be added as part of the tax 100 per cent of the amount of tax understated. The Senate amendment reduces the penalty to 50 per cent of the tax understated and provides that this penalty should be in lieu of the penalty provided by section 3176 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 195, 196, 197, 198, and 199: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 200: This amendment provides, as to any amount of income tax remaining unpaid after the date when it is due and for 10 days after notice and demand by the collector, that if such amount is subject to a bona fide claim for abatement the 5 per cent penalty shall not be added to the tax and that interest from the time the amount was due until the claim is decided shall be at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per month; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 201: This amendment provides that in the case of the first installment payment of income taxes, the instructions printed on the return shall be deemed to be sufficient notice of the date when the tax is due and sufficient demand, and the taxpayer's computation of the tax on the return shall be deemed sufficient notice of the amount due; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 202: This amendment provides that in any case in which in order to enforce payment of a tax it is necessary for a collector to cause a warrant of distraint to be served, there shall also be added as part of the tax the sum of $5; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 203: The effect of this amendment is to prevent taxpayers departing from the United States or removing their property therefrom before the close of the regular taxable year in order to avoid payment of the income taxes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 204: This amendment provides that internal-revenue collectors shall only give receipts for income taxes upon request; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 205: The House bill provided that no credit or refund for income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes shall be allowed or made after two years from the date when the return was due unless before the expiration of the two-year period a claim for such credit or refund is filed by the taxpayer. The Senate struck out this limitation and in amendment No. 207 increased the period in which claims for credit or refunds can be made to five years; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 206: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 207: This amendment increases the period for which claims for credits or refund of income, excess profits, or war profits can be made from the two-year period provided in the House bill to five years; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 208: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 209: This amendment authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to require personal service corporations to render returns of dividend payments, stating the name and address of each stockholder, the number of shares owned by him, and the amount of dividends paid to him; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 210: The House bill authorized the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to require every individual, corporation, or partnership doing business as a broker on any exchange or board of trade or other similar place of business to render a return showing the names of customers for whom such individual, corporation, or partnership has transacted any business, with such details as to the profits, losses, or other information which the commissioner may require, as to each of such customers, as will enable the commissioner to determine whether all income tax due on profits or gains of such customers has been paid. The Senate amendment broadened the House provision to allow the commissioner to require this information from all brokers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 211: The House bill required all individuals, corporations, and partnerships making payment to another individual, corporation, or partnership of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, profits, and income of $1,000 or more in any taxable year, to render an information return to the commissioner setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment. The Senate amendment broadens this provision to require the aforementioned information with reference to all such payments made "at the rate of" $1,000 or more in any taxable year; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 212: The House bill provided that the foregoing information returns should be in such manner and form as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, setting forth the amount of gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payments. The Senate amendment provides that this information shall be given "to such extent" as may be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 213: The House bill required all income-tax returns to be filed in the office of the commissioner. The Senate amendment struck out this requirement; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 214: The House bill authorized the proper officers of any State "imposing an income tax to which corporations are subject," upon the request of the governor thereof, to have access to the return of any corporation. The Senate bill gave this authority whether or not the State imposed an income tax. The House recedes with an amendment providing that the proper officers of any State imposing an income tax may, upon the request of the governor thereof, have access to the returns of any corporation.

On amendment No. 215: This amendment provides that all bona fide stockholders of record owning 1 per cent or more of the outstanding stock of any corporation shall, upon making request of the commissioner, be allowed to examine the annual income returns of such corporation and of its subsidiaries; and the House recedes, with an amendment providing a penalty for disclosing any information so obtained.

On amendment No. 216: The House bill required the commissioner to have prepared each year and made available to public inspection in the office of each collector a list containing the names in alphabetical order and the post-office addresses of all individuals making income-tax returns in such district. The Senate amendment authorizes the commissioner to prepare and make public these lists in such manner as he may determine. The House recedes with an amendment providing that the lists of income-tax payers of each respective collection district must be available to public inspection in the office of the collector and at such other place and in such manner as the commissioner may determine.

On amendment No. 217: The House bill required the foregoing lists to be in alphabetical order. The Senate amendment strikes out this requirement; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 218: The House bill required that there should be made available to public inspection in the office of the collector of each district the names and post-office addresses of all individuals making income-tax returns in "such district." The Senate amendment strikes out the words quoted; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 219: The House bill provided that in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands the income tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the revenue act of 1916, as amended by the revenue act of 1917, and gave the Porto Rican or Philippine Legislature power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal the income-tax laws in force in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, respectively. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and incorporated it in amendment No. 221 which is the new section 261; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 220: This amendment provides that any individual who is a citizen of any possession of the United States and who is not a resident of the United States shall be subject to income taxes under this act only as to income derived from sources within the United States; and the House recedes with a clerical amendment.

On amendment No. 221: This amendment provides that the income tax in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands shall be imposed in accordance with the provisions of the revenue act of 1916, as amended; defines the classes of taxpayers who shall make returns in such possessions; defines the classes of persons who are to be taxed in such possessions as nonresident aliens and as foreign corporations; and empowers the Porto Rican and the Philippine Legislatures to amend or repeal the income-tax laws in force in such possessions; and the House recedes with an amendment providing that a tax imposed in such possessions upon the net income of a corporation shall not be considered to be a tax under this title.

On amendment No. 222: This amendment levies a tax of 100 per cent upon the excess over $500 of campaign contributions contributed in the aggregate during any taxable year for the purpose of influencing the results of elections to which candidates for Members of the House of Representatives or for United States Senator or for presidential electors are to be nominated or elected; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 223: Title III in the House bill bore the title "War profits and excess-profits taxes." The Senate amendment makes this read "War excess-profits tax"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 224, 225, and 226: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 227: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by amendment 233; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 228, 229, and 230: These amendments are clerical changes made necessary by and explained in connection with amendment 231; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 231: The House bill provided an alternative war profits and excess-profits tax computed according to whichever of the two methods yielded the higher amount of tax. The tax under the excess-profits method was computed at the following rates: Thirty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit and not in excess of 15 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year; 50 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 15 per cent and not in excess of 20 per cent of such capital; and 70 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the capital. The tax as computed by the war-profits method was 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit. The above rates applied to the taxable year 1918 and each taxable year thereafter.

The Senate amendment combines the war-profits and excess-profits methods in a single schedule, inserting the 80 per cent war-profits tax as the third bracket; changes the excess-profits rates from 35 per cent, 50 per cent, and 70 per cent to 30 per cent and 60 per cent; makes the above rates and the war-profits tax applicable only to the year 1918 and adopts the following excess-profits tax rates for the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter: Twenty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit and not in excess of the invested capital; 40 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the invested capital. The Senate amendment also contains a provision that for the purposes of the Federal railroad-control act approved March 21, 1918, the tax imposed by this title shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title II of the revenue act of 1917, thus making it certain that the war-profits and excess-profits tax, so far as applicable to transportation systems now under Federal control, shall be borne by the owners of such systems.

The House recedes with amendments: (1) Fixing the excess-profits tax rates for the taxable year 1918 at 30 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, and 65 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital; and (2) continuing these rates for the taxable year 1918 into the taxable year 1919 and succeeding years with respect to the net income of each corporation which derives in any such year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive—the tax upon corporations of this class being equal to the sum of the following: (a) Such a portion of a tax computed at the 1918 rates as the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income; plus (b) such a portion of a tax computed at the rates for 1918 and thereafter as the part of a net income not attributed to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income.

On amendment No. 232: The House bill limited the tax in the case of corporations whose invested capital or net income for the taxable year did not exceed $50,000. The Senate amendment strikes out this limitation and substitutes a general provision limiting the tax upon the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000; and the House recedes with amendments making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 233: The House bill (in section 303) provided a special rate of 20 per cent of the net income in excess of $3,000 in the case of a corporation, the earnings of which are to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the principal owners or stockholders who are themselves regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision, having defined (by amendment 11) the above class of corporations as "personal-service corporations" and having provided (by amendments 92 and 132) that they should be exempt from income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes and be treated as partnerships. The Senate amendment also inserted, as section 303, an amendment providing for the taxation of a corporation, the net income of which is derived in part (1) from a trade or business in which the employment of capital is necessary, and in part (2) from a separate trade or business, which, if constituting the sole trade or business, would bring it within the class of "personal-service corporations." The House recedes with amendments making clerical changes.

On amendments Nos. 234 and 235: Amendment 234 provided—as part of the Senate plan of insurance taxation—that certain insurance companies should be exempted from war tax and excess-profits taxes. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the Senate amendment and inserting here the language of amendment No. 235, from which the Senate recedes. The restored matter provides that any corporation whose net income for the taxable year is less than $3,000 shall be exempt from taxation under this title.

On amendment No. 236: This amendment provides that in the case of any corporation engaged in the mining of gold the portion of the net income derived from the mining of gold shall be exempt from the war-profits and excess-profits tax; and the House recedes with an amendment providing that the tax on the remaining portion of the net income shall be the proportion of a tax computed without the benefit of this exemption which such remaining portion of the net income bears to the entire net income.

On amendments Nos. 237, 238, and 239: These amendments are clerical changes necessitated by the amalgamation of the war-profits and excess-profits methods explained in connection with amendment 231; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 240: In computing the war-profits credit the House bill provided that the average net income for the prewar period should be increased or diminished by 10 per cent of the "invested capital added or withdrawn since the close of the prewar period." The Senate amendment bases this allowance on the "difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 241: This amendment is a clerical change necessitated by amendment 242; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 242: This amendment provides that if a corporation was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period its war-profits credit shall be the sum of $3,000 and an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the prewar period of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer, but such amount shall in no case be less than 10 per cent of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

The House recedes with an amendment providing that the ordinary war-profits credit (i. e., $3,000 plus 10 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year) shall apply in the case of any "new" corporation if (1) a majority of its stock at any time during the taxable year is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a corporation which was in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, or if (2) 50 per cent or more of its gross income consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

On amendment No. 243: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with a further clerical change.

On amendment No. 244: This amendment is a clerical change necessitated by the amalgamation of the war profits and excess profits methods (explained in connection with amendment 231); and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 245 and 246: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 247: The Senate amendment as a consequence of the adoption of amendment 159 struck out the allowance for hazard provided for producers or prospectors of oil in the House bill at this point; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 248: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 249: This amendment provides that a corresponding part of the capital invested in "inadmissible assets" shall not be deemed to be inadmissible assets "where all or part of the interest derived from such assets is in effect included in the net income because of the limitation on the deduction of the interest under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 250: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 251: The term "admissible assets" is by this amendment defined to mean "all assets other than inadmissible assets, valued in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 326, section 330, and section 331"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 252: This amendment provides that the par value of stock or shares shall, in the case of stock or shares issued at a nominal value, be deemed to be the fair market value as of the date or dates of issue of such stock or shares; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 253: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 254: The House bill provided that tangible property should be included in invested capital in an amount not to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor. The Senate amendment adds the following qualification: "Unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus." The House recedes with an amendment providing that the commissioner shall keep a detailed record of all cases in which tangible property is included in invested capital at a value in excess of the stock or shares issued therefor, which record shall be furnished when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257.

On amendment No. 255: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 256: The House bill specifically provided that "paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits" should not include the increase in the value of any asset above the original cost until such increase is actually realized by sale. This was stricken out by the Senate amendment as surplusage and merely declaratory of an accepted general principle controlling the whole computation of invested capital; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 257: The House bill limited to 20 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporations outstanding on March 3, 1917, the aggregate allowance which may be made for intangible property paid in for stock or shares prior to March 3, 1917. The Senate amendment increased this limit to 30 per cent; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the 30 per cent to 25 per cent.

On amendment No. 258: The House bill excluded from "invested capital" intangible property (other than patents and copyrights) paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917. The Senate amendment permits all intangible property bona fide paid in for stock on or after March 3, 1917 (subject to the limitation noted in amendment 259), to be included in invested capital; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 259. The House bill limited to 20 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year the aggregate allowance which may be made (in computing invested capital) for patents and copyrights paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917. The Senate amendment increased this limit to 30 per cent (having by amendment 258 also allowed other intangible property to be included); and the House recedes with amendments changing the 30 per cent to 25 per cent, and providing that in no case shall the total allowance for intangible property paid in for stock or shares before, on, or after March 3, 1917, exceed in the aggregate 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock of shares outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year.

On amendment No. 260: This amendment strikes out the House provision excluding from "invested capital" intangible property (other than patents and copyrights) paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 261: This amendment provides that there shall be deducted from invested capital as defined in section 326 a percentage equal thereof to the percentage which the amount of inadmissible assets is of the amount of the admissible and inadmissible assets held during the taxable year, except in the case of certain dealers in securities, insurance companies, banks, banking associations, loan or trust companies; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the exception.

On amendment No. 262: This amendment strikes out the definition provided in the House bill of the invested capital of a foreign corporation (see amendment No. 263), makes clerical changes in the method of computing the invested capital for a fractional part of a year, and defines the average invested capital for the prewar period; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 263: The House bill in the so-called relief provisions provided that in certain specified cases the invested capital of a corporation shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the corporation for the taxable year as the average invested capital for the taxable year of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income for such year.

The Senate amendment increases the classes of cases in which the tax is to be fixed by reference to the experience of representative corporations; includes therein all foreign corporations (see amendment 262), and provides that in such cases the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year.

The House recedes with amendments:

(1) Making clerical changes;

(2) Consolidating a number of separate classes or cases differentiated in the Senate amendment into a single class of cases in which "upon application by the corporation the commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profits upon a normal invested capital, nor in which 50 per cent or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under sec. 233 of Title II) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive"; and

(3) Providing (since the taxpayer, in cases falling under this section, does not know the basis on which the final assessment will be made) that the return shall be made and the first installments of the tax computed on the basis of a tax equal to 50 per cent of the net income, in any case in which the tax as computed without benefit of this section is 50 per cent or more of the net income, and that where the tax, as computed without benefit of this section is less than 50 per cent of the net income, then the installments shall in the first instance be computed upon the basis of such tax.

On amendments Nos. 264, 265, 266, and 267: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 268: The Senate amendment strikes out the House provision that in the case of a corporation making a return on the basis of a fiscal year the ratio (between the average invested capital and the average net income of representative corporations) for the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 269: This amendment is a clerical change necessitated by amendment 263; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 270: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment making another clerical change.

On amendment No. 271: This is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 272, 273, 274, and 275: These amendments are clerical changes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 276: This amendment provided that nothing contained in section 330 relating to the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership after January 1, 1911, of a trade or business now carried on by a corporation should be so construed as to conflict with the provisions of section 326; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 277: The House bill provided that in the case of reorganizations, etc., if the predecessor trade or business was carried on by a partnership or individual the net income for the prewar period should be ascertained and returned upon the same basis as provided for partnerships and individuals in Title II. The Senate amendment provides that in such cases the net income for the prewar period shall be ascertained and returned upon the basis provided for corporations in Title II, including a reasonable deduction for salary or compensation to each partner or the individual.

The House recedes with an amendment providing that in the case of the reorganization as a corporation before July 1, 1919, of certain trades or businesses previously owned by a partnership or individual the net income of such trade or business from January 1, 1918, to the date of such reorganization may, at the option of the individual or partnership, be taxed as the net income of a corporation is taxed under Titles II and III; in which event the undistributed profits of such trade or business shall not be subject to surtaxes, but amounts distributed on or after January 1, 1918, from the earnings of such trade or business shall be taxed to the recipients as dividends, and any taxpayer availing himself of this option is required to pay the capital stock tax as if such taxpayer had been a corporation on and after January 1, 1918, with a capital stock having no par value.

On amendment No. 278: This amendment extends certain House provisions relating to the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business, to include "change of ownership of property"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 279, 280, and 281: These amendments are clerical changes dependent upon amendment 278; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 282: This amendment provides that in cases of reorganization, etc., if the previous owner was not a corporation then the value of any asset transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition at the date when acquired by such previous owner; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendments Nos. 283 and 284: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 285: In the case of corporations making return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918 the House bill provided that the entire net income (for purposes of computing the war-profits and excess-profits tax) should be determined under Title II of this act. The Senate amendment alters the methods of computing both the net income and the tax, in such cases, by providing that the tax for the first taxable year under this title shall be (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period. The Senate amendment also contains certain necessary provisions required by the exemption of personal service corporations from war-profits and excess-profits tax. The House recedes with amendments making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 286: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 287: This amendment strikes out the House provision prohibiting the use of the so-called consolidated return; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 288: This amendment provides that in the case of a bona fide sale of mines, oil or gas wells, or any interest therein, where the par value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, the portion of the tax imposed by the excess-profits title attributable to such sale shall not exceed 20 per cent of the selling price of such property or interest; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 289: The House bill imposed a tax upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act based upon the total value of the net estate regardless of the number of shares into which it was divided among the various beneficiaries (substantially the same as the present law at increased rates). The Senate amendment strikes out this tax and in lieu thereof imposes an inheritance tax based upon the value of the beneficial interests passing to each individual beneficiary, with much lower rates than the House bill and much smaller revenue return. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the provisions of the House bill, with the following changes:

1. Exempting from the tax under this act and the existing law the transfer of the net estate of any decedent who has died or may die while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war or from injuries received or disease contracted while in such service.

2. Changing from three years to two years the period of time within which a transfer of a material part of his property by a decedent before his death shall be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death.

3. Allowing as a deduction in computing the net estate the amount of all bequests, legacies, and devises to the United States or a State or a political subdivision thereof for public purposes, or to a corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or to a trustee exclusively for such purposes.

4. Extending from two years to three years the maximum time to which the commissioner may extend the time for the payment of the tax.

5. Making other minor administrative changes.

6. The following table shows the rates of the House bill and as agreed to in conference:

On amendment No. 290: The House bill made the transportation taxes effective November 1, 1918. The Senate bill made them effective April 1, 1919; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 291: The House bill exempted from the passenger tax the amounts paid for transportation the fare for which does not exceed 35 cents. The Senate amendment increased this exemption to 42 cents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 292: This amendment limits the 8 per cent tax on passenger fares over transportation lines which are in competition with foreign lines so that such tax shall not exceed the amount of transportation tax to which foreign transportation companies are subjected by their Governments. The House recedes with an amendment confining the limitation or exemption to passenger traffic between American ports on water lines which are in competition between American ports with foreign water transportation lines from adjacent foreign ports.

On amendment No. 293: This amendment confines the tax on the amount paid for seats, berths, or staterooms in parlor cars or on vessels to such facilities when used in connection with transportation upon which the passenger tax is imposed; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 294: The House bill imposed a tax of 6½ per cent on the amount paid for the transportation of oil by pipe line. The Senate amendment increases this tax to 8 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 295: This amendment provides that the taxes upon transportation and other facilities shall not be imposed upon any payment received for services rendered to the United States or to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 296: This amendment provides that the taxes upon transportation and other facilities shall without assessment by the commissioners or notice from the collectors be due and payable to the collectors at the time of filing each monthly return and provides a penalty for nonpayment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 297: The House bill imposed a tax equivalent to 8 cents on each $100 or fractional part thereof of the amount for which any life is insured. In the case of group life insurance, covering groups of not less than 25 lives in the employ of the same person for the benefit of persons other than the employer, the House bill imposed a tax equivalent to 4 cents on each $100 of the aggregate amount for which the group policy is issued and of any net increase in the amount of insurance under such policies. It also reenacted the tax under existing law of 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged under each policy of marine, inland, and fire insurance without change. The House bill also substantially reenacted the tax levied under existing law of 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged under each casualty insurance policy.

The Senate bill presented an entirely new scheme of insurance taxation by which the income, excess profits, war profits, capital stock, and premium taxes upon insurance companies other than life and mutual insurance companies were replaced by premium taxes at higher rates than have been heretofore imposed. As part of this plan the premium taxes upon issuance of insurance policies (including life insurance policies) provided in the House bill was stricken out by the Senate in this amendment.

The House recedes with amendments making clerical changes; restoring the House tax provision on the issuance of insurance policies; and providing that such taxes shall be due and payable, without assessment or notice, at the time fixed for filing return and that if not paid when due there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

On amendment No. 298: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 299: The House bill imposed a tax on nonbeverage alcohol of $4.40 per proof gallon or wine gallon when below proof. The Senate bill reduced this rate to $2.20; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 300: The House bill levied a tax upon beverage alcohol of $8 per proof gallon or wine gallon when below proof. The Senate reduced this rate to $6.40, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 301: Distilled spirits stored under bonds in accordance with the law are subject after eight years to tax whether withdrawn or not. The approaching period of prohibition provided by the food-stimulation act would therefore force the payment either by owners or sureties of large sum of taxes upon spirits which could not be lawfully sold or removed from the warehouse. To meet this situation the Senate bill provides in this amendment that the tax on distilled spirits intended for beverage purposes shall not be payable on such spirits while stored in any distillery, bonded warehouse, or special or general bonded warehouse, and which, pursuant to any act of Congress, or proclamation of the President of the United States, can not be lawfully sold or removed from such warehouse during the period of prohibition; and all warehousing bonds or transportation and warehousing bonds conditioned for the payment of tax on any such spirits so stored on the date such prohibition takes effect shall, as to all such spirits actually so stored, be canceled and discharged, provided the distiller of such spirits shall, in lieu of such bonds and prior to their cancellation, execute a bond in a penal sum of not less than $10,000, with sureties satisfactory to the collector of the district conditioned that the principal shall, during the period of such prohibition, safely cause to be kept in good condition all such spirits and the warehouse in which the same are stored, and shall not remove or suffer to be removed from the warehouse, contrary to law, any such spirits during the period of such prohibition. The distiller may also be permitted to retain in any such bonded warehouse distilled spirits on which, under the terms of any existing bond, the tax imposed thereon becomes due and payable prior to the date such prohibition takes effect, but on the removal of such prohibition the distiller shall, as to all spirits as to which the bonded period fixed by law has not expired and which remains stored in warehouse, execute new and satisfactory bond in the form required by existing law conditioned for the payment of the tax on all such spirits.

The amendment also authorizes upon the withdrawal of the distilled spirits from bonded warehouses, after the period of prohibition has ended, an allowance (in addition to that allowed by existing law) for loss by leakage or other unavoidable cause, not exceeding 1 proof gallon as to packages of a capacity of not less than 40 wine gallons; and a like additional allowance of 1 proof gallon as to each package withdrawn may be made for each period of four months, or a fraction thereof, for such spirits as shall have remained in warehouse during the period of prohibition and after the expiration of the maximum leakage period fixed by existing law.

The amendment also provides that liquors which may be in any customs bonded warehouse under the customs laws on the date such prohibition takes effect shall be permitted to remain therein without payment of any taxes or duties thereon, beyond the three-year period provided in section 2971 of the Revised Statutes, during such period of prohibition; and may be exported at any time during such extended period. Any imported spirits, wines, or other liquors as to which the three-year bonded period may expire after the passage of this act and prior to the date such prohibition takes effect may, at the option of the owner, remain in bond during such period of prohibition; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 302: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 303: The House bill imposed a tax upon perfume containing distilled spirits of $3.30 per wine gallon.

The Senate bill reduced this tax to $1.10; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, and 311: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 312: The House bill imposed a floor tax upon distilled spirits for beverage purposes of $4.80 per proof gallon, and upon spirits for nonbeverage purposes of $2.20. The Senate imposed a floor tax upon such spirits equal to the difference between the tax imposed by this act and existing law. The House recedes with an amendment imposing a floor tax of $3.20 per proof gallon upon beverage spirits.

On amendments Nos. 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, and 319: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 320: This amendment exempts from the tax on liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds those not containing sweet wine fortified with grape brandy; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 321: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 322: The House bill levied upon sweet wines held for sale on the day after the passage of the act a floor tax equivalent to 20 cents per proof gallon upon the grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of the wine. The Senate amendment increased this tax to 30 cents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 323: This amendment is a clerical change due to the action upon Senate amendment 318; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 324: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 325: This amendment makes it lawful to produce grape wines on bonded winery premises and to transport and use the same and like wines heretofore produced as distilling material for the production of nonbeverage spirits; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the words "of fermentation."

On amendment No. 326: This amendment imposes a penalty upon anyone who evades or attempts to evade the taxes imposed upon wines and grape brandy similar to the penalty imposed upon distilled spirits in section 3256 of the Revised Statutes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 327: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 328: The House bill imposed a tax upon nonalcoholic cereal beverages of 30 per cent of the price for which sold; the Senate amendment reduced this rate to 15 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 329 and 330: The House bill taxed unfermented grape juice and all fruit or berry juices at the same rates as other soft drinks except cereal beverages. The Senate bill exempted such drinks from tax; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 331: The House bill imposed a tax of 20 per cent upon the manufacturer's selling price of soft drinks other than cereal beverages. The Senate bill reduced this tax with the exception of the action heretofore mentioned in amendments 329 and 330 to 10 per cent. This recession taken in connection with the action upon amendments 329 and 330 makes the tax upon all soft drinks other than cereal beverages 10 per cent of the prices for which sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer.

On amendments Nos. 332 and 333: The House bill imposed a tax of 2 cents per gallon upon all natural mineral waters or table waters sold at over 10 cents per gallon. The Senate bill in these two amendments imposed a tax of 5 per cent upon the price for which sold, whether or not at over 10 cents per gallon; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 334: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 335: This amendment provides that the tax upon soft drinks shall without assessment by the commissioner or notice by the collectors be due and payable to the collectors at the time of the filing of each monthly return, and provides a penalty for nonpayment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 336: The House bill made the tax upon sales at soda fountains and similar places effective November 1, 1918. The Senate bill changed the date to May 1, 1919; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 337 and 338: The House bill imposed a tax of 2 cents for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for soft drinks, ice cream, or other similar articles of food or drink sold at soda fountains, ice-cream parlors, or other similar places of business with a proviso that where the charge for any such article is 7 cents or less the tax shall be 1 cent. The Senate amendments reduced this tax to 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, and 344: The following table shows the taxes proposed upon cigars in the bill as it passed the House and Senate and as agreed to in conference:

On amendment No. 351: The House bill imposed a tax upon manufactured tobacco and snuff of 26 cents per pound. The Senate bill reduced this tax to 18 cents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 352: This amendment exempted from floor tax the following amount of tobacco stock: Not over 50 pounds of manufactured tobacco and snuff or 1,000 cigars and not over 3,000 cigarettes held by any person. The House bill gave no similar exemption; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 353, 354, 355, and 356: The House bill imposed the following tax upon each package, book, or sheet of cigarette papers: Each containing more than 25 but not more than 50 papers, 1 cent; each containing more than 50 but not more than 100 papers, 2 cents; and each containing over 100 papers, for each 100 or fraction thereof, 2 cents. The Senate bill reduced the rates to one-half of the House rate; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 357: Section 35 of the act of August 5, 1909, provides that "unstemmed leaf tobacco in the natural leaf, in the hand, and not manufactured or altered in any manner, raised and grown in the United States, shall not be subject to any internal-revenue tax or charge of any kind whatsoever, and it shall be lawful for any person to buy and sell such unstemmed tobacco in the leaf, in the hand, without payment of tax of any kind."

This amendment repeals the above section and provides that sales or shipments of leaf tobacco by a dealer in leaf tobacco shall be in quantities of not less than a hogshead, tierce, case, or bale, except loose leaf tobacco comprising the breaks on warehouse floors, and except to a duly registered manufacturer of cigars for use in his own manufactory exclusively, and that dealers in leaf tobacco shall make shipments of leaf tobacco only to other dealers in leaf tobacco, to registered manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, or for export. The amendment also provides that upon all leaf tobacco sold, removed, or shipped by any dealer in leaf tobacco in violation of the aforementioned provision, or in respect to which no report has been made by such dealer in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (b), there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equal to the tax then in force upon manufactured tobacco, such tax to be assessed and collected in the same manner as the tax on manufactured tobacco.

The amendment also provides a penalty for the enforcement of the same. It is also provided that for the purposes of this section a farmer or grower of tobacco shall not be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco in respect to the leaf tobacco produced by him.

The House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 471. This amendment is a change in section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 472: The House bill provided that the jewelry tax should go into effect on November 1, 1918. The Senate amendment changes this date to April 1, 1919; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 473: The House bill imposed a tax upon articles made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory. The Senate amendment excludes surgical instruments falling within this class; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 474: This amendment confines the jewelry tax imposed by the House to articles sold by a dealer. The House recedes, with an amendment making the tax applicable when the article is sold by or for a dealer or his estate.

On amendment No. 475: The House bill imposed upon jewelry and similar articles when sold for consumption or use a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which sold. The Senate amendment reduces this to 5 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 476: The House bill provided that the jewelry tax should not apply to articles sold by any person whose principal business is not the sale of such articles for consumption or use and whose gross receipts from the sale of such articles during the preceding year does not exceed $200. The Senate amendment strikes out this exception; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 477: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 478: This amendment provides that the tax upon jewelry shall without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collectors be due and payable to the collectors at the time of filing each monthly return, and provides a penalty for nonpayment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 479: The House bill imposed a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount paid for any jewelry composed in whole or in part of platinum when sold for consumption or use. The Senate amendment strikes out this tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 480: This amendment provides that on and after May 1, 1919, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion-picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax of 5 per cent of the total rentals during the preceding month; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 481: This amendment is a change in section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 482: The House bill provided that the tax on cosmetics and proprietary and patent medicines should go into effect on November 1, 1918; the Senate amendment changed this date to May 1, 1919; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 483 and 484: The House bill imposed upon cosmetics and proprietary and patented medicines a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof when sold for consumption or use. The Senate amendments reduce this rate to 1 cent for each 25 cents or fraction thereof and confine the tax to cases where the article is sold by a dealer. The House recedes from amendment No. 483, fixing the rate, and recedes from amendment No. 484 with an amendment limiting the application of the tax to cases where the articles are sold by or for a dealer or his estate.

On amendment No. 485: This amendment provides that the House tax on proprietary and patent medicines should not apply to the sale of medicinal preparations which are not advertised to the general lay public. The House recedes with an amendment limiting the exemption to vaccines and bacterines which are not advertised to the general lay public, and to the sale of medicinal preparations, not so advertised, by a physician in personal attendance upon a patient.

On amendments Nos. 486 and 487: These amendments strike out the floor taxes imposed by the House bill upon the articles subject to the excise taxes held by a dealer and intended for sale on the day after the passage of this act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 488: The House bill imposed upon a domestic corporation an annual excise tax equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of so much of the fair average value of its capital stock for the preceding year as is in excess of $5,000. It also provided that in estimating the value of the capital stock the surplus and undivided profits should be included. This is the basis of the tax under the present law, with the rate increased 100 per cent. The Senate amendment changes the basis of the tax from the fair average value of the capital stock to the amount of the net assets shown on the books as of the close of the preceding income-tax year; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 489: The House bill based the capital stock tax in the case of foreign corporations upon the average amount of "capital actually invested" in the United States. The Senate amendment changes this basis and places this tax upon the average amount of "capital employed" in the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 490: This amendment, as part of the Senate's general plan of insurance taxation, strikes out the House provisions relating to the computation of the capital stock tax in the case of insurance companies; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 491: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 492: This amendment, as part of the Senate's general plan of insurance taxation, specifically exempts insurance companies from the capital stock tax. The House recedes with an amendment making the tax specifically applicable to mutual insurance companies and providing that in the case of every such domestic company the tax shall be based upon the sum of its surplus or contingent reserves maintained for the general use of the business and any reserves the net additions to which are included in the net income under the provisions of Title II, as of the close of its preceding income tax year; and providing that in the case of a foreign mutual insurance company the tax shall be based upon the same proportion of the sum of such surplus and reserve which the reserve fund upon business transacted within the United States is of the total reserve upon all business transacted.

On amendment No. 493: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 494: This amendment is a clerical change striking out certain language which is reinserted in slightly changed form at a different place by amendment No. 511; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 495: The House bill imposed a special license tax upon brokers at $100 a year. The Senate amendment reduces this to $40; and the House recedes with an amendment making the rate $50.

On amendments Nos. 496 and 497: The House bill provided that brokers who are members of stock or produce exchanges should pay in addition to the license tax imposed upon all brokers additional amounts as follows: If the average value during the preceding year ending June 30 of a seat or membership in such exchange was not more than $2,000, $50; if such value was more than $2,000 and not more than $5,000, $100; if such value was more than $5,000, $150. The Senate amendments strike out the additional tax of $50 where the value of the seat was less than $2,000; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 498: This amendment provides in addition to the pawnbroker's license tax an additional tax based on the value of the gross receipts for the preceding year; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 499: The House bill provided for a special license tax on ship brokers of $50 per year. The Senate amendment reduces this to $40; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 500: The House bill provides for a special license tax on customhouse brokers of $50 per year. The Senate amendment reduces this tax to $40; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 501: This amendment exempts from the special license tax on proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, edifices owned by religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies or organizations where all the proceeds from admissions inure exclusively to the benefit of such institutions, societies, or organizations, or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 502: The House bill imposed a special license tax on circus proprietors of $200 per year. The Senate amendment reduces this to $100; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 503: The House bill imposed a special license tax on proprietors or agents of public exhibitions or shows not otherwise enumerated of $20 per year. The Senate amendment reduces this to $15; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 504: The House bill provided that an aggregation of entertainments known as street fairs should not pay a larger tax than $200 in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia. The Senate amendment reduces this to $100; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 505, 506, 507, and 508: The House bill imposed upon persons carrying on the business of operating sight-seeing automobiles an annual tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the gross receipts during the preceding year ending June 30 from the operation of each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than seven. The Senate amendment, in lieu of this tax, imposes upon persons carrying on the business of operating or renting passenger automobiles for hire an annual tax of $10 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than two and not more than seven and $20 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than seven; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 509: The House bill provided that every person carrying on the business of a brewer, distiller, or liquor dealer in any place contrary to State laws shall pay in addition to all other taxes $1,000 annually, and provided that the payment of this tax should not be held to exempt any person from the penal provisions of the local laws. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 510: The House bill imposed a special license tax upon persons engaged in any trade, business, or profession, with certain exceptions. The Senate amendment strikes out this tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 511: This amendment is a clerical change inserting in slightly different form matter stricken out by amendment No. 494; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 512 and 513: The House bill provided that manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales exceed 100,000 and do not exceed 200,000 pounds shall each pay $24 annually, and that manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales exceed 200,000 pounds shall pay annually at the rate of 16 cents per thousand pounds or fraction thereof. The Senate amendments do not change the provisions of the House bill as to manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales are between 100,000 and 200,000 pounds, but provide that where the annual sales exceed 200,000 pounds the manufacturer shall pay annually $24 and at the rate of 16 cents per thousand pounds or fraction thereof in respect to the excess over 200,000 pounds; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 514 and 515: The House bill provides that manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed 200,000 and do not exceed 400,000 cigars shall each pay $24 annually, and that manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed 400,000 cigars shall each pay annually at the rate of 10 cents per thousand cigars or fraction thereof. The Senate amendments do not change the provisions of the House bill as to manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales are between 200,000 and 400,000 cigars, but provide that where the annual sales exceed 400,000 cigars the manufacturer shall pay annually $24 and at the rate of 10 cents per thousand cigars or fraction thereof in respect to the excess over 400,000 cigars; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 516: This amendment changes the basis of computing the tax on yacht users from net to gross tonnage; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 517: The House bill exempted from the special tax on users of yachts and motor boats those used exclusively for trade or national defense. The Senate amendment extends the exemption to those used exclusively for fishing; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 518 and 519: These amendments are clerical changes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 520: This amendment provides in case of special license taxes that if the corresponding tax imposed by the revenue act of 1916 was not payable by stamp an amount paid under such act for any period for which the corresponding tax is also imposed by Title X of the bill may be credited against the tax imposed by such title; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 521: The House bill imposed upon mail-order houses an annual tax equivalent to 1 per cent of the annual gross receipts in excess of $100,000. The Senate amendment strikes out this tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 522: The House bill imposes a special license tax upon users of automobiles and motorcycles. The Senate amendment strikes out this tax, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 523: The House bill imposed a tax upon the manufacturer of automatic vending and weighing machines operating such machines equivalent to 5 per cent of the annual gross amount received by the manufacturer from such operation. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and in view of the conference agreement under amendment 419 the House recedes with an amendment, which is explained in connection with that amendment.

On amendment No. 524: This section provides a penalty for any person who carries on any business or occupation for which a special license tax is imposed by Title X of the bill without having paid such tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 525: This amendment is a change in section number; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 526, 527, 528, 529, and 530: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes, with a minor clerical change in amendment No. 526.

On amendment No. 531: This amendment provides that the physicians, dentists, veterinary surgeons, and other practitioners who are required to pay a special tax under the Harrison Narcotic Act as amended, in respect to the business of distributing, dispensing, and giving away or administering any of the narcotics specified in that act, shall be only such persons as are in attendance upon patients "in the course of their professional practice"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 532 and 533: The House bill provided that it shall be unlawful for any person to purchase, sell, dispense, or distribute any of the drugs specified in the Harrison Narcotic Act except in the original stamped package or from the original stamped package, and exempted from this provision the dispensing, administration, or giving away of any such drug to a patient by a registered physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner in personal attendance upon such patient. The Senate amendments struck out the requirement of personal attendance and confined the exception to cases where the practitioner was acting in the course of his professional practice; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 534 and 535: The House bill repealed all the provisions of section 6 of the Harrison narcotic act, which exempts certain preparations and remedies containing small quantities of narcotics from the provisions of that act, but retained those provisions of section 6 which exempted from the operation of the Harrison Act decocanized coca leaves from which all cocaine has been extracted. Senate amendment No. 534 struck out this provision of the House bill, and Senate amendment No. 535 amended section 6 of the Harrison Act by adding a proviso requiring the keeping of records by the manufacturer, producer, or compounder of the preparations and remedies which under such section are exempted from the operation of the narcotic act. The House recedes from amendment No. 534 and recedes from amendment No. 535, with an amendment (1) retaining section 6 of the Harrison Act with a few verbal amendments, (2) providing more carefully for the keeping of the records provided for in the Senate amendment, and (3) providing that such records need not be kept by the manufacturer, producer, compounder, or vendor of preparations or remedies made out of decocanized coca leaves or other preparations of coca leaves which do not contain cocaine.

On amendments Nos. 536 and 537: These amendments are changes of section numbers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 538: The House bill provided that the stamp taxes should take effect on November 1, 1918; the Senate amendment changes this date to April 1, 1919; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 539, 540, and 541: The House bill imposed a stamp tax of 50 cents upon all policies of guaranty and fidelity insurance. The Senate amendments strike out this tax; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 542: The House bill provided that where a premium is charged for the execution of any fidelity or surety bond the stamp tax shall be 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged, and that policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the tax. The Senate amendment, as a part of the general plan of the Senate bill in taxing insurance, strikes out this provision; and the House recedes with an amendment providing that where a premium is charged for the execution, renewal, or continuance of such a bond the tax shall be 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged, and that policies of reinsurance shall be exempt.

On amendment No. 543: The House bill imposed a stamp tax upon sales, agreements of sale, or agreements to sell products or merchandise at any exchange or board of trade for future delivery. The Senate amendment makes also taxable such sales or agreements made under the rules or usages of any exchange or board of trade for future delivery; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 544: This amendment imposes a stamp tax of 5 cents on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged for policies of insurance against peril on the sea or inland waters or in transit by land, or by fire, lightning, tornado, etc., issued to a domestic corporation or partnership, or resident of the United States by any foreign insurer when such policy is not signed or countersigned by an officer or agent of the insurer in the United States in a locality within which such insurer is authorized to do business; and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the rate to 3 cents on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium, and exempting such policies from the policy tax imposed by section 503 of the bill.

On amendment No. 545: This amendment strikes out the provisions of the House bill creating an advisory tax board, but the Senate by amendment No. 550 reinserted this matter in a different form at another place; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 546: This amendment imposes a tax of 10 per cent on the net profits from the operation of (a) any mine or quarry situated in the United States in which children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work during any portion of the taxable year; or (b) any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day or more than six days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., or before the hour of 6 o'clock a. m., during any portion of the taxable year. Such tax is not to apply in the case of an employer relying in good faith upon an employment certificate issued under regulations prescribed by a board composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Labor, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; nor in the case of an employer who satisfies the Secretary of the Treasury that his employment of a child under the prescribed ages was due to an honest mistake of fact as to the age of such child; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 547: The House bill provided that deputy collectors appointed under the appropriation made by the bill for the expenses of the Internal Revenue Bureau should be appointed under the civil service, as well as all other employees under such appropriation. The Senate amendment permits deputy collectors of a class now outside the civil-service law to be appointed without regard to civil-service requirements; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 548: This amendment authorizes expenditures for furniture out of the appropriation made by the bill for the expenses of collecting internal-revenue taxes for the current fiscal year; and the House recedes with a clerical amendment.

On amendment No. 549: This amendment authorizes the expenditure of not exceeding $500 for street car fares in the District of Columbia out of the appropriations made by the bill for collecting internal-revenue taxes for the current fiscal year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 550: This amendment provides that not more than $60,000 of the amount appropriated by the bill for the collection of internal-revenue taxes may be expended for salaries and traveling expenses of members of an advisory tax board, to be appointed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, and provides that, under rules prescribed by the commissioner and approved by the Secretary, the Secretary or the commissioner may, and on the request of any taxpayer interested shall, submit to the board any question relating to the income and excess-profits tax laws. The House recedes with an amendment substantially reinserting the provisions of the House bill stricken out by amendment 545, providing (1) that the board is to be composed of not to exceed six members, to be appointed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, at an annual salary of $9,000; (2) that the board is to remain in existence for two years after the passage of the act, unless the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, designates an earlier time for the termination of its existence; and (3) that the commissioner may, and at the request of any taxpayer directly interested shall, refer to the board any question relating to the income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax laws.

On amendments Nos. 551 and 552: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 553: The House bill provided that whenever in the judgment of the commissioner necessary he may require any person by notice served upon him to make a return or such statements as he deems sufficient to show whether or not such person is liable to tax. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and inserts a provision authorizing the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to require any person, whether liable to tax or not, to file returns of income or such statements as may be deemed by him to be sufficient to show whether or not such person is so liable; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 554: This amendment consolidates and makes administrative changes in the penalty provisions of the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 555: By this amendment the commissioner may make regulations, with the approval of the Secretary, providing that any return required to be under oath by the portions of the bill relating to transportation, beverages, tobacco, admissions, excise, or special taxes, may be signed or acknowledged before two witnesses instead of under oath, if the amount of the tax is not in excess of $10; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 556: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 557: This amendment provides that where a tax under this act is required to be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of a sale and the sale is made on credit, then under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the tax may at the option of the vendor be returned and paid by him to the United States as if paid to him by the purchaser at the time of the sale, and gives a right of action in such cases to the vendor against the purchaser for the amount of the tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 558: This amendment provides that under regulations made by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the taxes on beverages, cigars, and tobacco, and the excise taxes shall not apply in respect to articles sold or leased for export and in due course so exported. It also provides that under proper regulations the amount of any internal-revenue tax erroneously or illegally collected in respect to exported articles may be refunded to the exporter instead of to the manufacturer, if the manufacturer waives his claim to refund; and the House recedes:

On amendment No. 559: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 560 and 561: These amendments are of a clerical and administrative character designed for the relief of persons who have made a contract for the sale of articles taxable under the act before notice of a tax imposed by it, under circumstances under which they can not pass the tax along to the purchaser; and the House recedes from amendment No. 560 and recedes with minor clerical changes from amendment No. 561.

On amendments Nos. 562, 563, 564, and 565: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 566: The House bill provided that certificates of indebtedness and uncertified checks may be received in payment of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes. The Senate amendment permits them to be received also in payment of any other taxes payable other than by stamp; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 567: This amendment amends section 3315 of the Revised Statutes so as to permit the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to issue stamps for restamping packages of wines which have been duly stamped and from which the stamps have been lost by unavoidable accident; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 568: This amendment is a change of section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 569: This amendment amended section 3689 of the Revised Statutes so that the permanent appropriation provided in that section could be used to pay judgments, including interest and costs, rendered for taxes or penalties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, notwithstanding the limitations imposed by the act of June 20, 1874. The House recedes with an amendment repealing that portion of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes relating to the refunding of internal-revenue taxes erroneously or illegally collected, and providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit for the fiscal year 1921 and annually thereafter an estimate of appropriations to refund and pay back duties or taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, and to pay judgments, including interest and costs, rendered for taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws.

On amendment No. 570: This amendment is a change of section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 571: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 572: This amendment amends sections 3164 and 3165 of the Revised Statutes. Section 3164 of the Revised Statutes provides that if a collector of internal revenue has knowledge of any violation of any revenue law he shall file with the district attorney a statement of the facts of the case within 10 days after coming into possession of such knowledge. The section as rewritten by the Senate makes it the duty of the collector, within 30 days after coming into possession of knowledge of any willful violation of any revenue law, to file a statement thereof with the district attorney, and makes minor clerical changes in that section. The Senate amendment to section 3165 of the Revised Statutes adds internal-revenue agents to the class of officers authorized by that section to administer oaths and take evidence in relation to the administration of the internal-revenue laws; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 573: The House bill provided a method of making a return or list where any person fails to make such return or list at the time prescribed by law. The Senate amendment extends the provision to cover cases where a return or list is not made at the time prescribed by regulation made under authority of law; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 574 and 575: The House bill provided that in case of failure to make a return at the proper time there shall be added to the tax 50 per cent of its amount, and if a false and fraudulent return is willfully made there shall be added to the tax 100 per cent of its amount. The Senate amendments reduce these penalties to 25 per cent and 50 per cent, respectively; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 576: This amendment is a change of section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 577: The House bill provided that if any person is summoned under Title XIII to appear to testify or produce books, the district courts should have jurisdiction to enforce obedience. The Senate amendment extended the provision to cover the case of any person summoned under this act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 578: This amendment gives jurisdiction to the district courts of the United States to issue in actions at law and suits in equity certain writs and orders, such as are necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the provisions of this act; and the House recedes with an amendment confining the jurisdiction of the court to cases where the relief is asked for by the United States.

On amendment No. 579: This amendment is a change of section number; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 580: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 581: The House bill provided for the acceptance of United States bonds in lieu of sureties on bonds required to be furnished by law. The Senate amendment added provisions for the protection of the United States and mechanics and material men; and the House recedes with a clerical amendment.

On amendment No. 582: The House bill provided for the repeal of any act inconsistent with this act. The Senate amendment specifies a number of acts and parts of acts to be repealed, all of which are incorporated in this bill; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 583, 584, 585, 586: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 587 and 588: These amendments are clerical changes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 589, 590, 591, and 592: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 593: This amendment reduces the rate of postage on first-class mail matter, effective July 1, 1919, to the rates in force before the passage of the last revenue act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 594: This amendment repeals the zone system for postage for second-class mail matter contained in the last revenue act and substitutes a rate of 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the first and second zones and 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof for delivery in any other zone, effective July 1, 1919; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 595, 596, 597, and 598: These amendments are changes in section numbers, and the House recedes with an amendment making further changes in section numbers.

On amendment No. 599: This amendment provides that all officers and enlisted personnel of the military and naval forces in the war against Germany who have been honorably discharged since November 11, 1918, or who may hereafter be honorably discharged shall be paid one month's salary. The House recedes with an amendment substituting for the Senate provision a section (1) providing that $60 shall be paid to each person serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war who has since April 6, 1917, resigned or been honorably discharged, or who may hereafter resign or be honorably discharged (within one year after the termination of the war in the case of officers and not later than the termination of the current enlistment in the case of enlisted personnel); (2) providing for the protection of the Government from unjust claims and double payments; (3) providing that this payment in the case of separation from the service before the passage of the act shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of the act, and in the case of separation from the service after the passage of the act shall be made at the time of separation from the service; and (4) providing that these amounts shall be paid out of the appropriations for "Pay of the Army" and "Pay of the Navy," respectively.

On amendment No. 600: This amendment provides that the so-called "Reed" or "bone-dry" amendment relating to transportation of liquors in interstate commerce shall be made applicable to the District of Columbia, thus making it unlawful to transport liquors in or out of the District; and the House recedes with an amendment changing the section number.

On amendment No. 601: This amendment provides that every individual, partnership, and corporation which, since the 6th day of April, 1917, has entered into any contract, undertaking, agreement, or transaction with the United States, or with any agency, officer, or commission of the United States, or with any other person, partnership, or corporation having contract relations with the United States, for the performance of any work or for the supplying of any materials or property for the use of or for the account of the United States, shall file with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and with the Attorney General, within 60 days after the passage of this act, a true and correct copy of every such contract, undertaking, agreement, or transaction, together with a true, accurate, and complete statement of all work and labor performed and materials and property supplied and an account of all moneys or other things of value received, expenses incurred, and profits made and realized from such contract, undertaking, agreement, or transaction.

The House recedes with an amendment providing that (1) every person who on or after April 6, 1917, has entered into any contract, undertaking, or agreement with the United States, or with any department, bureau, officer, commission, board, or agency under the United States or acting in its behalf, or with any other person having contract relations with the United States for the performance of any work or the supplying of any materials or property for the use of or for the account of the United States, shall, within 30 days after a request of the commissioner therefor, file with the commissioner a true and correct copy of every such contract, undertaking, or agreement; and (2) authorizing the commissioner (when not violative of the technical military or naval secrets of the Government) to have access to all information and data relating to any such contract, undertaking, or agreement in the possession, control, or custody of any department, bureau, board, agency, officer, or commission of the United States, and to call upon any such department, bureau, board, agency, officer, or commission for a full statement and description of any allowance for amortization, obsolescence, depreciation, or loss, or of any valuation, appraisal, adjustment, or final settlement made in pursuance of any such contract, undertaking, or agreement.

On amendment No. 602: This amendment makes a change in section number; and the House recedes with an amendment making a further change in section number.

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed until he concludes his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed until he concludes his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the gentleman from North Carolina having all the time he wants, but long observation has taught me that if a man gets permission to proceed until he concludes other Members of the House are apt to take up most of his time. I suggest that the gentleman take what time he likes, and then his time can be extended so far as it may be necessary.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask Members of the House not to interrupt me until I have finished my general statement. In that I shall try to include the important differences between the House and the Senate and explain the way in which the conferees composed those differences. After I shall have concluded, if any gentleman then desires to ask me any questions and I have time I will be glad to answer any question I can.

It will be almost impossible, certainly impracticable, for me or anyone to attempt before the House to explain each and every item of difference on each and every amendment that the Senate put on the House bill.

I shall confine my remarks to the important differences and the agreements reached by the conferees. The statement of the managers on the part of the House goes into details as to every single one of the amendments and explains the way in which the conferees disposed of them; and if one would take the statement and the bill in his hands and apply the explanation contained in the statement to the bill he would have a clear idea of each and every one of the amendments and its disposition.

During the war, in May last, the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States advised and urged that Congress should enact a revenue law that would produce $8,000,000,000 of revenue for a 12-month period. After three or four months of arduous labor the Committee on Ways and Means presented to the House a bill that would produce $8,000,000,000 of revenue. The House unanimously passed that bill. It went to the Senate. The Senate Finance Committee proceeded with the consideration of the House bill with a view of raising the $8,000,000,000. While considering it the war suddenly came to a close; the armistice was signed. The Secretary of the Treasury then addressed a letter to Senator SIMMONS, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and to myself, as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, advising and urging, since the war had ceased and our expenditures would necessarily be reduced, that the bill be modified in the Senate to the extent of reducing for this fiscal year the tax levy from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000, and to provide for tax levies thereafter—that is, after the fiscal year 1919—of $4,000,000,000 a year.

The Senate Finance Committee at once proceeded to revise the bill with that policy of reduction in view. It finally presented a bill to the Senate that would raise the $6,000,000,000 for this fiscal year and $4,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

Not only did the Secretary of the Treasury recommend and insist upon that reduction, but the President in his last address before Congress just before departing for Europe advised and urged Congress to adopt the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such reduction. I have doubted—and I fear that the future will confirm my doubts—the wisdom of such a large reduction as was advised and urged by the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States. This year our expenditures will amount to at least $19,000,000,000. That is the amount of the Treasury estimates. In my judgment they will amount to at least $20,000,000,000 for this fiscal year, some $10,000,000,000 or $12,000,000,000 less than we would have had to expend had the war continued. The administration, as I before stated, recommended that for this fiscal year the taxes be reduced from the House bill of $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000.

How are we going to get this $19,000,000,000? We can get it in this way, and in this way only: We have received $7,000,000,000 from the fourth liberty loan. That amount has been expended in our disbursements of this year. Our receipts from war-savings certificates will amount to about $1,000,000,000. That makes $8,000,000,000. We propose to get $6,000,000,000 of revenue from this bill. That makes $14,000,000,000. And the Treasury Department proposes to issue and sell $5,000,000,000 more of bonds between now and June 30. These items make up the $19,000,000,000.

If the expenditures run to $20,000,000,000, which, in my judgment, they will, the Secretary of the Treasury will have to come to Congress and get a new bond authorization, because the $5,000,000,000 that he proposes to sell between now and the 30th of June will exhaust the amount of authorizations heretofore made by Congress. He would have to come to Congress and get an authorization for another $1,000,000,000, or else issue short-time certificates of indebtedness which later would have to be paid by taxes or proceeds of future sales of bonds. The total authorizations of bond issues since our entrance into the war have been $22,000,000,000 in round numbers. We have sold, in round numbers, $17,000,000,000, leaving an authorization of $5,000,000,000.

Now take next year. When the Secretary of the Treasury advised a reduction in the revenues for the following years—that is, for the next fiscal year and the years thereafter—to $4,000,000,000, his annual report showed that we will require at least $6,500,000,000 in order to defray the expenditures of the next fiscal year, a difference between the tax bill which he urged and expenditures of $2,500,000,000. I have not been wrong in my predictions about increased expenditures when I presented bond bills and tax bills heretofore. I make another prediction, that instead of the expenditures next year being $6,500,000,000 they will be nearer $10,000,000,000, unless the President and Congress take a firmer hand in reducing appropriations and expenditures than they have heretofore done. Of this, I must confess, I am not very hopeful.

Now, we have a tax bill that will produce, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the President, $4,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1920. Say we receive in addition to the tax levied by this bill from customs and miscellaneous receipts $500,000,000. An expenditure of $10,000,000,000 will make a deficit of $5,500,000,000 in that year. We must get that from bonds. If expenditures are kept down to $6,500,000,000 we will still have a deficit of $2,000,000,000. We must get that from bonds. When we think of the enormous amount of bonds that are already piled up and that will be piled up in the next two years on the American people, which will be a mortgage upon them and their children, upon the energies and industries of the people for generations to come, we can well doubt the wisdom of the policy of making such large tax reductions, especially when the industries, especially the corporations, of the country have made such enormous profits in the last three years. Our industries could stand higher taxes, especially in view of the net loss and inventory reduction provisions in the bill, to which I shall refer later. After you deduct all the taxes that all the corporations of this country have paid or shall have paid for the years 1916, 1917, and 1918, and then deduct the average amount of incomes and profits that those corporations were making for the three prewar years, they will then have, in round numbers, $10,000,000,000 of clear net profits. In other words, give them first the average net income of $4,122,000,000, which the corporations were making during the three prewar years, or the total for the three years of $12,366,000,000. Then add to that every dollar of taxes that they shall have paid under this bill and under all other bills for the years 1916, 1917, and 1918. Then deduct that from the total amount of profits which they made in those years, and they will then have a clear net gain of $10,000,000,000. In other words, they have made in the three war years a total net profit, after deducting all taxes, of over $22,000,000,000. That is already made. That is already on the books. That is already piled up in their surplus and increase of capital and new investments. It would not have destroyed the industries of this country if we could have raised a little more tax in this bill. I believe that the farseeing and broad-visioned business man, when he sits right down and looks the question squarely in the face, will conclude with me that it is very doubtful whether we should have made such big reductions in the taxes in this bill, inevitably resulting in a longer permanent mortgage by bonds on the energies and industries of business.

We all know that there must be a transition period from war conditions to peace conditions, and in that time of transition there will be shrinkages in values, shrinkages in inventories. There will be losses, but the Senate initiated and the conferees, I think, have perfected provisions that will take care of industries that are going to have these net losses and the shrinkage of inventories on account of the transition period. With this taken care of, the industries could have stood a little more tax. I fear that instead of our bonded indebtedness being $25,000,000,000, as at the end of this fiscal year, it will be nearer $30,000,000,000 at the end of the next fiscal year. A bonded indebtedness of $30,000,000,000 is going to mean an annual interest charge of about $1,275,000,000, which must be paid by annual taxes. Such annual interest or tax charge is twice as much as the total amount of taxes we collected a year from all sources before the European war began. If we deduct the interest which we hope and propose to get from the allies for the $8,500,000,000 which we have and shall have loaned them by the end of this fiscal year, which will amount to about $400,000,000, you see that we will still have to raise between $800,000,000 and $900,000,000 of annual taxes to pay the interest if we continue to issue bonds.

There has been a great propaganda to defeat this bill and let the existing tax law remain. If so, that means $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 more of bonds to pile up on top of this $28,000,000,000 or $30,000,000,000 and more interest charges each year.

If this propaganda had succeeded in getting the conference committee or the membership of this House or the Senate to defeat this bill, of course that would reinstate the existing law, and under it the war profiteers in this country for the year 1918 would escape $1,700,000,000 of taxes. If any man shall vote against this bill with the idea that the taxes in it are too high, or whatever his reason or pretext, with the result of its defeat and the continuance of existing law, then he will vote to take from the Treasury, to take from the pockets of the people, from the toil and sweat and energy of the people, $1,700,000,000 and give it to the war profiteers, whom I have shown you have had billions and billions of dollars of profit in addition to all the profits they were making before the war. If any man votes against this bill with the idea of reinstating the old law, he is voting to give the United States Steel Corporation out of the pockets of all the people, out of the Treasury of the United States, $165,000,000, because that is the difference which the United States Steel Corporation, based upon the profits of 1917—we have not the figures for those of 1918—would have to pay under this bill and under the existing law. If there be one Member who proposes to vote against this bill with the idea of reinstating the old law, he will be voting to give the Standard Oil Trust Companies of the United States $20,000,000, adding that much more to their fabulous profits. He will be voting to give the Bethlehem Steel Co. $10,000,000. He will be voting to give the Utah Copper Co. $5,000,000. He will be voting to give the five big meat-packing companies, the meat-packing combine, over $16,000,000 to add to their war profits. These are the differences between what this bill will levy upon them and what the existing law levies upon them. There are 20 corporations in this country that alone would save $240,000,000 out of their enormous war profits by the defeat of this bill. The defeat of this bill would lose to the Government over $200,000,000 of taxes on whisky and beer. Gentlemen, under existing conditions no man can afford to vote against this bill with the idea of continuing the existing law.

The Senate reduced the tax levy from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 for this fiscal year. It cut down not so much the individual income tax and the war-profit tax of the House bill—they remain practically the same—but it cut down the excise and special taxes; that is, special taxes levied on articles of the various industries. It reduced the individual income tax for the fiscal year 1919 about $50,000,000 and reduced the corporation income tax about $119,000,000 for the same year, and reduced the excess-profits taxes from the provisions of the House bill down to 30 per cent on the net income in excess of the deduction and not in excess of 20 per cent of the capital invested, and 60 per cent on all of the net income over 20 per cent of the invested capital.

The House bill had it 35 per cent on all of the net income in excess of the deduction and not in excess of 15 per cent of the invested capital, and 50 per cent on the amount of the net income between 15 and 20 per cent of the invested capital, and 70 per cent on the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent on the invested capital. In the general reductions the Senate followed the recommendation of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Senate and the conferees retained the war-profit tax of 80 per cent on war profits over and above the deduction.

The conferees accepted the Senate 30 per cent rate in the first bracket and increased the rate in the second bracket to 65 per cent for the calendar year 1918. But for the year beginning January 1, 1919, the Senate reduced the excess-profits taxes in the first bracket to 20 per cent and the second bracket to 40 per cent, which is a pretty large reduction. That was on account of the recommendation of the President and the Secretary to reduce the total taxes to $4,000,000,000. The conferees accepted this reduction.

Though the 80 per cent war-profits tax is eliminated for the next fiscal year—since there are no war profits for 1919–20—the conferees put in a provision extending the 80 per cent war-profits tax over into the calendar year 1919 to catch the profits that are derived in 1919 from war contracts made in 1918 and 1917, so that the war profiteers will not get off with 80 per cent eliminated after January 1, 1919. They will receive some income during 1919 from war contracts made between the beginning of the war and the signing of the armistice, November 11. The conferees, Senate and House, were unanimous in the opinion that this should be done. The 80 per cent tax will, under this provision, apply to such income.

I ought to say here that the Senate followed the method and policy of taxation, and practically the subjects of taxation, of the House bill. There were only three exceptions in which they departed widely and adopted an entirely new policy of taxation. These exceptions were the estate tax, the insurance tax, and capital-stock tax. After a full and free discussion in conference the policies of the House bill in these instances were adopted with some modifications, to which I will call attention later.

The House had a provision known as the differential corporation tax. We had a differential of 6 per cent. The House bill provided that corporations should pay 12 per cent on so much of the amount of the net income as does not exceed the sum of (1) the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year plus (2) the amount paid during the taxable year out of earnings or profits in discharge of bonds and other interest-bearing obligations outstanding prior to the beginning of the taxable year plus (3) the amount paid during the taxable year in the purchase of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1918, and 18 per cent on the remainder of the net income retained in the business. When we put in the 18 per cent provision the war was on, and the Government needed all the money it could reasonably and justly get. The individual income tax being so heavy, there would be a tendency in the corporation not to pay dividends but to pile them up in a surplus so that the stockholders in the high surtax class could escape liability to taxation. As I said, we needed all the money we could reasonably and justly get at that time to vigorously prosecute the war. But now the importance of this differential is not as great as during the war.

The Senate struck out the differential, and the House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment increasing the corporation income tax rate on corporate income for years succeeding 1918 from 8 to 10 per cent. That will make a difference—an increase—of about $150,000,000 a year in the taxes.

The normal income tax on individuals for 1918 is kept at 12 per cent, like the House bill, with the split differential of 6 per cent up to $4,000 of net income in excess of the specific exemption. But under the policy of reducing the taxes to $4,000,000,000 after January, 1919, the Senate cut down the normal tax on individuals to 8 per cent, with the split differential of 4 per cent, and the House conferees agreed to that.

The surtaxes are practically and substantially like the House only there are more brackets and slightly different rates are made. The House yielded to the Senate provision on the surtaxes. The Senate rates on surtaxes are practically the same as the House up to a $10,000 income—in fact there is not more than $15 difference in the tax between the House bill and the Senate bill to a man who earns $6,000, $7,000, $8,000, or $10,000, but from $10,000 up to $200,000 there is some difference between the rates—the Senate rates being lower.

For instance, a man having an income of $12,500 under the House bill would pay $1,320 and under the Senate bill $1,235. You see there is quite a difference at once after you leave the $10,000 income. A man making $20 000 would pay under the House bill $2,895 and under the Senate bill $2,630. A man making $50,000 a year would pay under the House bill $12,495 and under the Senate bill $11,030. A man making $80,000 a year would pay under the House bill $27,295 and under the Senate bill $23,930. A man making $100,000 would pay under the House bill $39,095 and under the Senate bill $35,030. But when you reach $200,000 and up there comes another change. At $300 000 under the House bill a man would pay $165,095, while under the Senate bill he would pay $173,030. When you get up to $1,000,000, under the House bill a man would pay $647,095 and under the Senate bill $703,030. A man making $5,000,000 would pay under the House bill $3,527,095 and under the Senate bill $3,783,030, or about $250 000 more. On the whole, there is a difference of only about $50,000,000, being the amount which the Senate rate levies on the individual incomes less than under the House bill. So they are, on the whole, substantially the same, the total amount levied under the House bill on individual incomes being $1,482,000,000 and under the Senate rates $1,432,000,000.

The Senate retained the provisions of the House bill excluding partnerships and individuals from excess or war profits taxes.

There are two important amendments which the Senate incorporated, relative to the excess and war profits taxes and the income tax. They are what we call the inventory and the net loss relief provisions. The net loss relief provision in the Senate amendment was extended indefinitely and reached back to 1916. After discussion of the matter the conferees agreed that it was wiser and safer to limit those relief provisions for the one year, for the transition period from war conditions to peace conditions, and extend it just for this year, 1919. Both of those provisions are innovations in American tax laws. They exist to a certain extent in the British tax laws.

The inventory provision is this: If at any time within 1919 the taxpayer discovers that he has sustained an actual loss on account of the reduction in values of his inventory which he returned for the taxable year of 1918, he can have that loss ascertained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and have his tax on his returns for 1918 redetermined after deducting from his net income of 1918 the amount of such loss, and have returned to him the difference between the tax paid on such return and the tax found after such redetermination to be due. For instance, we will say that a wool manufacturer had $500,000 of wool on hand at the end of his business or taxable year, December 31, 1918. He included that in his tax returns in order to make up his net income. That was put in at $500,000. It cost him that much. It was worth that much. He had made that return, as the law requires, as constituting part of all of the other assets upon which is estimated his net income. Suppose in this transition period from war to peace there is a shrinkage in the value of that wool, so that what was estimated to be worth $500,000 on December 31, 1918, on April 1, 1919, is worth only $250,000. On the face of it he would have a net loss of $250,000, and on which amount he had already paid his income and excess or war profits taxes, based on his net income return for 1918.

The bill does not provide, as I have seen stated in the newspapers, that he could have deducted the $250,000 shrinkage value from his net income of 1918 and have the tax redetermined accordingly. In that shrinkage he must show to the commissioner that he has sustained an actual loss by reason of it. That actual loss may not be over $50,000, it may be but $20,000, or it may be $150,000, or as much as the $250,000, but whatever loss he shows he sustained by reason of the reduction in value of his inventory he has the right to have it deducted from his net income for 1918 and have his tax for 1918 recomputed on the basis of a deduction of the loss from his net income. Suppose it should turn out that with the $500,000 of wool on hand he had already contracted and sold to his customers the finished product based upon that price of wool. He then will have lost nothing, although the wool has shrunk in value to $250,000. Suppose he sells it at that rate and makes his profit and then begins to buy wool for the next month at a lower price and sells the finished product upon the basis of the price for which he purchased it, and so on, he loses nothing by such reduction in wool value. He must show an actual loss by virtue of the shrinkage. If there be an actual loss sustained, and there will be millions and hundreds of millions of losses sustained in that way, and the taxpayer shows it, he then can go to the commissioner or to the advisory board and have his taxes readjusted, as before explained. Suppose, in the case given, that he lost in 1919 $100,000 by such shrinkage in value and had given in his return a net income of $500,000 for 1918. The commissioner must go back and take the 1918 returns and deduct the $100,000 of loss on account of the shrinkage in value from the net income of $500,000 and redetermine his taxes for 1918 on a basis of $400,000 net income instead of $500,000, and the difference in a tax on $500,000 and on $400,000 is to be refunded to him. While it is an innovation, and it struck me at first as unwise, the more I considered it the more just it appeared to me, and it appeared just to the House conferees, and I believe it will appear just to the membership of the House and to the country at large.

Another innovation to which I have referred, which the Senate put in the bill, was the net loss provision. As I said, the Senate had the time unlimited for the future, and it reached back to the taxes of 1916; that is, the Senate provision permitted a redetermination of the taxes as far back as 1916 and for all time in the future. The conferees finally concluded that the best thing to do was to limit it to the transition period; in other words, the one year 1919. The inventory and net loss relief provisions are emergency provisions, and the conferees agreed to treat them in that way. The net loss provision is this: If a business or trade shows in 1919, in its fiscal year, between October 31, 1918, and January 1, 1920, which includes the calendar year of 1919, a net loss instead of a net profit, it can take the amount of that loss from the income upon which it paid the taxes for 1918 and have the 1918 tax redetermined, just as I explained in the case of the inventory, and have the difference between the tax paid and the tax as redetermined refunded to it. In other words, if the trade or business made $500,000 clear net profit in 1918, and this year—1919—during the transition period, instead of making a profit it loses $100,000, then we permit that business to go to the commissioner and ask for a redetermination of its tax for 1918. The commissioner will deduct from the income of $500,000 as returned for 1918 the $100,000 loss, leaving $400,000. Upon the basis of $400,000 income the 1918 tax will be recomputed, and the difference between the tax paid on the $500,000 and the tax computed on $400,000 income will be returned to the taxpayer.

These are two relief provisions in the bill which the House conferees thought were right and proper as modified by the conferees, but there are some relief provisions, especially those known as the mineral, oil, and gas provisions, in this bill that I can not subscribe to, and I reserved the right to say so upon the floor of the House. I can not subscribe to them because I regard them as pieces of special favoritism. Many others do not so regard them. With due respect to my colleagues SCOTT FERRIS, CARTER, HASTINGS, and the other Oklahoma Members, and some Members from Missouri and other States, who have importuned me and the other House conferees night and day, so long and so often, with respect to these provisions, and have been so urgent that they should remain in the bill, I want to say that, in my judgment, they are unwise, unjust, and unwarranted. But we need not quarrel about them now; they are in the bill. I do not like to take up the time of the House telling what some of these provisions are. One of them provides that when a man discovers a mine or gas or oil field, or an oil or gas well, a prospector or an adventurer, and sells—it makes no difference how much profit he may make, he may put in $10,000 and make by sale $1,000,000 profit in five days—his income surtax shall in no case exceed 20 per cent of the selling price, though all other classes of individuals—farmers, merchants, manufacturers, doctors, lawyers, or persons engaged in any other business—if they put in $10,000 on a proposition and make $1,000,000 clear profit out of it, whether overnight or in a year, they will have to pay $583,510 in surtaxes which the bill provides, but the mine, oil, or gas prospector or discoverer under this provision of the bill will pay only $200,000. There is a similar provision in the case of the war or excess profits tax. When a corporation discovers a mine, an oil field, an oil well, or gas well and sells, it does not make any difference how much clear profit it makes, a hundred per cent or a thousand per cent on the capital invested, its war and excess profits taxes shall not exceed 20 per cent of the selling price, although corporations in every other kind of business making the same profit on the same capital must pay from 30 to 80 per cent tax on their profits.

There is another provision that I did and do not like, which seems to me and to my colleague on the conference committee [Mr. DIXON] is unwarranted and can not be justified, and yet I am afraid I had a majority of the House conferees against me on it. It is that if a corporation has an income from gold mining, no matter how big it is and how large a per cent of profit on its capital invested, it pays no excess-profit tax on it. In other words, if the corporation had $1,000,000 net income from a gold-mining industry, it would not pay any excess or war profit tax on it, though that income was 100 per cent profit on its invested capital. They had a plausible argument for it. They say that everything has appreciated in value except gold, which has depreciated in value, and that gold-mining machinery and labor and supplies have increased wonderfully; that gold is the world's standard of value and that we ought to encourage its production, and therefore the profit of the gold mines should not bear a war-profit or excess-profits tax. I looked at it in this way, that even suppose the cost of production had increased wonderfully and even if gold had greatly depreciated, as it has, compared with other articles, in spite of all such handicaps if a corporation in the gold-mining business should make 50 per cent profit on its investment, why is it not as able to pay an excess or war profit tax on that as well as a corporation manufacturing shoes and making 50 per cent on a like amount of capital? If such a corporation is able in spite of all handicaps to make as large a per cent as any other corporation, it ought to pay the same tax as a corporation in any other business making the same profits on the same amount of capital; but the gold-mining argument appealed to a majority of the House conferees and the provision went in.

If I had my way, this bill would not have been quite as it is now. But I found on the conference committee five Senate conferees and four other House conferees, and each one of them had a way, too. So I just could not have my way, because they insisted on having their way. But, on the whole, I believe we have got a good bill, as good as five House conferees could make it in conjunction with five Senate conferees. [Laughter.]

I think we have a bill, on the whole, that every patriotic man in the House and Senate can stand for and will stand for, although he will find many provisions in it that he does not like. We had to give and take. We had to have a bill. If we did not have this bill, we would have had to be content with the existing law, and the war profiteers of this country would benefit just $1,700,000,000.

Another important difference between the House and the Senate was with respect to consolidated returns. The House bill declared specifically that the corporations having subsidiary corporations should not be permitted to file consolidated returns; that is, combine the capital invested and income of all the subsidiaries and find the capital invested and net income of the group and pay the income tax on that basis, because many large corporations by such method would get out of paying a large amount of taxes. The Senate struck that out and most strenuously contended for consolidated returns. While Dr. Adams, who is chairman of the Advisory Tax Board, stated before the conference committee that there will be very little difference between the taxes that will be paid under consolidated returns and those that would be paid under non-consolidated returns, in my judgment the difference will amount to over $200,000,000. I found that practically every corporation in this country that had subsidiaries was in favor of the consolidated returns. The Senate conferees were very insistent, and I may say stubborn, upon having the consolidated returns. There was a unique difference between the Senate conferees and House conferees. The two worst things in this bill in our judgment were the two best things in the Senate's judgment. And the two features that I thought ought to be eliminated beyond all doubt were the two features that the Senate conferees were most insistent upon, the oil and gas and mining provision, to which I have referred, and the consolidated-return provision.

It was the unanimous opinion of the conferees of the Senate and the House that while the Senate amendments did not do it, as the House bill did, that the profiteers on Government war contracts should not escape taxation through the several relief provisions in the bill. We protected the Government against them even with respect to the consolidated-return proposition and provided that no corporation organized since August 1, 1914, since the European war began, shall be permitted to make a consolidated return if 50 per cent of its gross income came from gains, commissions, profits, or other income derived from Government war contracts. In such a case the corporation can not file a consolidated return, but it must make a separate return, and its net income and taxes must be computed upon its capital invested and not the investments of some other affiliated company.

It is estimated that there are several thousand of such corporations, most of them war corporations incorporated to take some Government contracts or subcontracts. Some of the subsidiary companies of the big companies organized since August 1, 1914, with a capital of from $2,000 to $5,000, will make a profit out of war contracts running from $2,000,000 to $12,000,000, and we provided in the House concurring amendment that the Government should be protected against them and that they should pay on their own net income and profits, based on their own invested capital. The conferees put into these relief provisions half a dozen or more provisions excepting these war-contract corporations from their benefit, which the Senate conferees readily agreed to as right and proper.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it embarrass the gentleman to yield to a question in regard to the consolidated returns?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have in mind a certain corporation with an invested capital of approximately $15,000,000, which organized a subsidiary corporation with a capital of $1,000, whose profits so far have been in one transaction with the Government; that is to say, the profits of this corporation of $1,000 capital have been $1,000,000. I would like to have the gentleman explain how under this proposition that corporation would be taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Such a corporation will pay income tax on $1,000,000 and will have its percentage of profits for the excess and war profits tax computed upon the invested capital of $1,000. The war-profits tax will be 80 per cent on all profits in excess of 10 per cent of its capital invested plus the specific deduction of $3,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under the Senate consolidated return provision that company would pay no tax whatever?

Mr. KITCHIN. Very little, if anything. Its return would be consolidated with the parent company and other subsidiaries. In other words, the parent company and this subsidiary company and other subsidiary companies, if any, would make a consolidated return, and the total capital and the total income of all would be computed, and the little company would get the advantage of the $15,900,000 capital invested for purpose of the deduction. Instead of getting about 80 per cent of its net income we would get little, if any, tax.

The Senate provided for quarterly payments of all income and war or excess profits taxes—that is, when the tax return is filed the taxpayer can pay one-quarter of his total tax, and then, three months after the time fixed by law for filing the return, pay another one-quarter of the total tax; then, six months after the time fixed by law for filing the return, pay another one-quarter of the total tax; and nine months after the time fixed by law for filing the return pay the remainder. The conferees agreed to the Senate provision. The House bill authorized the commissioner to extend the time for filing returns whenever, in his judgment, good cause existed for allowing an extension, but provided that except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad that the extension should not exceed two months. The Senate eliminated the two-month limit. The conferees agreed upon a six-month period as the maximum time the commissioner could allow as an extension of time for filing returns, except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to get through in half an hour.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have half an hour more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed for half an hour more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, as to the definition of "invested capital," it is practically the same as the definition in the House bill, with but one exception. The House bill provided that invested capital meant, in the case of tangible property, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, the actual cash value of such property, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor. The Senate put in a provision, to which the House conferees finally agreed, some of us very reluctantly, that where the taxpayer can show to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the actual cash value of the tangible property at the time it was paid in was clearly and substantially in excess of the par value of the stock issued for it, the real value of the tangible property at the time it was turned over for the shares of stock could be counted as part of the invested capital.

The House bill also specifically provided that "paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits" should not include the increase in the value of any asset above the original cost until such increase is actually realized by sale. This provision was stricken out by the Senate, and the conferees accepted the amendment, because it was surplusage and merely declaratory of an accepted general principle controlling the whole computation of invested capital.

There were in the Senate amendment several specific relief provisions other than those to which I have heretofore referred, and one section in the House bill, which included several general relief provisions, which we thought was very liberal. The conferees finally agreed that it would be safer and better and do no injustice to the honest taxpayers to strike out all these specific and general relief provisions and have just one general relief provision, which is section 327, paragraph (d), and begins on page 134.

I will read it:

(d) Where upon application by the corporation the commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profits upon a normal invested capital nor (2) in which 50 per cent or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under sec. 233 of Title II) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

The bill provides that in the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be an amount which bears the same proportion to the net income of the taxpayer, in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000, for the taxable year as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income, in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000, for such year. Under the specific provisions no official had any particular responsibility, and one could take any case he desired, whether it was an exceptional hardship or not, and make application that the tax should be computed on the basis of representative corporations.

The conferees, as I said awhile ago, as a matter of safety to the Government, without doing any injustice to the taxpayer, in case he is actually entitled to relief, provide that the taxpayer, in order to get relief under this representative corporation section, must apply to the commissioner and must show to the commissioner that it is an exceptional hardship; not that he is making an exceedingly large profit on invested capital and therefore his tax is exceedingly large, but it must be an exceptional hardship owing to the peculiar and exceptional conditions surrounding the taxpayer's business, income, invested capital, and so forth; and the commissioner must find, and so declare of record, that the case is one of exceptional hardship before it can be considered under section 327.

This provision gives a taxpayer only that to which he is entitled, because he ought not to have relief unless, owing to the peculiar situation of his business or capital or income or something, the payment of the tax would be an exceptional hardship upon him without the benefit of the relief provision.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me get through with this first, please. I do not think the House or the Senate will object for one moment to that relief provision taking the place of the others, because it is a safeguard to the Government; and I believe it will save millions and millions of dollars by substituting it for the provisions which the Senate had.

There is one very ingenious provision that the Senate put in, which is a very wise one. It accomplishes what the House intended to accomplish and what its provision substantially would accomplish, but it would not do it in such a skillful and scientific way as will the Senate provision, which the House conferees agreed to, with an amendment excepting from its application the war-contract corporation. The House bill provided that in the case of a corporation the earnings of which are to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the stockholders of the corporation and not to the capital invested, where capital is not a material income-producing factor, the excess-profit tax should not exceed 20 per cent. That would take care of corporations doing the business of architecture, corporations doing the business of insurance agencies, or that had no capital invested, or where whatever little capital was invested was not a material factor that produced the income.

I think the Senate provision is an improvement on that of the House. It describes such corporations as personal-service corporations and provides that they shall be taxed just as partnerships are taxed. If, for instance, such a corporation makes $100,000 the taxable year, each stockholder will pay income tax on the amount of earnings he would be entitled to if distributed, whether distributed or not by the corporation, as if it were a partnership. I think we can all agree to that provision.

But here is one important thing that the Senate overlooked. Many, and perhaps a large majority of corporations, having cost-plus contracts would come under the personal-service corporation provision of the Senate. In these cases the Government furnished the money or capital. For example, take a corporation that was organized for the purpose of building a cantonment or constructing ships. The stockholders of other corporations would organize a corporation with only a nominal capital, say, of from $1,000 to $5,000. It would furnish no money or capital with which to execute the contract. The Government would furnish all. So under the interpretation of the Senate's language these corporations would escape all excess-profits and war-profits taxes. Some of these little thousand-dollar corporations made a million—in some cases several million—dollars profit, one of which the gentleman from Ohio referred to. These would have entirely escaped the excess and war profit taxes. But the House conferees proposed an amendment which protects the Government and compels the cost-plus contract corporations to pay such taxes. The Senate conferees readily agreed to it. Like the House conferees, they favored catching the profiteers under Government war contracts with the excess and war profits taxes and leaving no loophole for escape. We therefore provided that this section should not apply to any corporation 50 per cent or more of whose gross income was received from Government contracts. So we caught all the cost-plus contract gentlemen under that provision, and their corporations pay, as other corporations, the full corporation income and excess and war profits taxes.

I must hurry on. I want now to refer to some important subjects of taxation retained or stricken out of the House bill. The House bill taxes the salary of the President and of the Federal judges, also the salaries of State and municipal officers, and the interest from certain State and municipal bonds. As I said to the House when the bill was being considered by it, that in my opinion it was doubtful whether we could constitutionally tax the salaries of State and municipal officers or the interest on State and municipal bonds, but I supported the House provision on the floor and gave reasons why it should remain in so that the question might go to the Supreme Court for final determination, and if constitutional we would get several millions of dollars to help win the war. But since the war has been concluded, since the armistice has been signed and the taxes reduced, the Senate struck the provision out. In fact, the Senate also struck out the tax on the President's and judges' salaries, as well as the tax on salaries of State and municipal officers, and the tax on the interest from State and municipal bonds.

The House conferees yielded as to striking out the tax on the salaries of State and municipal officers and the interest from State and municipal bonds, but the Senate conferees yielded to the House provision with respect to the President's and judges' salaries. So that the President's and judges' salaries will be subject to tax like the salaries of all other Federal officers, like yours and mine and like the income of every other citizen of the country. [Applause.]

The automobile-license tax and the tax on gasoline, which were written in the House bill during the war, were stricken out by the Senate. The House conferees yielded.

The provision in the House bill taxing mail-order houses whose gross annual sales exceed $100,000 was stricken out by the Senate. Its conferees insisted on the amendment. We of the House yielded. We yielded to a great many Senate amendments to the bill in order to get this bill to tax the war profiteers. We feared that some people in the Senate and in the House would like to have some excuse to defeat this bill in order that certain corporations and influential constituents might pay under the present law and thereby escape the war-profits tax.

As I said a few moments ago, this bill as it comes from the conference—and I want the membership of this House to bear this in mind—pursues in the matter of taxation, practically on all subjects, the methods and policies adopted by the House. The Senate did not change the policy or method of the House bill, barring the change of the rate of tax and removal in a few instances of the tax in order to reduce the total amount from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000, except in three instances, and in each of those three instances the Senate adopted an entirely different method and policy of taxation from that in the House bill.

These were with respect to the estate tax, the tax on insurance of all kinds, and the capital-stock corporation tax. The Senate struck out all the provisions in the House bill relating to those three subjects of taxation and substituted an entirely different plan and method of taxation. After considering each one of those propositions for some time the conferees agreed to go back to the House method and policy of taxation in all of them. For the estate tax the Senate substituted what is called a legacy tax, which would collect only $22,000,000 a year, while the House bill would collect $110,000,000 the first year and the second year $140,000,000. The conferees in returning to the House estate-tax method did modify the rate of taxation on estates, and, since the war is over, I think justly so. The House estate tax was entirely too high for peace times, and we reached the very highest limit even in war times. When the conferees agreed to accept the House estate-tax policy we agreed to accept the present existing estate-tax rates on net estates of $1,500,000 and over. The rates on the net estates under $1,500,000 will be somewhat lower than the rates under existing law.

In view of the high estate taxes, inheritance taxes, in the several States, the House conferees thought the rates agreed to were sufficiently high in peace times. There was one other important modification or amendment to the estate-tax provision of the House bill which the conferees agreed to. The House provision did not permit, nor does existing law, exemption from taxation of bequests, legacies, gifts, or devises to charitable, educational, religious, literary, and scientific institutions. That exemption was put into the conference bill. Also we extended the time for the payment of these taxes, which the commissioner could grant, from two years to three years. That is, we gave the commissioner the power, in cases where he thought it was justified, to extend the time for payment to three years. The conference action also exempts from the tax under this bill and the existing law the transfer of the net estate of any decedent who has died or may die while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war or from injuries received or disease contracted while in such service.

The conference agreement also changes from three years to two years the period of time within which a transfer of a material part of his property by a decedent before his death shall be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death. With these exceptions, and the exception of a few amendments making minor administrative changes, the estate tax is exactly as we passed it in this House, line for line and word for word.

The House insurance tax provisions have been restored in every particular.

The capital-stock tax was stricken out by the Senate and a tax upon the net assets shown by the corporation books was substituted. This, as it was discovered in the conference, would work a great injustice to and a discrimination against many corporations and would get several million dollars of taxes less. After analyzing in the conference the new method proposed by the Senate, it was agreed to restore the capital-stock tax provision just as the House had it.

I will now take up important Senate amendments relating to entirely new matters and the conference action thereon. As I said a few days ago in the House, some of these amendments are entirely without the province of a revenue bill, but being in the bill by the Senate's action the conference had to face and consider them. To the so-called bone-dry amendment, applying to the District of Columbia, the House conferees yielded.

Then there is the extra tax on the income of manufacturers employing child labor. Remembering what took place in the House when the bill went to conference, and the sentiment of the House in favor of that amendment, the House conferees yielded.

To the amendment repealing the additional 1 cent on letter and card postage, the House readily yielded. So that after July 1, 1919, we will not have to pay 3 cents letter postage, but will go back to the old postage rate of 2 cents on letters.

A Senate amendment repealed the existing law as to the zone rates on second-class postage matters, magazines, and papers. The Senate yielded on that, and the zone system will remain just as it is in the present law.

As to the Senate amendment taxing political contributions, the Senate conferees refused to accept the amendment which the House had instructed its conferees to propose and insist upon, striking out the retroactive feature of the Senate amendment and applying the tax only to future contributions. They, therefore, against the protest of some of the House conferees, yielded, and between us I think they, or some of them, wanted to yield. [Laughter.] Some of the Senate conferees declared that they wanted the political-contribution amendment making it retroactive remain in its "original symmetry, purity, and beauty," and they would withdraw the Senate amendment or at once yield, if the amendment striking out the retroactive features was insisted upon. [Laughter.]

As I stated in the House here when we had this matter up about a week ago it was my judgment, it mattered not which motion, whether that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] or that of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] the House adopted, the Senate was going to have some good reason to yield and not let that provision go into the law. So it will not be in the law.

Now, I come to a very important and very just provision, which the House conferees and Senate conferees very willingly agreed upon. It is in regard to the so-called month's pay to officers and enlisted men in our military and naval forces. When the House conferees read the Senate bill they found a provision giving one month's pay to the officers and enlisted men in the Army and Navy, including the Nurse Corps, but it only applied to those officers and men who had been honorably discharged after November 11, 1918, or who shall hereafter be discharged. It did not give the man any pay who had been discharged prior to the armistice. It gave the officers a month's pay and the enlisted men a month's pay. In other words, it would mean that a colonel would get $333 when he was discharged and an enlisted man, who had gone right to the front and bared his breast to the enemy's shot and shell, would only get about $36. We did not think that was the right, fair, and equitable thing to do. This is a bonus; it is a guaranty in the nature of a token of the country's appreciation of and as a tribute to the loyalty, valor, and sacrifices of our men of the Army and Navy, and when we are bestowing such gratuities we feel that the enlisted man was entitled to just as much consideration as the highest general. So the conferees provided that the enlisted man should have the same as an officer—each should have $60. [Applause.]

We provided, too, that any enlisted man who had been honorably discharged since April 6, 1917, should have this pay or gratuity the same as the man who was discharged the day after November 11, 1918. [Applause.]

I want you to read this provision and see if we did not do the right, fair, and just thing, especially under the present embarrassed financial condition of the Government. Oh, I know some of you gentlemen would like to say 6 months' or 12 months' pay; some would like to say $500 or $1,000; but, gentlemen, you underrate the sense of honor and pride and intelligence of the enlisted men in the present Army and Navy. The man, in or out of Congress, who attempts to demagogue for the soldier vote will make a miserable failure. Within the ranks of the private in the Army and Navy are found some of our most intelligent and capable men. Thousands of college or university graduates, hundreds of thousands, through not blessed with a college degree but equally as intelligent and capable, are there; business men, professional men, bankers, farmers, mechanics, many leaving lucrative business, practice, and position are there. The enlisted man of the Army or Navy represents the best type of manhood of every vocation. He stands just as high in character and ability and commands respect just as much in his community as the highest officer in the Army or Navy. [Applause.] He comes from every section and county and town in the United States. I believe the man from your community who went in as a private and came out as a private is as good as the man in my community who went in as a private and came out as a private, and he is as good in every way as any officer in the United States Army or Navy. [Applause.] He knows the immense war debt his Government has incurred. He knows the fabulous amount of bonds already piled upon this and future generations. He knows the enormous amount of taxes being levied. He knows that further bonds and higher taxes must come to enable his Government to pay its war debts and maintain its actual current expenses. He knows that in its present financial straits $266,000,000, which is required to pay the $60 granted to each by this bill, is as much as could be expected of his Government at this time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Give me 10 more minutes, and I will finish in that time.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. QUIN. Does the gentleman put Army nurses in?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; they are in.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What is the amount you provide?

Mr. KITCHIN. Sixty dollars each.

Mr. RAMSEYER. For officers?

Mr. KITCHIN. And men; all alike. We provide here a lump sum of $60 for each man and officer, and we provide that upon discharge then and there the $60 is to be paid to him, in addition to every other amount the Government may owe him. We provide, too, that those who shall have been discharged before this act shall be paid their $60 each just as soon as practicable, which, we hope, it will be immediately upon the application of the discharged soldier setting forth the facts called for by the department.

Now, gentlemen, I have about seven or eight minutes. Does anyone desire to ask me a question?

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman explain section 55, that was struck out?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the royalty proposition, which the Senate put in. We all agreed that it should be stricken out. The Senate amendment provided that royalties paid by the Government for inventions used by the War or Navy Department during the present war should be exempt from taxation. The House and Senate conferees considered that we ought to make no such exception in the income-tax law. If the Government took a fellow's invention and paid him $2,000 or $200,000 royalty a year and it was used during the war, and it was worth $500,000 or $1,000,000, the place to get relief was not in a tax bill. He could come to Congress with his claim and present it to the proper committee hereafter.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield first to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN], who was first on his feet, and then to the gentleman, if he desires.

Mr. PHELAN. I took up with the gentleman from North Carolina the luxury tax and pointed out the apparent discrimination. Will the gentleman explain what has been done in that case?

Mr. KITCHIN. The luxury tax was put in the bill by the Ways and Means Committee during the war at the urgent request of the Secretary of the Treasury, not so much to get the tax but to encourage thrift and prevent extravagance. When the armistice was signed I felt, from the views of members of the committee, and many other Members of the House, that I would be safe in saying to Senator SIMMONS, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, which I did, that if the Senate would strike out the luxury-tax section I thought the House or House conferees would concur. The Senate Finance Committee did strike it out. I think it was during the last day's debate in the Senate upon the bill, in the confusion of things and the desire to hurry up and get through with the bill, that the luxury tax was restored to the bill. After it was restored some gentleman in the Senate made a motion to strike out just one or two items——

Mr. PHELAN. Three items.

Mr. KITCHIN (continuing). Relating to clothing and some other wearing apparel, and left in all the other items, such as shoes, hats, shirts, and so forth. Now, as it came to the conferees in that shape the conferees were powerless to remedy the matter, for the reason that the Senate had kept in all the items except clothing at a 10 per cent rate, and the House bill rate was 20 per cent. The conferees could not go below the 10 per cent rate, neither could they eliminate any items to which the Senate had agreed, and the only way we could think of to correct the discrimination was, after the bill became a law, to have a joint resolution to strike out that whole section, including probably the tax on articles made of fur, as they are chiefly wearing apparel. And I hope we can do it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I understood the gentleman to say they allow the consolidated returns except in the case of the so-called war-profiteers' corporations.

Mr. KITCHIN. Except corporations organized since August 1, 1914.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman understands and knows better than the balance of us the difference between the tax on a small income and on a large income. Now, how do you overcome that preference that would be given to the small income when you do not allow the consolidated returns?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say that a small corporation, having, say, $20,000 net income or less, is taken care of specifically in this bill.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. I wanted simply to say, confirming what the gentleman has said with reference to the private soldier, that there are private soldiers serving in the Army from the city of Cleveland who earned $10,000 or $15,000 a year as business and professional men, and earned as civilians, three, four, five, and even six times as much as the captains or the colonel of the regiment in which they served.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say the conferees withdrew the excess-profit and war-profit taxes on individuals and partnerships?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate agreed to the House provision on that. The House and Senate provisions only made corporations subject to the excess-profits and war-profits taxes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why was it that individuals or partnerships that had been making large profits out of war contracts should not be taxed like other corporations?

Mr. KITCHIN. Because the surtax, together with the normal income tax, on individual incomes was so enormously high that they would be reached in that way.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman compiled any tables showing the amount of revenue that will be derived from the respective titles?

Mr. KITCHIN. The tables are not included in my report, but I will put them in my remarks. Under this bill we will raise for this fiscal year $6,077,000,000 and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, $4,184,000,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to ask the gentleman a question in regard to what the gentleman said about subsequent legislation to take care of the luxury tax. Does the gentleman think that can be brought about in time?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, yes. Section 904 does not go into effect until May 1, 1919.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I would like to ask the gentleman to state whether the provision affecting the postal zones is changed?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate receded on that amendment. The zone system will remain the same as it is under existing law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the tax still kept on the sales of jewelry?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any change been made in regard to the rate on postal cards?

Mr. KITCHIN. After July 1, 1919, it will be the same as it was before the revenue act of 1917.

Mr. LOBECK. When does the 2-cent postage rate take effect?

Mr. KITCHIN. After July 1, 1919.

In closing, I predict that never again will the Government get along any one year on less than $4,000,000,000. It ought to be less, however.

If our public indebtedness reaches $30,000,000,000, which I fear it will by June 30, 1920, it will mean that our annual taxes to pay interest will amount to about $1,275,000,000; and even if we deduct the interest that we will receive from our loans to foreign governments, we will still have to raise in taxes to pay interest between $800,000,000 and $1,000,000,000. I fear that our Army and Navy will cost us annually hereafter in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000. Pensions, in one shape or another, and insurance will cost us not less than $1,000,000,000 a year. It will certainly take another $1,000,000,000 a year to finance all the other functions of the Government, including all the new things and new functions which the war has and will graft upon it. Besides all the above, a sinking fund must soon be established to retire our war debt.

In conclusion I will repeat what I have before said, our annual expenditure will hereafter be much more than $4,000,000,000 unless the President and Congress take a firmer and stronger hold on appropriations than they have heretofore. [Applause.]

[1] Actual collections since July 1, 1918, indicate that original House bill estimate was too low.
[2] The income and excess and war profits taxes upon insurance companies are estimated to yield $6,000,000. This amount is included in the estimated yield for income and excess-profits taxes.
[3] Including floor tax.
[4] Reduction from the House bill estimate of $1,137,600,000 is due to the prohibition and food conservation features of the food stimulation act.
[5] Floor tax not included.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am going to be very brief. I am going to occupy but very little time. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asked me to say that the change in the postal rates takes effect July 1 instead of July 11, 1919.

There are only a few things that I want to mention. First of all let me say this bill is a much better bill now than when it passed the House first. There are many amendments that have been made in the Senate and in conference that, in my opinion, make the bill more equitable and just to the taxpayers. There are some inequalities in the law which are hard to remedy. It can not be done easily. The tax upon a corporation or a partnership with large capital is very difficult to adjust so that the corporation and the partnership with the same amount of capital and the same volume of business and the same amount of profits shall pay the same amount of tax. It is very difficult to draw this or any other law to put them in two classes, namely, the corporation and the individual, and yet have the tax paid by each the same.

I believe the provision in the law, as now agreed to, relating to oil and gas wells is equitable. A prospecting company might go on for several years prospecting and losing money. All at once they strike a well, a good flow of oil or gas. They can only use as capital the money invested in that particular well, not the money used by the corporation for several years past. Consequently their deductions are not equitable and just, as compared with those of other corporations, so that when a profitable well has been discovered the limitation is 20 per cent on the selling price of that particular well.

I know of a particular instance where a firm had gone and spent $600,000 in prospecting for oil in Oklahoma. At last they struck a very valuable flow of oil and were offered $600,000 for that property. They could not sell because, as the bill passed the House, they would be taxed 80 per cent of their entire proceeds from that sale except what money was expended on that particular property. Therefore they could not sell at all, although the law as it now stands before the House, in my opinion, is equitable and just, much more so, at least, than the original provision as the bill passed the House.

Now, as to the cost-plus contracts. The cost-plus contractors of the country made profits because of the war. There is no question about that. In many instances the capital was only a nominal sum and the profits very great. I know of a single instance where the capital invested was $25,000 and the profits during the year 1918 were $1,150,000.

Another case was called to my attention. I believe the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] spoke to-day of a subsidiary company, with $1,000 capital, whose profits were $1,000,000. Those were the men that the committee wished to bring within the limits of that dragnet and impose heavy taxes upon them, because those profits were made out of the war, and the taxpayer must pay it.

Now, let me show you what that does with the subsidiary company with $1,000 capital invested and $1,000,000 profit. I know of an instance where practically no capital was invested and where $3,600,000 profit was made. I want to get that fellow, and this bill does get him. Here is what happens to the firm with $1,000 capital and $1,000,000 profit: First of all it is entitled to a 10 per cent deduction on the capital, which is $100, plus $3,000, or $3,100 from a million dollars, which leaves $996,900, on which an 80 per cent tax applies, which amounts to $797,520. Deducting that war tax from the total of $1,000,000 leaves $202,480, from which the normal tax is deducted of 12 per cent, or $24,279.60, making a total tax upon that corporation of $821,799.60. Out of the $1,000,000 profit, on $1,000 capital, the firm still has $178,200, or 178 per cent on the capital invested.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that under the cost-plus contract the contractor is also allowed to include this tax that he pays?

Mr. FORDNEY. In answering the gentleman let me say there were some contracts drawn by the Government that were construed by me and other members of the committee as exempting the contractor from all taxes paid. In other words, there was language in the contract that said all taxes paid should be a part of the cost. Therefore if the courts construe a contract of that kind to mean that the Federal tax paid shall be a part of the cost, then the man who pays that tax gets his taxes back and his per cent of profit, 5, 7, or 10 per cent, whatever it may be, on those taxes paid. That is bad law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; that is bad.

Mr. FORDNEY. I obtained that information from testimony given before a Senate committee. I gave the name of the firm, the date of the contract, and the number. However, it was said that the Government did not intend to include the Federal tax in that provision. But there is the language in the contract.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. JONES. What was the purpose of excluding trading corporations from the benefit of the personal-service corporation provision? I see you put them in as one of the exceptions, and cost-plus contractors as the other.

Mr. FORDNEY. Trading corporations?

Mr. JONES. Yes; why should they be exempted?

Mr. FORDNEY. If I am correct, a trading corporation means a sort of cooperative concern, where a portion of the business is done for the stockholders of that corporation, and yet they carry on a part of the business in trade, and so on. Now, where the business is carried on for no other purpose except the handling of the goods of the people who make up the association, there is no tax on that part of their business.

Mr. JONES. Would that cover a concern which was selling cottonseed cake on commission, for instance?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I think not.

Mr. JONES. In other words, if it were purely a personal-service corporation it would be entitled to the benefits of the personal-service corporation exemption. If I read this exception correctly, they would not get the benefit of it, because they would be a commission house.

Mr. FORDNEY. They would be considered as a commission house, and I do not think they would come in under that provision.

Now, when the bill passed the House we had in it a tax of 2 cents a gallon on gasoline. There were 2,200,000,000 gallons of gasoline used in the country last year, and a tax of 2 cents per gallon would yield a revenue to the Government of $44,000,000 if the same amount of gasoline was used in 1918 as was used in 1917. In the reduction of the volume of taxes in the bill that item was stricken out, because gasoline has become a thing of such common use by everybody.

There was much said in the committee about the amount of compensation, or bonus, as it was called, to the soldiers who served in this war. I believe that every Member of this House and of the Senate feels that he wants to be generous to the poor boys who went to the battle front and helped win this war. Those boys suffered great hardships and great dangers. Many came back with one arm, with one leg, or without any legs or without arms. A physician told me the other day that he found a man out here in the hospital with both arms and both legs off. The people of this country can not do too much for those poor fellows. The people of the country remained at home and enjoyed good beds and good tables to sit down to, in no danger, enjoying all the comforts of life, while these boys were over there defending the Stars and Stripes, and God knows we owe them a debt that we never can repay. [Applause.] I wanted to yield more to the soldier boys than was finally agreed upon—$60 flat to everybody. What does this amount to, though, my friends? These items run up to an enormous sum. Sixty dollars to each soldier will call for a contribution of $266,000,000. It is a mere bagatelle in comparison to the services rendered. One year's pay was suggested by some men—one year's pay at $30 a month for the men in the field—but that would amount to $1,596,000,000 in money.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does not the gentleman think we could take $500,000,000 out of the naval appropriation bill and double this amount for the soldiers? Would not that serve a much better purpose than to proceed to build a lot of ships that will not be finished for several years?

Mr. FORDNEY. I had much rather economize in ways where we can economize and give this money to these beloved boys. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I think the gentleman is entirely right, and I think we ought to do it if there is any way to do it while we are considering this subject.

Mr. FORDNEY. We are going to take care of those boys. [Applause.] I have spent some time of late trying to prepare a bill to present to this House, and to my happy surprise I find there is existing law by which those boys who have lost arms or legs or have been disabled can, at the expense of the Federal Government, be sent to school and educated in some line—in medicine, in law, in electricity, in mechanical engineering, or any course chosen by the soldier—and receive an income from the Federal Government of not less than $65 per month while receiving that education, and in addition thereto the family is entitled to the allotments and allowances as under existing law during the time of his schooling.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is very true and that is right, but how about the man who has lost his job, even though he did not lose an arm? What is he going to do while all this unemployment exists?

Mr. FORDNEY. I am not alarmed about employment for the poor fellows when they come back. What I am anxious about now is to see the immediate discharge of the soldiers in the camps in the United States. [Applause.] Let them go home, where they want to go. They came forward like brave men at the call of their country. They were anxious to render assistance. Our Government accepted them quickly. Now, for Heaven's sake let them go home.

It has been suggested that we are going to have one grand parade of soldiers in this city before they are mustered out. My boy wants to go home and your boy wants to go home, and they do not care a baubee about marching down Pennsylvania Avenue for some officer to bow and scrape and say "How do you do; you have done well, my boys," so that afterwards we can go down to the movies and see the picture of that fellow bowing and scraping. That is all there is to be derived in the way of benefit from such a parade. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I take pleasure in yielding to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, this bill carries $60 to be paid to every soldier?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Whether he has been injured or not?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And that is in addition to the compensation for the loss of limbs, and so forth?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. And that is in addition to the care for the families and dependents of the soldiers?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; in addition to everything he is entitled to under existing law. This is in addition to everything.

Mr. CANNON. Including the vocational education?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I am very glad that that provision is made. However, the great mass of soldiers who come back and the great mass of those who supported them will pay cheerfully, in addition to compensation the like of which was never made by any government in the tide of time, and I am glad of it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the adoption of this $60 bonus preclude any additional legislation along the line of granting a bonus?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLIVAN. If another bonus is granted will this $60 be paid as well? Sixty dollars is a measly amount to pay to our soldiers. I want to vote a really substantial recognition of their work.

Mr. FORDNEY. The $60 will be paid whether there is any suggestion for another bonus following this or not.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I may say, if the gentleman will excuse me for a moment, that I want to vote for this bill, although my present intention is not to vote for it because of the very small pittance which has been given the soldier. I have a six months' pay bill introduced here, and I was wondering if this provision would preclude the consideration by Congress of that six months' pay bill. I am anxious to have Congress give the soldiers and sailors, and the nurses, too, the equivalent of six months' pay.

The gentleman will again pardon me if I remind him that in the last deficiency bill passed by this House we are covering back into the Treasury, because of the sudden and unexpected ending of the war, practically $15,000,000,000, thanks to our boys. [Applause.] They finished the job they undertook in quick time, and we can afford to give them a better deal than this bill provides.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly we can.

Mr. MADDEN. I see that the Agriculture Committee has provided for an additional billion dollars as compensation to the farmer to maintain the price of wheat during the year 1919–20. The Railroad Administration had placed to its credit $500,000,000 when the Government took the railroads over. They have lost $216,000,000 in the operation of railroads within a year. They are now asking for $750,000,000 more to tide them over for another year. The Post Office Department has taken over the telegraph and telephone wires, and as a result of that they will be compelled to tax the telephone and telegraph users large sums to prevent loss. Now, if we can afford to maintain the extravagant expenditures provided for in the items I have indicated, is it not of infinitely more importance and more decent to pay additional compensation or bonus to the men who offered their lives to save the country?

Mr. FORDNEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not $60 a measly sum to give them?

Mr. FORDNEY. I agree with the gentleman that the $60 is a very small pittance, but the best we could get in conference.

Mr. GALLIVAN. A mere tip.

Mr. FORDNEY. I was much in favor of a larger sum. The sum the gentleman mentions as the guaranty for the price of wheat in the country will be paid; that was a guaranty made by the Government——

Mr. MADDEN. But this is a new guaranty.

Mr. FORDNEY. As an inducement to the farmer to raise more wheat at any cost to supply the hungry people of the world.

Mr. LEVER. And the farmer raised it.

Mr. FORDNEY. He raised it and the Government is going to carry out its contract. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. But they propose to make a new contract.

Mr. FORDNEY. The Government took over the railroads and the gentleman's figures of the amount lost during Government control do not correspond with my own. I obtained from the Committee on Appropriations this information, that the first year the loss to the Federal Government for their meddling with the railroads was $755,000,000. But we are like the man in the hollow log that has the bear by the tail, he does not dare to let go just now. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is aware of the fact that, although the Government guaranteed that price of wheat last year, the Food Administration reports that they will come out of the guaranty without any loss.

Mr. FORDNEY. I understand so, and I hope so.

Mr. STEENERSON. And that the next year does not indicate a loss of a million.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know how we can be called upon to pay a billion dollars and pay it and not lose some money. I do not know how or where the Government is going to get it back.

Now, let me go a little further. The Government has taken over the steamships and, with all due respect for my good friend from Pennsylvania, they came very near taking over the canals. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would have been the cheapest investment they could have made.

Mr. FORDNEY. I respect you, my good friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say, if the gentleman will permit, that they propose now to take another $200,000,000 out of the Treasury for good roads, whereas $100,000,000 taken out for canals would have put us in business for years.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman is correct, as he sometimes is. [Laughter.] The Government took over the steamship lines. Less than two weeks ago the Government notified the Merchant & Miners Transportaion Co., whose steamships they had taken over, an old established transportation company doing business on the Atlantic coast, that they were going to return them. When the Government took that company's ships it took some $600,000 of money then in that company's treasury. Last week the Government notified that transportation company that it was going to give them back the ships without any money. The Government is not only not paying the company for the use of its ships, but is keeping the money it took out of the treasury of the company. That is Uncle Sam for you and Government ownership.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Is not the great loss in the administration of railroads largely due to the increased wages paid to every man employed?

Mr. FORDNEY. Partially so.

Mr. LOBECK. Is not that the largest item?

Mr. FORDNEY. The power vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission controlled the incomes of the railroads, fixed the maximum rates that the roads could charge for freight and passenger service. The railroad companies for several years had been appealing to the Interstate Commerce Commission to give them higher freight rates and higher passenger rates, but that was continuously declined by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission fixed the income of the railroads, but did not control the outlay; but a political body, the Congress of the United States, came in to help out the situation and said to the railroad companies, through the Adamson bill, "You must advance your wages," and they did it without any increase in their incomes. When you put a corporation or an individual or any business between one body in the Government fixing your income and another body fixing your outlay you are between the devil and the deep blue sea, and you will land with one or the other, and either of them is enough to destroy you. The minute the Government took over the railroads it saw that the income of the railroads was not sufficient to meet the necessary expenses in the increased wage scales and the upkeep of their lines, in betterment, in equipment, in the maintaining of their roads, and the Government immediately advanced the passenger rates 50 per cent and advanced the freight rates 25 per cent. In 12 months, upon the basis of the income of the railroads for passenger fares—$800,000,000, which was the income for 1916—50 per cent would mean $400,000,000. Two billion four hundred million dollars was collected in freight by the railroads of this country in 1916. An advance of 25 per cent in their rates means $600,000,000 in 12 months' increase in their income, and the estimated increase of those two things—passenger fare 50 per cent and freight rates 25 per cent—would mean an increase in income of $1,000,000,000.

Now, in answer to your question, the increase in the wages which was made retroactive beginning the 1st of January, 1918, amounts only in round numbers to about $300,000,000. Where is the balance of that billion dollars which they should receive in an increased income? There is a loss of $750,000,000. For the first six months of 1917 the profits of the railroads of this country were a fraction over $565,000,000, and for the first six months of 1918, under Government ownership, the loss was over $300,000,000, making a difference of more than $800,000,000 for the first six months under Government control, as compared with the corresponding six months of the year before. That is Government ownership for you, something that some of you seem so much in favor of.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman recognize that if we pursue the policy of diverging and going into every other thing under the sun, as we have been for the last 15 minutes, not discussing the measure before the House, that we can not get through with the measures that we ought to pass during this session?

Mr. FORDNEY. My friend, I am anxious to get all bills through Congress to avoid an extra session of Congress. I have been doing my duty. I have worked faithfully since the 6th day of June on this devilish bill, and I am only going to take about five minutes more in explaining my views upon it, although it is to take from the people $6,000,000,000 in money. Do you think I am filibustering?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit one observation?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I do not think the gentleman courted this diversion. I think he wanted to discuss the bill. I merely rose to call attention to the fact that this starting off after Tom, Dick, and Harry, and every other issue under the sun, is prolonging this session and endangering the possibility of doing what we should do. The gentleman knows that if answers were attempted to be made to all of these chargeful questions we would take all the balance of this term discussing immaterial matters.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have said all I want to say about the Government ownership of railroads, and have put my stamp of disapproval upon it or anything else controlled by the Government as against private ownership.

Mr. HARDY. That has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that it approaches the point of impertinence, after the majority leader has spent nearly three hours discussing this bill, when every Republican is prepared to hasten its passage and to vote upon it, for anyone to rise and suggest that a gentleman, the ranking member of the committee on the Republican side, who has devoted 10 months of his time to the bill, should be shut off in the midst of one of the important points covered by the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, I believe the gentleman from Texas was kindly in his suggestion. He is a very dear friend of mine.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suggest that sometimes a great deal of buncombe comes from those who do not watch things quite so closely as do those upon the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman consider this point in reference to the payment of $60 to the discharged soldiers? The provision in the bill reads:

and in the case of separation from the service after the passage of this act shall be paid at the time of such separation.

Did the committee consider how long that would delay demobilizing the Army?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; the committee had no information as to when those men would be discharged.

Mr. MANN. The committee must know that after the passage of this act, which does not take effect until the day of its passage, the Army can not give an honorable discharge to any soldier in the service unless it is prepared at the time to pay him the $60 extra.

And, as in many cases probably they will not be prepared to pay this $60, they will not grant the discharge. That will be the only way out of it.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman the bill provides, as I understand it, for the payment of this $60 from the time the law takes effect to all who were discharged from that time on, and information comes from the War Department that those who are already discharged would be paid just as quickly as the machinery would permit.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I did not refer to that; but, considering the fact that the law now requires soldiers shall be paid monthly, and that we know of innumerable cases in France where they have not been paid in many months, what will the department do about this sort of a regulation?

Mr. FORDNEY. Well, all we can do is to say that when a man is discharged they shall pay this sum anyway. That is about as far as the committee could go in framing the law.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr.

KITCHIN], if he does not think it will be necessary to have additional revenue in order to run the Government for the next fiscal year?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do. I gave some figures here yesterday of the extraordinary expenditures of this Government, and the gentleman will find those figures in the RECORD of this morning, in which I showed that a few of the extraordinary expenditures of the Government will amount to $6,795,000,000 extra—not ordinary running expenses of the Government, but those are extras—and that to that must be added other millions, which will bring up the expenses of this Government to, in my opinion, about $10,000,000,000. Now, we must have more revenue—that is to say, taxes—or we must borrow it from the sale of Government bonds, or we must pass an additional revenue bill, which I believe will be passed in the next Congress.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. EMERSON. Did the conference committee take into consideration that in the next fiscal year there will not be anywhere near the profits there are in this fiscal year, and unless some miracle happens there will not be any profits at all?

Mr. FORDNEY. My good friend, this was considered by the committee. Every business man knows that the cost of living, that the labor cost, material cost, and other costs are abnormally high at the present time. Adjustments must be made and are being made now where we must get back to normal conditions in the near future. During that reconstruction period, my friend, it is a matter of great seriousness between capital and labor in this country. You can not have a high cost for materials and low cost for labor, you can not have low cost for materials and high cost for labor; labor and the value of the products of that labor must go together up or down. They are up now. They must and will go down; and during that time there will be, as there is now, great unrest in the labor world, in the world over, not only in the United States. On the Pacific coast there is a great strike on at the present time, where this morning's paper states that there are 70,000 workingmen on a strike in Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., striking for $1 an hour. I received a letter from Michigan yesterday from an employer of labor who had closed his factory and wanted to start up and had put out an offer of $4 a day for labor, and out of 200 employees only 7 accepted and said they were ready to go to work. Wages are abnormal, my friends. In the lumber market in the State of Washington labor is averaging 50 cents to $1 per hour. Section hands on the railroads in the State of Washington to-day get $4 per day for an eight-hour day. While that scale of wages lasts, my good friends, the cost of production of every article we consume must and will be high. Therefore I say great unrest now prevails throughout the country, and the Lord only knows when that situation will settle down to normal conditions, but while we are going on this Government has incurred great expenses, great costs upon the people. Much taxes must be collected from the 110,000,000 of the people of this country. We are calling in this bill for $6,000,000,000 for the calendar year of 1918. It is not a sufficient sum to meet a fair proportion of our costs, to pay our debts, to administer this great Government, and therefore, gentlemen, I will vote for it, and I will be called upon, if the Lord lets me live a few months longer, to vote for additional revenue laws to produce more money in order that we may meet our obligations already incurred. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. All right.

Mr. FARR. What will this war have cost the Government when these extraordinary expenses to which the gentleman refers are paid?

Mr. FORDNEY. The reports show, down to and including January, 1919, about $25,500,000,000 as the cost of the war.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. KEARNS. Not in line with what the gentleman talks about, but perhaps the gentleman can give some information. There is a corporation doing business in the State of Ohio. It is not a branch even, but they are doing business also in Canada——

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. But they are not incorporated in Canada, but the Canadian Government licensed them for the privilege of doing business there.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. Now, let me say to you, I see the point coming, this law provides that an American citizen doing business in Canada and paying taxes in Canada is also taxed here——

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. And whatever taxes are paid by him in Canada will be deducted from his tax in this country on what his income from the business in Canada amounts to.

Mr. KEARNS. Although in his business in Canada now the profits are brought into this country? All the profits remain in Canada and are used in the operation of the business in Canada.

Mr. FORDNEY. If he is a citizen of the United States, doing business solely in Canada, living in Canada, he is subject to taxes in this country as a citizen of the United States, and on his income in Canada he is taxed there and he is taxed here, but we permit him to deduct from his taxes here whatever tax he pays over there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And that country does the same in regard to our country?

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the Canadian Government treats our citizens over there the same.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, when the big revenue bill came out of the Ways and Means Committee I gave credit for it to the President, the Secretary of the Treasury—Mr. McAdoo—and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. Although 602 amendments were tacked onto the bill in the Senate, and it now comes back through the conferees of the House and Senate extended in length to 362 pages, accompanied by a 94-page conference report, it is still the Wilson-McAdoo-Kitchin bill with a few harbors of refuge not hitherto provided, presumably for deserving taxpayers. As it came to the House originally the bill proposed to raise the taxes from incomes, corporations, war profits, estates, and miscellaneous, about $8,000,000,000. That was the amount the President, acting as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, proposed should be raised by taxation, as the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, explained in detail in his letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee June 5, 1918. Notwithstanding the President's address to Congress insisting upon taxation along with loans to meet the expenses of war, and his suggestion that the proportion of taxes should be at best one-third, and despite the insistence of the Secretary of the Treasury that $24,000,000,000 would be spent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, alone, and that $8,000,000,000 must be raised by taxation, this redraft of the Wilson-McAdoo-Kitchin bill is expected to cut down the sum total to be collected from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. At least that is the amount which the Treasury experts estimate the bill, as amended, will produce. In view of this attempted reduction of the enormous burdens imposed by the bill it is fair to assume that the administration has reason to ameliorate the wrath of the taxpayers who must pay the war bill, or is reasonably assured that the expenses of war will be speedily reduced.

That the taxpayers—even the remotest of them—are about to sustain their greatest shock no one who has attempted to read this forbidding measure will deny. It carries the greatest monetary burden ever imposed upon any people at any time. That our so-called war expenses—and many offenses have been committed in that name—have been, or are being, so reduced as to justify the administration's attempt to lessen the burden of taxation, I am not prepared to admit.

So recently as January 31 last the efficient and painstaking chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in an earnest effort to show salvage in war expenditures, admitted that we were still spending $50,000,000 a day and that our monthly expenses up to and including January, 1919, were running over $1,600,000,000. If that statement is accurate, and no one has dared deny it, then this great revenue bill, over which Congress has labored since the Commander in Chief presented his war demands last April, unprecedented and crushing in effect as it is, will produce much less than will be necessary to meet our war requirements for the short period of four months. It is mighty important we take these significant facts into consideration in connection with the efforts that are being made to show that the country has unlimited credit and that the American people can saddle themselves with the burdens of mankind. It is a fact, patent to anyone who scans the Treasury statements, that our total money supply in the United States is only about $7,500,000,000. But financiers and Treasury experts like the former Secretary of the Treasury, always cheerful and optimistic, talk of "our Nation's wealth" as a tangible thing. That wealth, as I understand it, is not cash; it is farms, homes, stock; it is something of value which the owner can not always speedily turn into cash even for taxes, so that when under guise of war hundreds of millions and billions of dollars are asked for by the administration, even though it is not clear that the money is intended for purposes of war, the average citizen may fairly inquire, "Where is this money coming from?" The facts to date are that with about $7,500,000,000 of money in the country we have fallen back upon "the Nation's wealth" for the more than $12,500,000,000 we spent for the war up to May 31, 1918—see Exhibit A, Secretary McAdoo's letter to Mr. KITCHIN June 5, 1918—and for the year ending June 30, 1919, we have appropriated more than $24,000,000,000, as demanded by the Commander in Chief and the Secretary of the Treasury, plus an additional $7,000,000,000 provided in the deficiency bill, a total of appropriations and authorizations for one year of $31,000,000,000. To meet this tremendous indebtedness we have had one loan issue of $6,000,000,000 and taxes returned under existing law amounting to about $4,000,000,000. If these figures are correct $21,000,000,000 remains to be accounted for by salvage or repeal of appropriations already made, by additional loans, or by taxes. It is a serious financial situation which cries out above all things else for economy and retrenchment.

And, parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the statement prepared by the clerks of the Appropriation Committees of the Senate and the House, showing a recapitulation of appropriations for 1918–19. They show in that statement that we have appropriated or authorized for this period more than $36,000,000,000. I mention that because there may be a discrepancy in my statement, due to authorizations being mixed up with appropriations. For the purposes of the argument, however, I am willing to take the official statement of the Committee on Appropriations, showing the total expenses authorized and appropriated to be $36,000,000,000, and make allowance for the salvage shown here the other day by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations totaling $15,000,000,000; but still, according to those figures there would have to be accounted for by loans or taxes the difference between $36,000,000,000 shown in that statement and the $15,000,000,000 of salvage claimed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. GARNER. In view of the statement the gentleman makes, does he not think it a great mistake in not insisting upon the House provisions of the bill in order to collect more money this year than this bill does?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman I do not believe the $6,000,000,000 to be raised by this bill, while it may tend to satisfy a popular demand at this time, will be sufficient for the purposes of the administration.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, the gentleman believes that, in order to have more money not only for this fiscal year, but the next fiscal year, you will have to have additional taxes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am very much inclined to think the gentleman is right.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman consider the present conference report, which, I believe, he signed——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did.

Mr. GARNER (continuing). A better bill than the one that passed the House?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was going to discuss that in the brief statement I have before me. But I will say now that I have not been wholly satisfied in my own mind that the $6,000,000,000 would meet the requirements of the administration as those requirements were set out by the Secretary of the Treasury before the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, we have all voted for these appropriations. I am merely getting down to the policy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am taking the judgment of my conferees that $6,000,000,000 will be sufficient for all administrative purposes for the present, and I am holding those in power responsible for the reduction which has been made.

Mr. GARNER. I think the gentleman is right to hold them responsible, but we are responsible in the last analysis, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would say, and especially as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], whom we appointed as one of the conferees to adjust these differences, is responsible. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] or his conferees ought to have insisted on more of the House provisions if he has taken the position that the administration was responsible for them. I think a mistake was made when we reduced it from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000, and I think the gentleman ought to have insisted on getting more money in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that the "gentleman from Pennsylvania" has been a minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, a minority member of the conferees, and the gentleman knows how inconsequential that is.

Mr. GARNER. I imagine that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not entirely in the minority in all questions in the conference.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me say to the gentleman and for the edification of the House that the President from this rostrum told us we would need a certain amount of money. He indicated that one-third that was raised should be raised by taxation. He was followed up by the Secretary of the Treasury, who came before the Committee on Ways and Means, and who laid before that committee a plan for raising this one-third by taxation, to wit, $8,000,000,000. And the gentleman from Texas well knows that scarcely a witness of importance came before the Committee on Ways and Means seeking a reduction of taxation who was not reminded by "the gentleman from Pennsylvania" that the President had asked for $24,000,000,000, and that he expected $8,000,000,000 to be raised by taxation. Inasmuch as we are spending $50,000,000 a day, inasmuch as the last monthly statement shows that for January just passed we have spent $1,600,000,000, inasmuch as that $1,600,000,000 required for one month would eat up what we need in four months, I question whether this bill is going to raise all the money this administration needs to meet its obligations.

Mr. GARNER. Then I will repeat the query. Although the President of the United States from that rostrum suggested $8,000,000,000, and so did the Secretary of the Treasury, and we must have the responsibility, why do you say that you and your conferees, realizing that we needed more money than the $6,000,000,000, did not arrange to get it in this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because the majority was in favor of the bill as it is reported here.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If the bill is such as my friend from Texas says, there is a way by which a majority could reject the conference report.

Mr. GARNER. And leave the law as it is, which would leave a little less than $4,000,000,000 for the next year. The gentleman from Illinois has been here long enough, I am sure, to know that the rejection of the conference report at this time would mean defeat of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me further——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. CANNON. If this is inevitable, as the gentleman says, why whine about it? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman from Texas and I can get together on this proposition. I think I know why the suggestion was made to reduce the volume of taxation from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. There was an uproar throughout the country against the $8,000,000,000 proposition. The newspapers were quite condemnatory. There was a general outcry that an $8,000,000,000 bill was going to ruin industries in this country, and that was the one thing on earth that the Secretary of the Treasury and the President did not want to have happen. They did not want to get in bad with the people of the United States on the question of taxation. Therefore, when this hue and cry went up against an $8,000,000,000 bill the President, being human, was in favor of $6,000,000,000, to test it out; and I say to the gentleman that while I do not believe the President is going to raise as much money by this bill as he would like to have, still it may have been a wise thing, if not good politics, to have suggested that we can get along with $6,000,000,000 for the balance of this administration up to the 4th of March, so that the burden of raising this tremendous deficit, this $21,000,000,000 in the first instance, and the difference between $36,000,000,000 and $15,000,000,000 in the second instance, might be left to the incoming Republican Congress. I do not want to have the Secretary of the Treasury or the President or this outgoing Democratic Congress to unload this great job on a Republican Congress. I want to see the Democrats, those in power, work out their own destiny. They spent the money and they should raise it.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman state some of the specific appropriations for carrying on the war that he was opposed to and did not vote on with us along that line?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know just what items I did not vote for with the gentleman. On general principles of political economy I may have voted against certain things, but I think I supported all propositions brought in for carrying on the war. I voted with the gentleman and in support of the President on the things he said were essential.

Mr. COLLIER. I think the gentleman came forward very liberally and patriotically and supported all the provisions deemed necessary to carry on this war. That being the case, what is the gentleman's complaint now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that I made no exception in the committee, especially during the hearings, when men of prominence, or even obscure men, if there were any, came before the committee. I told them all that this was cold-blooded business, that sentiment and pretended patriotism would not work with the committee, and that it would not work with me. I told them that they as well as we had incurred these obligations. They had been for the war. They had said, "Stand by the President"; and now they would have to pay. That is what I said, and I said it with uniform regularity, and I say it now. I do not know that this bill will make them all pay.

Mr. COLLIER. I will say to the gentleman that there was no politics in the committee, and all the members of the minority, as well as those of the majority, patriotically came forward and supported every measure that was asked for. I do not see, under those circumstances, why the gentleman should be complaining at this late hour.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not particularly complain. I was simply stating facts that might edify my large audience. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman will recall that he voted with me recently against an appropriation of $100,000,000 to buy food for the hungry people of Europe, and thus establish a precedent so that when the people of this country are hungry we might be called upon to feed them or feed all the people of the world, and thus end in a proposition that might involve the expenditure of $1,000,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I voted as the gentleman did against still further burdens on the people of the United States to relieve the people abroad. I did vote against that $100,000,000 appropriation, and I am happy to say that I have just received a letter from a high officer in the Army of the United States who has been going through France and Belgium and Germany, a man with an excellent record, who read some footnote in a Paris newspaper about my vote on this question, which he commended highly. He tells me the starvation stories from over there are overdone, that many of the people are living well, that they are willing to take everything we will send over, and that they are not crazy about going back to work while we are willing to support them.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman says he has received a letter like that from an officer of the United States Army?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. Has the gentleman any objection to giving his name?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to give his name, but I will not. I know enough about Army regulations to know how to keep confidence. At the same time I know that if the court-martial of a favorite for spending $640,000,000 without getting results in aviation is recommended, he may be whitewashed by the Secretary of War. [Applause.] I am not anxious to violate the confidence of those in whom I have placed my trust and who placed their trust in me. I wish the day would come when we could read some of the letters that come to us about conditions in France, in Germany, and in Belgium. I wish I could read personal letters that I have now about the boys sleeping in the mud and dying outside of the city of Brest, in France, but I will not go into that now. I could talk of the life and death of boys who have been obliged to sail upon foreign ships and spend their substance with a commissary organized not under our auspices but the auspices of others, but I shall refrain. I would like to show how they have been herded like cattle in the ships. I would like to show some of the sufferings they have endured. I would like to be able to tell of the manner in which their mail has miscarried, and how some of them were led to believe that they had been deserted by their friends and relatives in the United States. But that is not a part of this discussion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If expenditures in the name of war and a world democracy are not more carefully checked up and scrutinized in the future, no one, not even the financial wizards who have had so much to do with the encouragement of expenditures during the war, can foretell the consequences upon and among the American people, whose sons have made the supreme scacrifice, and who themselves must sustain "the national wealth."

Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to discuss the details of this bill. To wander through its pages is suggestive of a journey through the chamber of financial horrors. It is supposed to have come from the Senate simplified and bereft of the supposedly expert and scientific treatment it received before it was presented to the House. Then it was to raise $8,000,000,000; now, chastened and "made clear," it is to raise $6,000,000,000. As one of the minority conferees I would not desire to be called upon to attest that these efforts in the interest of clarity were worth the $2,000,000,000 which it is claimed will be saved to the taxpayers by the changes made. It is a lawyer's bill—an expert's bill—from start to finish. It reflects credit upon the indefatigable industry of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who knows the remnants of his "baby" better than any other man in Congress, but it is a bill the like of which I fondly hope and pray we may never be called to look upon again.

But the bill is here, changed and amended, loaded up with riders that do not pertain to revenue and which have no rightful place in the measure, and there is no recourse but to act upon it. What shall we of the minority do? Shall we rise against this four months' war provider and smite it? For one I shall vote for it despite its imperfections. As a Member of the House I voted for war. With that vote I assumed my full share of responsibility. That vote was a vote to support the President, who is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The Commander in Chief asked for the money to prosecute the war; the Secretary of the Treasury went over the financial needs in detail. The particular plan of taxation which this bill established is their plan, not mine. If there was graft or waste in this bill so earmarked that we could distinguish it, I would vote to eliminate it; but that is not now the question. If the war was over and we could assure ourselves that any of this tax money is not needed, it might enable me to vote against the bill or for its amendment. But the President is still the Commander in Chief; he has not yet issued his proclamation declaring that a state of war no longer exists. To all financial intents and purposes we are still at war. We must raise money to meet our obligations. Nor can we cease to tax or borrow until peace is finally declared, and perhaps not then. It was what we got into when we got into war. We must support our soldiers and sailors until they are called home. We must provide for the wounded and for the dependents of those who laid down their lives.

Some men say the war is over and we should vote against this bill. They forget that we have obligated ourselves this year for from four to six times the amount of money this bill will produce. Under other circumstances I would gladly vote against this measure, but under the conditions that now prevail I deem it a moral duty to support it. Those who stand prepared to justify their acts in peace or war will not avoid their responsibility in this regard; and as for those who have been profiteering, those who were safe at home making money when red-blooded young Americans were fighting in the trenches and sleeping in the mud of France, who now expect of Congress that they shall be excused from paying a fair share of the Government expenditures they enjoyed, it seems as if we might say, "Get thee behind me, Satan."

Mr. Speaker, I do not like this bill—neither the method nor style of it—but I recognize in it, despite its intricacies, an effort by the administration to live up to its legal and moral obligations. If the enforcement of it will help the American people to better understand the ease, if not the extravagance, with which their money has been spent; if it will tend to promote a better understanding of the manner in which our domestic resources have been applied, with the general world welfare as an altruistic objective, it may bring about an early realization of the great importance of calling a halt and hastening a return to the American normal. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended 30 minutes. I have requests for about that much time on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his time be extended 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, why not let the gentleman from Oregon be recognized in his own right?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Oregon 15 minutes, if that will be sufficient.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have just one purpose in the remarks I am about to make. That is to explain how the corporation income taxes as imposed in the bill, according to the agreement of the conferees, will be computed.

You will remember that the House bill provided that there should be three taxes, and that each corporation should pay out of the three a normal tax, which all should pay, and then a war-profits tax or an excess-profits tax, according to which of the two latter taxes was the higher one on the particular corporation. The Senate has changed this arrangement, consolidating the war-profits tax and the excess-profits tax into one system.

AN ILLUSTRATED PRIMER OF THE INCOME-TAX PROVISIONS OF THE WAR-REVENUE ACT.

Mr. Speaker, it is the purpose of these remarks to present plainly in the English of conversation and commerce the income-tax features of the war-revenue act of the Sixty-fifth Congress, chiefly by means of illustrations.

It discusses the income taxes to be paid on incomes for the year 1918.

These taxes are four in number:

Individuals pay—
- First, a normal tax (sec. 210); and
- Second, a surtax (sec. 211).

Corporations pay—
- First, a normal tax (sec. 230); and
- Second, a war-profits tax and excess-profits tax (secs. 301–312).

These are the most important features of the bill, since $4,707,000,000 of the $6,077,200,000 of the estimated receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, or over 77 per cent of its total amount, will be derived from the income taxes.

In the computations given below too great detail has not been attempted but the segregations are sufficient to illustrate the application of the principles upon which such taxes are based. Accuracy in the computations and simplicity in their presentation have been the chief aim.

Supposed returns from individuals and corporations have been used as illustrations, and the purpose has been to present illustrations covering typical cases, and as nearly as possible including all the essential features of each tax without embarrassing the illustrations with multitudes of details.

The adoption of the income-tax amendment to the Constitution prior to the outbreak of the present war was most fortunate. Otherwise it would have been a practically impossible task to have raised over $6,000,000,000 by taxation and distributed the burden among the taxpayers with any approach to an equitable apportionment of the burden in proportion to ability to pay.

In the preparation of the statements and charts included in these remarks I have had the expert assistance of Mr. John E. Walker, clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, who has given them a careful examination. I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the valuable assistance he has rendered.

Partnerships (secs. 218a and 224).

Partnerships as such do not pay the normal tax or the surtax. But each member of a partnership will pay both the normal tax and the surtax upon his pro rata share of the taxable income of the partnership, whether the earnings have been distributed or not.

Personal-service corporations (sec. 218c).

Personal-service corporations, as such, are not taxed under Title II, but the individual stockholders are taxed in the same manner as members of partnerships.

INDIVIDUALS.

Individuals pay two kinds of income taxes, but on net income only:

1. A normal tax (sec. 210).
2. A surtax (sec. 211).

Net income (sec. 212) is ascertained by computing the gross income (sec. 213) and subtracting therefrom certain deductions (sec. 214) (but excluding certain items not deductible, sec. 215) and credits (sec. 216).

Gross income (sec. 213a).

Gross income (sec. 213a) is the total upon all gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensations, from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, sales, or dealings in property, interest, rent, dividends, or securities, or gains from any business transaction, or gains, profits, or income from all sources whatever.

Items not included in gross income (sec. 213b).

The following items are not included in the gross income:

Life insurance paid to beneficiaries or to the estate of the insured.

Refund of premiums paid on life insurance.

Value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, but income derived therefrom is included in gross income.

Interest on securities issued by State, Territory, or municipalities or obligations of the United States, under certain restrictions, but a statement of such holdings must be made in the return.

Accident or health insurance or money received under workingmen's compensation acts.

Soldiers, sailors, and marines pay income taxes only upon that portion of the compensation received during the period of the war from the Government which is in excess of $3,500.

Deductions (sec. 214a).

Deductions (sec. 214): From the gross income ascertained as above stated there are subtracted the following deductions (sec. 214) arising during the year for which the taxes are paid:

Ordinary and necessary expenses incurred in carrying on the trade, profession, or business.

Interest paid or accrued.

Taxes paid or accrued, except on indebtedness incurred to purchase tax-free obligations other than bonds of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, except income, war-profit and excess-profits taxes levied by the United States, and taxes against local benefits.

Losses sustained and charged off, where not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, under certain limitations.

Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off during the taxable year.

Allowances for amortization in the case of buildings, equipment, or machinery or other facilities constructed, erected, installed, or acquired on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the war.

Allowances for losses sustained during the taxable year 1919 from falling inventories.

Reasonable allowance for exhaustion, wear, and tear.

Depletion in the case of oil or gas wells, or other natural deposits, or timber.

Contributions or gifts for religious, charitable, scientific, and educational purposes not in excess of 15 per cent of the net income.

Items not deductible (sec. 215).

No deduction shall be allowed for personal, living, or family expenses.

For new building or betterments increasing the value of the property.

For restoring property or making good the exhaustion for which allowance is or has been made.

Life insurance premiums in certain cases.

Credits (sec. 216).

Credits allowed in computing net income for the normal tax only (sec. 216).

Credits (sec. 216): There is further subtracted from the gross income the amount of the following credits (sec. 216):

Dividends received from corporations taxed before being distributed.

Interest on obligations of the United States as provided by law and bonds of the War Finance Corporation. See section 213 (4) and section 214 (a) (2).

One thousand dollars for each single person, $2,000 for each head of family or married persons living together, and $200 for each dependent child.

Dividends.

Amounts received by individuals as dividends from corporations which have paid corporation normal tax prior to distribution are not subject to the normal tax, but are subject to the surtax.

CHART I.

Net income (sec. 212).

Net income means the gross income as defined in section 213, less the deductions allowed by section 214.

This illustration is taken from the experience of John S. Brown, a thrifty and versatile merchant, doing business in a town of 20,000 people, interested in local business enterprises, buying and selling city and farm property, and lending money.

Gross income (sec. 213).

His gross income (sec. 213 (a)) consists of the following items:

Profits as a merchant	$60,000
Compensation as president of the local water company	3,000
Compensation as manager of the electric-light company	2,000
Profit on sale of city property	3,000
Profit on sale of farm	10,000
Rents from city property	1,000
Rents from farm property	2,000
Interest on money lent	3,000
Dividends from corporation securities	6,000
Total gross income	90,000

Deductions (sec. 214).

He is allowed the following deductions (sec. 214) from the gross income ascertained above:

Rent paid for store building	$5,000
Pay of employees	10,000
Numerous incidental items necessary for the conduct of the business	2,000
State, county, and local taxes for the year 1918	4,000
Loss from fire, less insurance	2,000
Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off	2,000
Wear, tear, and depreciation	1,000
Gifts and contributions—Red Cross, $1,000; church, $600; Y. M. C. A., $400; college endowment, $5,000; other contributions, $1,000	8,000
Total deductions	34,000

Credits for normal tax only (sec. 216).

For the purposes of the normal tax only he is allowed the following credits (sec. 216) as a further reduction of the gross income:

Dividends received on corporation on which the tax was paid prior to distribution	$6,000
Interest on securities issued by public authority (none held).
$2,000 as married man living with his wife and $200 each for 5 dependent children	3,000
Total credits allowed	9,000

CERTAIN ITEMS OF WHICH NO ACCOUNT IS TAKEN IN COMPUTING THE GROSS INCOME.

He received during the year the following sums which are not included in his gross income, and of which no account is taken in computing his gross income (sec. 213 (b)):

Life insurance carried by his father	$5,000
From bequest of his father	10,000
Refund of premiums on insurance	100
Interest on public or municipal securities (none held).
From accident and health insurance	1,000

CERTAIN ITEMS FOR WHICH NO DEDUCTION IS ALLOWED.

He is not allowed to deduct these items (sec. 215):

Personal, living, and family expenses	$4,000
Improvements and betterments, adding to the value of the property	10,000
Repairs compensated for under the wear-and-tear allowance	1,000
Premiums on life insurance inuring to his benefit	1,000

CHART II.

THE NORMAL TAX TO BE PAID BY JOHN S. BROWN.

Normal tax: We are now ready to compute his normal tax:

Gross income		$90,000
Deductions allowed	$34,000
Credits allowed	9,000
Total items to be subtracted		43,000
Net amount subject to the normal tax		47,000
He will pay normal tax on—
$4,000 at the rate of 6 per cent		240
$43,000 at the rate of 12 per cent		5,160
Total normal tax		5,400

THE SURTAX.

The first chart deals with the income taxes paid by individuals. This chart takes the supposed returns made for and the taxes paid by John S. Brown, a merchant in a town of 20,000 people, doing a general mercantile business, buying and selling real estate, city and country, owning a farm and some city property, and having some money at interest. As the income taxes are levied only on net incomes, the important factor, then, in any computation for any individual, it is essential to ascertain what his net income is. Mr. Brown has a gross income under section 213 (a) of the bill on his profits as merchant, of $60,000; as president of the local water company, $3,000; as manager of the local electric light company, $2,000; as a profit on a city property that he bought and sold, $3,000; as profit on farm property, $10,000; rent on city property, rent on farm property, interest on loans, dividends from corporation securities, making a total gross income of $90,000.

The deductions allowed under the bill are the rent on the store building, the pay of the employees, incidental expenses, city, county, and local taxes, loss from fire, insurance, debts, wear and tear in depreciation, gifts, and purchases, making a total of $34,000. The credits provided in the bill under section 216 and shown in Chart I apply only to normal taxes on the individual and not on the surtax of individuals. So the credits under this section are the dividends from corporations, which he must report in his gross income, but for which he is given credit in the credits, interest on public securities, of which he held none, and, being a married man, living with his wife, he is entitled to a $2,000 deduction, and, having five children, a further deduction of $200 for each child, making $3,000 in all, and a total credit of $9,000.

Having ascertained the factors necessary to determine what tax you will pay, we will compute the normal tax on Mr. Brown, paid on net income only. The gross income is $90,000. The deductions are $34,000, the credits are $9,000, making a total of $43,000 to be subtracted from the gross income. Deducting $43,000 from the $90,000 it leaves $47,000 subject to the normal tax. He will pay on the first $4,000 of this at the rate of 6 per cent, or $240; he will pay on the remainder of $43,000 at 12 per cent, or $5,160; or the total normal tax will be $5,400.

CHART III.

SURTAX TO BE PAID BY JOHN S. BROWN.

Surtax: The surtax is computed as follows:

Gross income		$90,000
Deductions	$34,000
Credits (not allowed).
Total of items to be subtracted		34,000
Net amount subject to surtax		56,000

Computation of tax.

On amounts between—
$5,000 to $6,000, or $1,000 at 1 per cent	$10
$6,000 to $8,000, or $2,000 at 2 per cent	40
$8,000 to $10,000, or $2,000 at 3 per cent	60
$10,000 to $12,000, or $2,000 at 4 per cent	80
$12,000 to $14,000, or $2,000 at 5 per cent	100
$14,000 to $16,000, or $2,000 at 6 per cent	120
$16,000 to $18,000, or $2,000 at 7 per cent	140
$18,000 to $20,000, or $2,000 at 8 per cent	160
$20,000 to $22,000, or $2,000 at 9 per cent	180
$22,000 to $24,000, or $2,000 at 10 per cent	200
$24,000 to $26,000, or $2,000 at 11 per cent	220
$26,000 to $28,000, or $2,000 at 12 per cent	240
$28,000 to $30,000, or $2,000 at 13 per cent	260
$30,000 to $32,000, or $2,000 at 14 per cent	280
$32,000 to $34,000, or $2,000 at 15 per cent	300
$34,000 to $36,000, or $2,000 at 16 per cent	320
$36,000 to $38,000, or $2,000 at 17 per cent	340
$38,000 to $40,000, or $2,000 at 18 per cent	360
$40,000 to $42,000, or $2,000 at 19 per cent	380
$42,000 to $44,000, or $2,000 at 20 per cent	400
$44,000 to $46,000, or $2,000 at 21 per cent	420
$46,000 to $48,000, or $2,000 at 22 per cent	440
$48,000 to $50,000, or $2,000 at 23 per cent	460
$50,000 to $52,000, or $2,000 at 24 per cent	480
$52,000 to $54,000, or $2,000 at 25 per cent	500
$54,000 to $56,000, or $2,000 at 26 per cent	520
Total surtax	7,010

The surtax is computed on the same amounts, except that he is not allowed to deduct the credits. His gross income is $90,000; his total deduction is $34,000. He is not allowed credits provided in section 216. This leaves an amount of $56,000 upon which the surtax is to be calculated. The surtax begins at $5,000. He will really pay surtax on $51,000 only.

CHART IV.

TOTAL TAX TO BE PAID BY JOHN S. BROWN.

His total tax will be—

Normal tax	$5,400
Surtax	7,010
Total of taxes	12,410

CORPORATIONS.

The House bill provided that there should be three income taxes, and that each corporation should pay out of the three a normal tax, which all should pay, and then a war-profits tax or an excess-profits tax, according to which of the two latter taxes was the higher one on the particular corporation. The Senate has changed this arrangement, consolidating the war-profits tax and the excess-profits tax into one system.

Corporations pay two kinds of taxes. They pay on their net income only:

1. A normal tax (sec. 230), and
2. A war-profits and excess-profits tax (sec. 301a).

Gross income (sec. 233).

For the purpose of the normal tax, gross income is ascertained in the same manner as that for individuals (sec. 213), with the modifications provided in section 233 for three special cases.

From the gross income so ascertained there is then subtracted the deductions allowed in sections 234, 235, 236, and 238 to determine the net amount upon which the normal tax is to be paid.

The Treasury sheets will contain all the items in detail and with minuteness. It would complicate this explanation and require a large number of pages even to enumerate all the possible items that are deductible arising out of the various trades, businesses and occupations. I have attempted only the general descriptions.

The items in the report of each corporation will depend upon its own business facts, but each computation will follow the lines in general of the illustrations given below.

For the purposes of these taxes the important factor is to ascertain the net income for the taxable year of 1918, and around the various methods for arriving thereat, for determining the average profits for the years 1911, 1912, and 1913, known as the prewar period, and the definition of invested capital the battle of conflicting opinions rages.

Deductions (sec. 234).

Deductions (sec. 234): The following deductions from the gross income are authorized which arise during the year for which the tax is to be paid:

All ordinary, usual, and necessary expenses paid or incurred in carrying on the business, trade, or occupation.

Interest.

Taxes (except indebtedness incurred to purchase tax-free obligations other than bonds of the United States issued after Sept. 24, 1917) paid or accrued, except income, war-profits or excess-profits taxes, or taxes assessed against local benefits; but the war-profits or excess-profits tax paid by a corporation is deducted from its net income before computing its normal tax.

Losses sustained and charged off and not covered by insurance or otherwise.

Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off.

Dividends from other corporations which have paid tax thereon.

Allowances for exhaustion, wear and tear of property used in the trade or business.

Allowances for amortization in the case of machinery, buildings, equipment, or other facilities constructed, installed, or acquired on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the war.

Depletion allowance for oil or gas wells or other natural deposits and timber.

Additions required by law to reserve funds in case of insurance companies, death losses, and annuity payments.

There are other provisions for insurance companies.

Allowances for losses sustained during the taxable year 1919 from falling inventories.

Credits.

Credits (sec. 236): The following credits are also allowed to be deducted from the gross income arising in the year for which the tax is to be paid:

Income from securities issued by public authority and included in the gross income under section 233.

War-profits and excess-profits taxes, for normal tax only.

Special exemption of $3,000 for war-profits and excess-profits tax.

Special exemption of $2,000 for normal corporation tax.

Certain credits for taxes paid to other countries. (Sec. 238.)

Items not deductible.

The same items as for individuals under section 215.

The war-profits and excess-profits tax (sec. 301a).

It will be necessary to compute these taxes before computing the normal tax, as the amount paid in such taxes is deducted from the net income before computing the normal tax.

The war-profits and excess-profits tax is computed for each corporation. (Secs. 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 310, 311, and 312.)

This tax has a long name, written in reverse order, as in computing it the excess-profits brackets are computed first, so that it should be called an excess-profits and war-profits tax.

That part of this tax with the long name, which is based upon excess profits, has reference to profits in excess of a net return of 8 per cent on the invested capital for the taxable year, and in addition there is a special exemption of $3,000.

If the corporation earned less than $3,000 during the taxable year it is exempt from this tax. There are also other cases enumerated in section 304, in which exemptions may occur.

The excess-profits tax for the taxable year 1918 is computed in the first and second brackets of section 301a, with the deductions provided in section 312.

FIRST BRACKET.

First bracket: The rate of tax in this bracket is 30 per cent of the amount found to be taxable in it. If the net income for 1918 is 20 per cent or more than 20 per cent of the invested capital, the taxable amount is ascertained by finding 20 per cent of the invested capital and subtracting therefrom 8 per cent of the invested capital and also the special deduction of $3,000. (See Charts V, VI, VII, and others.)

If, however, the net income is less than 20 per cent of the invested capital, then the taxable amount is found by subtracting from the actual income in dollars 8 per cent of the invested capital and the special exemption of $3,000. (See Chart XVII.)

SECOND BRACKET.

Second bracket: No tax will be levied in this bracket unless the net income exceeds 20 per cent of the invested capital. If the net income does exceed 20 per cent of the invested capital, then the amount taxable in this bracket is found by subtracting from the actual net income 20 per cent of the invested capital, as that part of the income has been taxed in the first bracket. (See Charts V, VI, VII, and others.) The rate of the tax is 65 per cent on the amount found to be taxable in this bracket.

THIRD BRACKET.

The war-profits tax is computed in the third bracket. It is based upon a comparison of the net income for 1918 with the average net earning for the prewar years of 1911, 1912, and 1913. For a corporation to pay taxes in this bracket its net income for 1918 must considerably exceed its prewar earning—that is, the average earning for the prewar years. This tax is ascertained by subtracting from the net income for 1918 the average prewar earning and a special exemption of $3,000; and after finding what the amount of this difference is multiply this difference by 80 per cent. Then if the amount obtained by taking 80 per cent of the difference exceeds the combined taxes in the first and second brackets, the corporation will pay in the third bracket; that is, will pay the war-profits tax, and its amount will be found by subtracting the combined taxes of the first and second brackets from the 80 per cent found above. (See Charts V, VI, VII, and others.) But really if a corporation pays in the third bracket, the 80 per cent computed as above is the whole amount of the war-profits and excess-profits tax it will pay. (See Charts V, VI, VII, and others.)

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Perhaps the gentleman will remember that this is the plan that I suggested very early in the consideration of the bill in the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. Now, in order to make the method of computing the taxes clear, I have prepared a number of charts:

CHART V.

Corporation taxes.

Original invested capital	$250,000
Capital added in 1918	50,000
Total capital in 1918	300,000
Net income for 1918	150,000
Prewar average earning	50,000

It is necessary to have the above items ascertained in order to compute the taxes on corporations under section 301.

Excess-profits taxes (secs. 301 and 312).

First bracket, section 301 (a):
20 per cent of $300,000		$60,000
Deductions, section 312—
8 per cent of $300,000	$24,000
Special exemption	3,000
Total deductions		27,000
Amount taxable in first bracket		33,000
Tax in first bracket is 30 per cent of $33,000		$9,900

I have taken the case of a corporation whose original capital invested was $250,000. That is the amount of money it had invested in the business prior to the year 1918. In 1918 it found it necessary to add the sum of $50,000 to its capital, making its total capital $300,000 for the year 1918. It had a prewar average earning for the years 1911, 1912, and 1913 of $50,000 a year. Its net income for the year 1918 is $150,000. Under the law, we compute these taxes in the following manner: The first is the excess-profits tax. It is computed under sections 301 and 312. The war-profits and excess-profits tax is computed under three brackets—a first bracket, a second bracket, and a third bracket. In the first bracket you will find that the exemptions are to be 8 per cent of the invested capital for the year, plus a flat deduction of $3,000; and the difference between whatever sum that may amount to in any case, and 20 per cent on the invested capital, is the amount to be taxed in the first bracket. Now, under our specific instance 20 per cent of the invested capital is $60,000. Then subtract from that 8 per cent of the invested capital, or $24,000, plus $3,000 flat exemption, or $27,000, and there will be left $33,000 to be taxed in the first bracket. This is taxed at the rate of 30 per cent, and 30 per cent of $33,000 is $9,900. That is the tax in the first bracket.

Second bracket, section 301 (a):
Net income	$150,000
20 per cent of $300,000	60,000
Amount taxable in second bracket	90,000
Tax in second bracket is 65 per cent of $90,000		$58,500
Total of taxes in first and second brackets		68,400

In the second bracket the tax is computed in a different way. From the net income of $150,000 there is subtracted 20 per cent of the capital. This 20 per cent is the 20 per cent on which we have already reckoned the tax in the first bracket. Twenty per cent of the invested capital is $60,000. Subtracting that from $150,000 will leave an amount to be taxed in the second bracket of $90,000. The rate of tax in the second bracket is 65 per cent, and 65 per cent of $90,000 is $58,500. Now, adding the tax in the first bracket to the tax in the second bracket, we find the total tax of the first and second brackets, or the excess-profit tax, to be $68,400.

War-profits tax (secs. 301 and 311).

Third bracket, section 301 (a):
Net income	$150,000
Deductions—
Specific exemption	$3,000
Prewar average earning	50,000
10 per cent of $50,000 added capital	5,000
Total deductions	58,000
Remainder	92,000
80 per cent of $92,000	73,600
Total tax in first and second brackets	68,400
Difference, or tax in third bracket		$5,200
Total taxes under section 301 (a)		73,600

The third bracket is the war-profits tax. The Senate combined the excess-profits tax and the war-profits tax into one system. The first and second brackets are the excess-profits tax. The third bracket is the war-profits tax, and the taxes under this bracket are computed under sections 301 and 311.

This is done as follows: The net income is $150,000. The deductions under section 311 are the prewar earnings of $50,000, the special exemption of $3,000, and 10 per cent of the $50,000 capital added during the year, or $5,000, making a total deduction of $58,000, which, taken from $150,000, leaves $92,000.

The act provides that 80 per cent of the $92,000 should be ascertained, which is $73,600. From $73,600 there shall be subtracted the amount of the taxes in the first and second brackets, or $68,400, which would leave $5,200, the tax in the third bracket, and the total of the first, second, and third brackets will make a total tax paid by this corporation under the war-profits and excess-profits tax of $73,600.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not quite 50 per cent of the total income of the corporation.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; but that is not all the tax it pays.

Mr. BUTLER. They have to make it before they pay it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. If the gentlemen will note, if the corporation must pay in the third bracket—and that will be determined by the rate of profit which is made during the year in comparison with the rate of profit in the prewar period—if it must pay in the third bracket, it is not necessary to compute the first and second brackets, because if we compute the third bracket and take 80 per cent of the amount left after the deductions are subtracted, we obtain the sum of $73,600, which is the amount we found due here as the total of the three brackets.

If the corporation's rate of earning was insufficient to put it into the third bracket, then the amount of tax will be ascertained by the computations in the first and second brackets.

Normal corporation tax (secs. 230 and 236).

The normal corporation tax is computed at the rate of 12 per cent on the difference between the net income for 1918 and the war-profits and excess-profits tax and a $2,000 special exemption. That is, from the net income subtract the war-profits and excess-profits taxes and $2,000 and take 12 per cent of the remainder. See any chart.

Net income	$150,000
Deductions, section 236:
Taxes under section 301 (a)	$73,600
Specific exemption	2,000
Total deductions	75,600
Net taxable amount	74,400
12 per cent of $74,400 is the normal tax, or		$8,928
Total of all taxes to be paid by this corporation		82,528

Or 55 per cent of its net income for the year.

Having ascertained what it must pay under section 301 of the bill, we now compute the corporation tax commonly referred to as the normal tax, as provided in sections 230 and 236.

It is computed in this way: The net income of $150,000 is taken, and from that is deducted, under section 236, the amount of taxes paid under section 301—$73,600—and then a special exemption of $2,000, making a total deduction of $75,600, which, taken from $150,000, leaves the net taxable amount $74,400. The corporation or normal tax is 12 per cent of this $74,400, so that the normal tax will be $8,928.

Add $8,928 to the amount ascertained in the three brackets of $73,600, making a total tax that this corporation will pay on this statement of facts of $82,528, or 55 per cent of the net income. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. The deduction is that in all corporations where the net income paid is one-half of the capital invested, the percentage that they will pay under this bill is 55 per cent, and as the income is greater in proportion naturally the percentage increases?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman must take into consideration what the prewar earning was, because that affects the computation in the third bracket.

Mr. FORDNEY. What percentage of original invested capital does it permit the taxpayer to have net—$45,000 on $250,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. He will have $67,472 left.

Mr. FORDNEY. About 18 per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. Twenty-two per cent. He will have $67,472 left, after subtracting $82,528 from the net income.

Mr. FORDNEY. Twenty-two per cent; well, he could live on that until spring if he is economical.

Mr. STAFFORD. The chairman of the committee, in reply to an inquiry, stated the reason why the House conferees receded from the Senate provision leaving these excess-profit taxes of individuals in partnership was because the income tax almost equaled that provided for the corporation. Can the gentleman give the House what rate of tax would be on the individual and partnership doing business with like earnings?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will insert a chart at the conclusion showing the amount of taxes paid by an individual as compared with that paid by a corporation on the same statement of facts. I desire to revise a certain primer I formerly prepared and to include computations and explanations concerning all the income-tax features.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is it true according to the gentleman's computation that the corporation, after paying the total tax, has still $17,000 more war profits than it had during the prewar year?

Mr. HAWLEY. After the tax is paid here, if my subtraction is correct, $67,472 is left.

Mr. WINGO. That gives him $67,500?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And he made $50,000 in the prewar period?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. That would leave him still an excess profit of $17,000 more than he made before?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think he is hurt?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think he can afford to pay the taxes, especially under the circumstances. There is one other observation I wish to submit. This particular corporation, if it distributed one-half of its net income in dividends, under the provisions of the House bill before the Senate amendments were agreed to, would have paid $87,540, or about $5,000 more than they will pay under the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RUBEY). The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that this change in the system of computing the taxes was due to a feeling in another body that to provide a war excess-profits tax and an excess-profits tax and for a corporation to pay whichever was the highest, was in the nature of double taxation, and a constitutional objection was met by combining the two systems into one system, with three brackets. By this continuous arrangement for the assessment, levying, and collection of taxes it was thought that the constitutional objection would be avoided. That was the principal reason leading to this rearrangement, as I understand.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. Of course, the gentleman recognizes that this is a purely academic table. No corporation that he knows of probably makes any such showing as he has indicated. Am I not correct?

Mr. HAWLEY. I had submitted to me from a home corporation a statement of facts very much like this.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to buy some of their stock.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think it is for sale.

CHART VI.

A CORPORATION PAYING IN ALL THE BRACKETS, WHICH AFFORDS AN OPPORTUNITY FOR DETAILED EXPLANATIONS.

Invested capital for 1918		$100,000
Net income for 1918		35,000
Prewar earning		16,000
First bracket, excess profits (sec. 301a).
20 per cent of $100,000		$20,000
Deductions (sec. 312):
8 per cent of $100,000	$8,000
Specific exemption	3,000
Total deductions		11,000
Amount taxable		9,000
30 per cent of $9,000, or tax in first bracket		2,700

The term "excess profits" means net profits on the invested capital in excess of 8 per cent thereon. This corporation made 35 per cent net profit on its invested capital in 1918. In the first bracket a tax is levied at the rate of 30 per cent on that portion of the net profit which equals a return of 20 per cent on the invested capital. Twenty per cent on $100,000 is $20,000. But before levying the tax certain deductions are allowed. Every corporation is exempt from taxation on an earning equal to 8 per cent on its invested capital, which in this case is $8,000, and also in addition thereto a specific exemption of $3,000, making in this instance a total deduction of $11,000. A deduction of $11,000 from $20,000 leaves $9,000 to be taxed in this bracket, at the rate of 30 per cent, producing a tax of $2,700.

Second bracket, excess profits.
Net income for 1918		$35,000
Deductions (20 per cent of $100,000)		20,000
Amount taxable		15,000
65 per cent of $15,000, or tax in second bracket		$9,750
Total tax in first and second brackets		12,450

In the second bracket the remainder of the net income for 1918 is taxed. The amount is ascertained by subtracting from the entire net income the amount taxed in the first bracket, which is an amount equal to a return of 20 per cent on the invested capital. The net income of $35,000, less $20,000, dealt with in the first bracket, leaves $15,000 to be taxed at 65 per cent, producing a tax of $9,750.

The total tax based upon net profits in excess of a return of 8 per cent on the invested capital, with an additional exemption of $3,000, is $2,700 in the first bracket and $9,750 in the second bracket, or $12,450 in all.

Third bracket, war profits.
Net income for 1918		$35,000
Deductions (sec. 311a):
Prewar earning	$16,000
Specific exemption	3,000
Total deductions		19,000
Taxable amount		16,000
80 per cent of $16,000 is		12,800
Deduct total of first and second brackets		12,450
Tax in third bracket		$350
Total war-profits and excess-profits tax		12,800

The distinguishing feature in the third bracket is the use of the prewar earning in the computations. If any tax is paid in this bracket, it will be due to the fact that the net income for 1918 was greatly in excess of the prewar earning.

From the net income of $35,000 subtract the prewar earning of $16,000 and a special exemption of $3,000, or $19,000 in all, which will leave $16,000. Upon this $16,000 compute 80 per cent, producing an amount of $12,800. From $12,800 subtract the total tax in the first and second brackets, or $12,450, leaving $350, the tax in the third bracket.

In every case if a corporation pays in the third bracket, the computations in the first and second brackets are superfluous, so far as ascertaining the tax to be paid is concerned, and the tax to be paid under section 301 (a) will be the amount computed in the third bracket. The value of computing the taxes in the first and second brackets is to ascertain what amount of the taxes under section 301 (a) are due to an earning in excess of 8 per cent on the invested capital and what due to earning in excess of the prewar profits.

Normal corporation tax (sec. 230).
Net income for 1918		$35,000
Deductions, section 236:
Taxes computed above	$12,800
Specific exemption	2,000
Total deductions, c. c		14,800
Amount subject to normal tax		20,200
12 per cent of $20,200, or normal tax		$2,424

Every corporation must pay the normal corporation tax, unless its net income is in excess of $2,000 and the interest received on obligations of the United States or bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation and the excess-profits and war-profits taxes to be paid.

From the net income for 1918, or $35,000, deduct the taxes paid in the first, second, and third brackets, a total of $12,800, and also the specific exemption of $2,000, and there is a remainder of $20,200, which is the amount subject to the normal tax of 12 per cent. Twelve per cent on $20,200 produces a tax of $2,424.

A CORPORATION WITH NO NET INCOME IN THE PREWAR PERIOD.

The above method would be used in computing the tax on a corporation which had no net income during its prewar period.

A CORPORATION NOT IN EXISTENCE AT LEAST ONE WHOLE CALENDAR YEAR DURING THE PREWAR PERIOD.

A corporation not in existence during one whole calendar year will have in lieu of the deductions in section 311 a, those provided in section 311 c and d, which are:

I. A specific exemption of $3,000; and

II. A constructive prewar earning based upon the average experience of corporations in the same trade or business, similarly situated, but in no case to be less than 10 per cent on its invested capital taxable for 1918.

A CORPORATION HAVING A NET INCOME IN 1918 OF LESS THAN $3,000.

A corporation having a net income of less than $3,000 in 1918 will not pay the war-profits and excess-profits taxes.

CHART XX.

WHAT INCOME TAXES WOULD HAVE BEEN PAID HAD THE BUSINESS IN CHART IV BEEN MANAGED BY AN INDIVIDUAL INSTEAD OF A CORPORATION.

It is difficult to make a comparison of this kind as the deductions and exemptions for normal and surtaxes for individuals are different from those for corporations for the normal and war-profits and excess-profits tax. But supposing that an individual had an income of $150,000 upon which he pays both normal and surtax.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am moved to speak at this time because of a provision in the bill which gives $60 pay to the soldiers. I am in favor of that and would vote for more. That is not all the soldier wants, however. The soldier wants first to be returned home, and, second, he wants to be returned to the position that he held before he entered the service of this country. Right here I want to second the compliment paid by the chairman of this committee to the private soldier. I know personally soldiers who are serving in France as privates who earned from $10,000 to $15,000 a year; from four to five and six times as much as the captains and colonels of the organizations in which they are serving. I know Pvt. Sam Rosenberg, who had a law business that paid him over $10,000 per year, who entered the service as a private. How are we going to do this? I have introduced to-day two bills. First, a bill to forever bar the alien who refused to enter the service of his country when he was drafted from becoming a citizen of the United States; second, to make the alien who volunteered or was drafted and did not claim his exemption a citizen upon presentation of his papers showing honorable discharge. I have introduced another bill to give a preference to the soldier, sailor, and marine, and even the citizen of this country, when it comes to employment. To think of an American soldier, sailor, or marine returning from France walking the streets of the cities of this country in idleness and seeing some alien slacker holding a profitable position is scandalous. What we ought to do in this country is to start an Americanization scheme. If we had been prepared socially, educationally, and in a military way we would never have had to enter this war with Germany, and the nearly 60,000 brave American boys who now sleep in France would be here. I believe in giving a preference to the soldier, the sailor, or the marine, and the citizen of this country, over any alien who comes here to infest this country with anarchy and Bolshevism and the I-won't-work stuff. I believe in giving employment to the soldier who does not belong to the I-won't-work class, and who not only belong to the I-will-work class but who belongs to the I-will-fight class. [Applause.]

In compliance with resolutions adopted at a meeting of soldiers and sailors in Cleveland, Ohio, I have introduced two bills—one to punish the alien slacker and the other to give preference to soldiers, sailors, marines, and citizens over aliens in the matter of employment, and especially over aliens who refused to enter the military service of the United States during this world's war.

More important than a league of nations is the Americanization of this country.

Of all the persons who should go to the foot when it comes to employment the alien slacker is that person.

Every alien who was exempted from military service because of his alienage should never become a citizen of this country, and should never have employment as long as an American citizen is idle and physically and mentally able to fill such employment.

It should be made unlawful to hire an alien when an American can do the work.

It will mean more for the peace of this country if the United States would prepare itself industrially and educationally than the mere belonging to a league of nations to enforce peace.

Let us clean house at home first.

There are in this country millions of aliens who never intend to become citizens of this country, who have not the interests of the country at heart, who are here simply to get all they can out of the country and spread Bolshevism and I. W. W.ism while they are here. They should be curbed. No alien should be given employment by any firm or corporation while an American citizen walks the streets in idleness. Just think of an American soldier, sailor, or marine walking the streets after returning from the trenches and finding some alien slacker holding the position he held before he entered the service of his country. What an ungrateful country he must think this is.

Yes, and that same alien slacker enjoyed the peace and happiness and prosperity for which the soldier, sailor, or marine was willing to die.

The memory of a great past is the inspiration of a great present, and the country which honors its great men has the prospects of producing more in the future.

The gratitude of a free people in the United States will lead them to erect memorials to the gallant and heroic men who offered their lives that liberty might live. We have suggestions of the conventional shafts placed in cemeteries for the fallen, but for those who were saved to the Nation let the memorial of employment be first erected as a tribute to the returning soldier who offered his to-day for our to-morrow. No better or more fitting tribute can be tendered the brave boys for their future than supplying them with employment, not swamp lands, but jobs, the jobs they held before they went 3,000 miles from home to die if need be for their country. No alien wheresoever he may hail from should deprive the American soldier from American employment in America.

No true American can negative this assertion unless he is untrue to America, with unpatriotic motives detrimental to American progress. These slackers are simply human lice who crawl over the body politic and pester and annoy civilization and progress. We might as well give them to understand that America is no place for them. There is no country on the face of this earth that would give them as much liberty and opportunity as this country does, but in spite of that they come here and infest the country with disloyalty and anarchy. Is it fair? Is it proper? Is it just? Does it not on the contrary cause dissension and dissatisfaction and unrest among the people of this country? Does it promote patriotism? If we are to have an America of which we may feel proud let us clean out this nest of disloyal aliens, who would neither fight for this country nor their own.

They are citizens of no country—just wandering citizens of the world, with no object but to prey upon the citizens of other countries. The great European conflict is drawing to a close. Hundreds of thousands of American soldiers are returning for demobilization. They have been fighting for the preservation of our liberties, for the preservation of our industrial institutions, and it is now our paramount duty to see to it that every mill, factory, and workshop turns the wheels of industry with the aid of the boys who offered their lives to save industry from destruction.

Every firm, company, or corporation refusing or neglecting to employ a soldier, sailor, marine, or citizen of these United States to take the place of an alien slacker, or even an alien, should be industrially blacklisted and its name published to the country.

Can it be well said that those of this vast army who returned from military service should return to find alien slackers employed all over the country, and should be forced to live upon the charity of relatives and friends? These boys are not of the I-will-not-work crowd; they belong to the I-will-work crowd, as well as the I-will-fight crowd. It is our plain duty to do this by legislation. We have rightfully protected American industry from alien industry; now let us protect American labor from alien labor and the ungrateful alien slacker. American labor should be given the first opportunity in this country. American labor should hold every job in this country, and the alien should wait. I would only allow the alien to come here with the distinct understanding that he must establish himself here and prepare himself for citizenship or go back where he came from. If he can find any place where he is better treated, just let him go, and it will be good riddance of bad rubbish. We would soon get rid of bad aliens if we passed a law giving a preference to American labor. I would make it a crime punishable with a fine or imprisonment to employ an alien while there was an American citizen idle who could perform the work.

Returning soldiers do not want simply praise, they do not want a parcel of land out in the wilderness, they do not want merely a few months' extra pay. What the returning soldier wants is the job back he had before he entered the military or naval service of the United States. He wants his old employment; and this Government should give back to every returning soldier who worked for the Government before the war his old employment, no matter how it may inconvenience some one else; and we should make it mighty unpleasant for any firm or corporation who does not do this. We took these men from their wives, children, mothers, and friends and sent them 3,000 miles away, and we owe them something besides a vote of thanks. But think of the alien who was drafted and claimed his exemption because of his alienage. What do we owe him? We owe him nothing. What right has he to take a job away from an alien who was drafted and went and fought in the ranks? Is not there a vast difference? Perhaps if we looked out a little for the citizens of this country the alien might think a little more of us. If Germany had known we would have entered the war as vigorously as we did, we would never have had to go to war, and the lives of nearly 60,000 of our brave boys might have been saved. If we do this, perhaps the alien will appreciate what it means to live in a land of peace and opportunity, where all men are equal, where the humblest serf may come and be free and work out his own salvation, educate his children, and live in comfort, peace, and happiness.

I am for Americanizing America, for preparing America for any emergency. I believe in industrial preparedness, military preparedness, educational preparedness, social preparedness in every way, but above all by showing the alien that he can not come to this country and enjoy all its liberties and opportunities but share none of its responsibilities. Teach him respect for this country, for its Constitution and laws, and for its flag, and when we have done this we are prepared for any emergency. [Applause.]

Now, if we do not do something like that we are going to discourage the soldier, and, besides, we owe him everything. There are in this country thousands of people who have come here with no intention of becoming citizens of this country, who simply get all they can from the country. They never intend to be identified with the institutions of this country; and if there is anyone who should walk the street in idleness Mr. Alien Slacker is the man.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Granting that the gentleman may be able to enforce the provisions of his intended bills in regard to giving employment and in regard to employment in governmental work, how would the gentleman be able to enforce it in regard to private employment by private people or private corporations not engaged in any such work? Would it not be a violation of the constitutional provision in regard to contracts?

Mr. EMERSON. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's question. I considered it very seriously when I prepared this second bill.

Mr. DEWALT. What is the gentleman's answer?

Mr. EMERSON. My answer is this: If it is necessary, we will amend the Constitution. That is all there is to that. I place the welfare of my country above the rights of any corporation.

Mr. DEWALT. Oh, I see.

Mr. EMERSON. That is all there is about that; that is the way I feel about it.

Mr. DEWALT. That is very simple.

Mr. EMERSON. That is very simple; but that is what we ought to do and what we have got to do if we want to preserve the institutions of this country. And had we begun years ago to prepare this country in some way we would not have been in this war and 60,000 men would not lie sleeping in Flanders fields and over 200,000 more wounded and maimed. Had the Kaiser known we would have fought he never would have transgressed the rights of an American citizen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments allotted to me I shall of course be unable to say very much, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, nobody can hear what the gentleman from Kentucky is asking.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have made up my mind that I will not vote for this bill if it is put upon its final passage in its present shape, and I assume that that is what will occur. As a general rule I do not permit the speeches and arguments of a Democrat to have much influence over me. [Laughter.] But I do not mind confessing that my previous inclination against this bill was very much strengthened by the able speech of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] last Thursday. I have read a great deal of Republican literature and I have heard many good Republican speeches, but I do not think I ever heard a better 15-minute Republican speech, both politically and fundamentally, in my life than the one delivered by the gentleman from Texas, and I am sure that my colleagues on this side of the Chamber share with me the regret that he is not to remain in Congress, and I think his colleagues on the other side should also share in that regret. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I want to say in the outset that I do not for a moment countenance the idea of our Government repudiating or failing to pay any of its just obligations, however burdensome they may be to our people. While those who are for the time being managing the affairs of our Government may have erred in entering into these obligations, the good faith of the Nation requires that they be met sooner or later. All that I am going to contend for is that in fulfilling these obligations due regard should be had for the financial and industrial conditions in the country so that an unbearable burden may not be placed upon the people now. [Applause.]

There are several provisions in this bill that I am in favor of. Of course, I am in favor of the bone-dry provision. [Applause.] That goes without saying. [Laughter and applause.] I am also in favor of the purpose of the child-labor provision, but I pause here to say that I do not think it is a wise policy, although it is frequently resorted to of late, to load up appropriation bills with legislative riders involving propositions entirely extraneous to the regular supply bills of the Government, and which ought to be considered separate and apart therefrom and upon their own merits. I am likewise in favor of the principle underlying the provision for a bonus to be paid to our soldiers, sailors, and marines, except that I believe, as I indicated earlier in the debate to-day, that $60 is a very small pittance to give them. [Applause.] Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I think it is little less than an insult to them to give them what really amounts to little more than a "tip" upon their discharge from a service in entering which and going through which they have made so many sacrifices, and many of them have suffered so much. I question also whether it is equitable and fair to give all of them the same amount, when some of them have served so much longer than others and have made much greater sacrifices than others, and especially in view of the fact that hundreds of thousands of them are still overseas and being held there, many of them under the most distressing conditions, although the war has in fact been over for nearly three months. I think some sliding scale would be better so as to compensate them in a measure in proportion to their service and sacrifice. Of course, it is not practicable to do this literally, but it can be done approximately, and I recently introduced a bill which follows that general plan.

The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] called attention awhile ago to the fact that this $60 flat bonus would cost the Government a little over a quarter of a billion dollars, but what does that amount to in view of the service that our boys have rendered our country and the civilized world? As I stated when interrupting the gentleman, I think it would be a good idea to take about twice that amount out of the proposed appropriation for increasing the Navy, which is now pending, and give that to our soldier boys to help them along until they can resume their former vocations or secure remunerative employment elsewhere. If I had the time I could suggest other large items that it is proposed to appropriate in this Congress, for things that could be very well dispensed with or postponed, and utilize the money for purposes like this.

Mr. Speaker, while I favor the provisions to which I have referred, and while there are some other features in this bill that I would vote for as separate propositions, I do not propose to be forced to vote for this bill as a whole, with all of its objectionable features, simply because it contains some provisions that I am for. The people of my district are sensible and just, and they understand the situation. They know just as well as we do that the way this conference bill is brought up we can not get a separate vote on each item, but must vote for or against the bill as a whole. They know how I would vote on all these matters if under the rules of the House we could have a chance for a separate vote.

Mr. Speaker, I have voted under this Democratic administration for a number of huge tax bills and appropriation bills. For most of them I voted conscientiously; in some cases I voted for them almost in spite of my conscience, but in all cases my vote was based upon assurances from the highest sources that they were vital to the welfare of the country. But I have about reached the parting of the ways. I do not propose to vote for any more of these appropriation bills or tax bills blindly if I can help it. One of the reasons that I oppose this bill is that some of the money that will be collected under it, if it is enacted into law, will be expended in carrying out the unprecedented naval program that is proposed, and against which I shall also register my vote unless it is very materially amended. In previous Congresses I have always voted for the largest increase in our Navy that was proposed, but conditions were different then. Our Navy needed increasing then, and we were financially able to do it. Now we are paving the way to a permanent peace and do not need such a gigantic Navy, and now the people are already carrying an almost unbearable burden of taxation and are not able to meet the added expense.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman knows there is a provision in the bill that authorizes the President to stop the building program if we agree to such a thing as that.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, yes; but the trouble about the President is that sometimes he will not stop when he ought to when he once gets started. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Is the gentleman in favor at this time of an omnibus public buildings bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. I certainly am. I am in favor of scattering the money around throughout the country instead of taking it in huge bulks and putting it where it is not absolutely necessary, and where it will not reach the public generally, but enrich the few at the expense and distress of the many. That is exactly the point I had in mind when the gentleman from Ohio interrupted me. That is why I am in favor of giving more to the soldiers. I believe in helping those who need help rather than those who can get along without it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How are we going to raise the money?

Mr. LANGLEY. That raises the point to which I am going to address myself in a minute. I may say now, in reply to the gentleman, that, so far as the naval program is concerned, I think it will make very little, if any, difference to the country, in view of present conditions, as to just how many years we take to complete the program already authorized, but it will make a great deal of difference to the people, in view of the stress under which they are now laboring, as to whether we try to raise hundreds of millions of the money now or string the completion of the program out for several years, and thus avoid increasing the burden now, which the people, in my judgment, can not stand at this time.

The suggestion has been made that this naval appropriation is needed for bluffing purposes. Gentlemen, this is too serious a matter to bluff about. To gamble legitimately with the people's money, hard pressed as they are now, is bad enough, but to bluff with it is monstrous. The gentleman from Texas was right. If we go ahead with these reckless expenditures we will commit a double crime—we will not only purloin the golden egg but kill the goose that laid it.

The gentleman from Washington raised a very pertinent and very important question, and it has also been raised by other gentlemen in the same connection. I do not claim to be an expert on this tax question. Indeed, I have tried several times without success to fill out one of the blanks, and I doubt very much whether there is a single Member of this House, the Ways and Means Committee included, who could fill out one of them without making some mistakes. But if I had my way about it, I will tell you what I would do. I would reenact the tax law of October, 1917, with such amendments as would prevent discriminations that have been cited in this debate, and particularly by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and strike out the balance of this pending bill, except the provisions to which I have referred with approval. Experts who have made a thorough study of the question say that this reenactment of the act of 1917 would, with the increased earnings of the current year, raise something over $4,000,000,000. That would save the people for the present from all of the added burdens of the pending bill, and if a little later on it should develop that the Government needs more money to meet its just and necessary obligations, we could then devise some way to raise it. We have shown since we entered this war that the American Congress can do that very quickly when there is need for it to be done. Let us give the people a little chance to save a few dollars instead of taking all they have made and thus destroy their initiative and enterprise. Let us consider the people's side of it a little. I tell you, gentlemen, they are not only astonished but they are stunned by the appalling propositions embodied in this bill, and the deepening shadows of despair are gathering over them. [Applause.] I for one am in favor of heeding their appeals instead of increasing their distress. I am talking now not about men with immense incomes, who will never feel it, but I have in mind the average man and the average family. They are the ones who are going to feel this burden the most. And, gentlemen, while I am on that subject, let me make this further observation: Even if I knew that the adoption of my suggestion for the amendment and reenactment of the 1917 tax law would not raise all the money that the Government needs now, I would still stick to the proposition. These vast expenditures are the result of a war in which we entered for the preservation of republican government and civilization, and for the protection of humanity in general. What we accomplished in this war will inure more to the benefit of future generations in America than to the present generation.

I do not think that the people of this day should do all the fighting and endure all the suffering and bear the bulk of the financial burden. We have issued a good many bonds already, it is true, and authorized the issuance of more, but before I would paralyze business and oppress the people, as this new tax bill will do, I would authorize the issuance of still more long-time bonds, and let the future generations pay the most of the expense, because they will get the most of the benefit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. I would be delighted to yield to my old friend and schoolmate if I had the time.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is about up, and so I will have to let these few remarks go in the RECORD and avail myself of the privilege granted me to extend in the RECORD on this subject at a later date. Permit me to suggest, in conclusion, that there is still another remedy for the situation, which, in my judgment, is shortly to be applied by the people of the country themselves. Let the Republican Party take charge of the affairs of this country. [Applause.] Unless I greatly misinterpret the temper of the American people they are growing weary of so much theoretical, schoolmaster government. [Applause.] They are sick and tired of the way in which their money is being recklessly scattered around, like autumn leaves, by the billions. They are longing for a return of the good old days of Republican management [applause]; for more of the old-time religion of the fathers of the Republic; for more Americanism, and less chasing of the chimerical will-o'-the-wisp of world democracy; for the reestablishment of the old, time-honored doctrine of protection to American industries and American labor. [Applause.] And they are demanding, too, that their boys be permitted to return home, so that they may enjoy their due share of the era of happiness and prosperity that will come with Republican rule and Republican legislation. [Applause.] May the good Lord hasten the day. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE].

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am placed in a very peculiar attitude by virtue of what I consider a vicious practice of appending to unrelated bills various matters of legislation that should be considered alone. In this bill as amended by the Senate we find a provision that if any factory in the country employs any child under 14 years of age, or between the ages of 14 and 15 employs children who shall be worked over eight hours a day, or before 6 o'clock in the morning or after 7 o'clock in the afternoon, that factory shall be taxed 10 per cent of its net profits. I believe that this provision is unconstitutional. I remember that when I became a Member of this House I, in company with you, before this desk, was called upon to hold up my right hand and ask the Deity to withdraw from me all of His blessings if I should fail to defend the Constitution against its enemies, both domestic and foreign. And I am placed in the situation where I must either vote down this conference report, which otherwise I would vote for, or foreswear myself; and in that situation there is only one thing that I can do, and that is to vote down the report and seek to have the obnoxious features stricken from it.

I know that it is said, upon the authority of the oleomargarine case, the phosphorus match cases, and others, that the courts of the country will never, a power being granted to exist, inquire as to the motive for the exercise of that power. But before this Congress the question is not what the Supreme Court will decide, but the question is whether, as a matter of fact, our intended vote is a violation of the Constitution, which we have sworn to defend. Of course, it is a rule, and a good rule—and I am not quarreling with the decisions in those cases—that the courts of the country will not, where the enactment of Congress is consistent with a due performance of duty, put a construction upon those acts making them inconsistent with duty; but where the act itself can be construed as being a performance of a just power of the Congress, the courts, through a just comity, will indulge the presumption that Congress acted from righteous motives, and will sustain the legislative enactment.

But it has never been held, and I trust never will be held, where an enactment of Congress is inherently violative of the fundamental law and destructive of our form of government that the courts of the land will not construe that enactment as violative of the fundamental law through any idea of comity or sensitiveness in dealing with a correlative branch of the Government.

But be the powers of the court as they may, this Congress can not delegate to the Supreme Court of the United States the keeping of its conscience. This Congress can not hold up its hands and swear to defend the Constitution of the country and then vote for a measure that it believes to be unconstitutional on the theory that perhaps the court will be more observant of its duty and its oath than the membership of this House.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. In a moment. The duty is personal, and the oath is personal; and I contend that this enactment under the guise of exercising the taxing power of the United States is simply another effort to exercise a power which the Federal Government has never had, which was sought to be exercised under the power of regulating commerce, and which has already been declared unconstitutional by the courts.

I do not care a baubee whether men believe in a written constitution or not, whether they say that this Government was wisely or unwisely founded. We have a written Constitution, and every man in taking his oath takes his oath that he will defend it and observe it.

Now, what is the act? The act specifically provides that—> any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day or more than six days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock post meridian, or before the hour of 6 o'clock ante meridian, during any portion of the taxable year, shall pay for each taxable year, in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, an excise tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the entire net profits received or accrued for such year from the sale or disposition of the product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment.

The States of the Union, when they formed the Union under the Constitution, as has been decided in a thousand decisions, never gave to the National Government the so-called police powers; the right to legislate on the safety, health, comfort, and morals of the citizen. The founders of this Government in their wisdom wrote it in the Constitution that as regards those laws which affect men in their health, their comfort, their safety, and their morals, they shall be governed and ruled, if you please, by men selected by them; by men who lived under the local conditions and understood them. Fearful of a concentration of all these powers under one government, where necessarily the only practical way was to govern them through bureaus and bureau chiefs, it has been decided a thousand times by the Supreme Court that the National Government has no police power. The Supreme Court has said that the commerce clause of the Constitution shall not be used as a guise to filch away from the States powers which were never granted by the States. When that effort failed under the taxing power it is sought to do the thing by indirection which was prohibited by direction.

But what is the provision? I contend that on its very face it shows it is unconstitutional; that on its face it is not an exercise of the taxing power in good faith, but it is a subterfuge to exercise police powers that were never granted to the Federal Government.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAZARO. As I understand the gentleman, he is opposed to legislation by riders?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes; and I am opposed to the exercise of police powers by the Federal Government, because no such powers were ever granted to it.

Mr. LAZARO. What does the gentleman think of the "bone-dry" amendment attached to this measure over there in the Senate?

Mr. VENABLE. On the question of riders, I am opposed to riders on unrelated bills.

Mr. LAZARO. I know; but I am asking the gentleman what does he think about the "bone-dry" amendment attached to this bill as a rider?

Mr. VENABLE. Inherently I favor it on its merits, just as I favor a child-labor law on its merits. I am in favor of child-labor regulation.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Pardon me. I have a certain amount of ground that I wish to cover, and when I shall have covered it I shall be glad to yield if I have the time.

Now, what is this provision? It does not undertake to tax the products of child labor, but it taxes the act of employment of children. It says you may employ as many children as you please, unless you employ them under certain conditions. It taxes not only the profits earned by the labor of the children, but it taxes the profits earned by the labor of the adults also who are associated with the children in production. If it was an effort to levy a tax upon a product it would tax the product of the child labor. But it taxes not the product of child labor or the profits earned by child labor, but the profits earned by the entire establishment. It imposes the same tax whether the violation is great or small. It says to the man who operates a factory, "If you work a child 3 minutes before 6 o'clock in the morning I will tax you just as much as if you worked a thousand children." Would a revenue bill designed to get revenue adopt such provisions as that?

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. On the fundamental question as to the constitutional right to enact this legislation, can the gentleman see any great fundamental difference between this and the cotton legislation that we passed sometime ago?

Mr. VENABLE. What was that?

Mr. IGOE. The regulation of cotton contracts for future delivery, grading of cotton, and so forth.

Mr. VENABLE. I do not know. I was not in Congress when you passed the cotton grading act.

Mr. WINGO. That proposed a specific tax.

Mr. VENABLE. Yes; and in every one of these cases heretofore you have taxed a specific article of a specific kind. You may have used certain descriptive matter, as in the oleomargarine act, where you said oleomargarine which had an artificial coloring in it should be taxed, but you have always taxed the specific article, and I understand this is the first time where you have undertaken to tax not an article but an act.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman said awhile ago, and said correctly, too, that the Supreme Court had decided, possibly a thousand times, that the States did not surrender their police powers to the Federal Government when the Federal Constitution was adopted.

Mr. VENABLE. That is true.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. That the States still hold such powers.

Mr. VENABLE. The powers not granted to the Federal Government are reserved to the States.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Yes; and that such things as men's habits and the public health——

Mr. VENABLE. All the police powers are reserved to the States.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. But the gentleman's position on the submission of the national prohibition amendment——

Mr. VENABLE. That involves no question of constitutionality, because the very Constitution itself provides a method for its amendment. That was a case of amending the Constitution, not of violating it.

The people themselves in their Constitution inserted a provision that they could adopt any amendment, wise or otherwise, if the legislatures of a certain number of the States ratified it. They could say, "We declare as a fundamental constitutional truth that the moon is made of green cheese" if they wanted to do so. I am not talking about the wisdom of amending the Constitution. I am talking about its violation and the exercise by this Congress of powers that were never given to it.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VENABLE. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yield five minutes.

Mr. VENABLE. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will pardon me. I have not time to yield. What is the practical effect of such legislation? If you enter upon the business of taking the police powers away from the States under the guise of taxation, there is nothing in the world that you can not regulate in that way. You can completely socialize the entire Government in a year. You can make a socialist State of this Government in a term of Congress. Every object good in itself would have its supporters. We can conceive that machinery should be guarded, and hence we could tax the products of all factories where the machinery was unguarded, imposing a tax of 100 per cent, and force the adoption of mechanical safeguards, and establishing at the same time a gigantic bureau to look after that, having the people ruled by men they never selected, not answerable to them but appointed by a man a thousand miles away. In the same manner we could regulate the working of women. Yea, more than that, we could fix a minimum wage scale, and say that unless the laborers in field and factory received a certain minimum wage, the product of their labor should be taxed at such a rate as practically to compel the payment of the minimum wage.

Mr. LAZARO and Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. VENABLE. I hope gentlemen will pardon me. I have not time to yield. These objects may be good in themselves, but the people of the United States have said in their fundamental law that as far as these subject matters are concerned they propose to keep that part of the Government close to the people. The power to enact such laws is reserved to the people of the States, and has never been granted the Federal Government.

We propose to be ruled over—if you call it ruling—or served by men selected by us, by men answerable to us, by men who live in communities and know the conditions, by men who, if they do not do right, are under your observation, while this proposal is that you transfer all these reserved police powers to the Federal Government, that you regulate everything from Washington, with the result of the establishment of national bureaus, clothed with discretionary powers, in order to adopt regulations suitable to varying local conditions, with the result that from Washington will issue edicts of bureaucrats not elected by the people, not answerable to the people, but appointed by another authority, with all the inherent expense and tyranny that is naturally inherent in a bureaucratic government.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman stated that he was in favor of the Reed bone-dry amendment.

Mr. VENABLE. On its merits.

Mr. LAZARO. Does the gentleman think that was done in a constitutional way in the District of Columbia?

Mr. VENABLE. I think so; I think the trade in interstate commerce, as far as whisky is concerned, is sui generis. That is the principle of law decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. For years they have held that whisky is of such a character and nature that the ordinary property guaranties did not apply to it, and the power of legislation in it was practically plenary.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Why should we be held to the Constitution when the Supreme Court sometimes changes its mind?

Mr. VENABLE. Because you swore to do it.

Mr. EMERSON. And they also swore to do it.

Mr. VENABLE. They try to do it.

Mr. EMERSON. The Supreme Court sometimes changes its mind on a constitutional question and sometimes divides on a constitutional question.

Mr. VENABLE. The gentleman can vote as his conscience tells him to and let them take care of theirs.

Mr. EMERSON. That is what we do.

Mr. VENABLE. If you differ with me, well and good; but as I understand your position it is that because we have a Supreme Court to pass on constitutional questions that relieves us of the obligation of doing it individually.

Mr. EMERSON. A former Member of this House, elected to the next Congress, decided that the espionage act was unconstitutional and now he goes to jail.

Mr. VENABLE. That comes purely from the necessary operation of law. Having decided it wrongfully, he suffers the penalty. He has my sympathy, although I admire his honesty if he was honest. But a man can not come here, if there still remains in this Congress a belief in Deity, and invoke the Deity to withdraw from him all His blessings if he fails to defend and observe the Constitution as against all enemies and shift that personal responsibility because there happens to be a judicial tribunal before whom the question can be eventually brought. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, when the résumé of this bill of private assessment shall have been finally determined, in my mind there will one thing be considered as establishing a great forward step by the American people, and that is the enactment in it of a proper child-labor law, because I believe implicitly as a permanent governmental principle that of which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] complains. The language in this amendment provides that a child of tender years shall not work in a mine or quarry, or shall not work in a public cannery or workshop or factory; and that is deterrent to one who deliberately assaults public life—because that is what it is, it is an assault on the public life—when he deliberately seeks to exploit the labor of children and to distort and ruin their lives.

I agree in general with what the gentleman from Mississippi said about legislation by riders, but this is a matter of proper legislation by rider. But very recently the Supreme Court of the United States passed upon a separate bill in the case of Hammer against Dagenhart, the case involving the application of child labor in so far as it prohibited the transportation in interstate commerce of goods made by child labor.

This separate measure which was construed by the Supreme Court was presented to this House, if I recall correctly, by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING]. It was declared to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, so that now we face not a question of unconstitutionality, but we face, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] says, the question of voting as our consciences demand. As we face the world, we are to vote now not on the question of what the Supreme Court will say, because the Congress has the right to enact this legislation, but we vote as our consciences dictate, and my conscience dictates that I vote for the salvation of American childhood. [Applause.]

There has never been a stronger statement made in a judicial decision than that made by Mr. Justice Holmes in his minority opinion in the case already cited, wherein he said that "the public policy of the United States is shaped with a view to the benefit of the Nation as a whole." There is an enunciation from the highest court of the land that the United States is a Union of States, and that the benefit of the Nation is for its benefit as a whole. In the same opinion he says:

> But if there is any matter upon which civilized countries have agreed, it is the evil of premature and excessive child labor.

The gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman from Ohio does not want to convey the idea that I had one thing in mind when I had another. I referred to the conscience of a Member as to his conclusion on the constitutionality of this matter, and not to the merits of child labor. We all agree that it is an outrageous wrong to abuse the child in a factory, but it is simply a question of how the matter shall be regulated, and the power of Congress to do it. On the merits of the proposition the gentleman and I are in full accord.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the gentleman is in full accord with me on the great subject of child labor, and I am sure that he must be in full accord with me upon that which is presented in this bill, because there is absolutely no question here but that the legislation which is being enacted in this revenue bill is entirely within the power of this legislative body to enact. When it is said, as it is in this provision, that the greatest evil to civilized countries is the evil of premature and excessive child labor, then I say that this form of legislation—proper as it is—is responsive to the demands of humanity, and builds through strong men and women of the future for the security of our great Republic.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GARD was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], although seeming to read from the opinion "of the highest court in the land," did not, as a matter of fact, read from the opinion of that court. He read from the dissenting opinion of a justice sitting upon the bench of the Supreme Court, which opinion the court, in the very case at bar, declared was not the opinion of the highest court in the land. It was the opinion of a very able lawyer, but it is not the opinion of the Supreme Court.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman means to say that that was a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes. A gentleman on the Democratic side of the House a few moments ago asked a question of my colleague who was addressing the House as to the "fundamental principle" in the cotton-exchange tax, which brings a thought to my mind. I believe it is in order under the rules still to refer to the Democratic platform. The Democratic Party has elected two men to the Presidency within the past sixty-odd years, and only two. Each of those men was elected on a platform which contained this declaration—and I took those declarations so seriously and quoted them so frequently that it is not necessary for me to refer to the text. I can quote them from memory, for I remember it very well. That declaration is that "it is a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party"—not a passing fancy, mark you, not a paramount issue, not "molasses to catch flies," but—

> It is a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to levy taxes, except for the purpose of revenue only.

Upon that platform a few years ago we nominated Mr. Woodrow Wilson for President of the United States, and in accepting the nomination, speaking to this particular plank, he used this language:

> Our own clear conviction, as Democrats, is that in the last analysis the only safe and legitimate object of tariff duties, as of taxes of every other kind, is to raise revenue for the support of the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Well, I shall submit, although I do not think this is a matter in which the gentleman from Wisconsin is concerned. I was talking about a Democratic doctrine. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want just to ask one question; that is all.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield or not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says the only legitimate object of taxation is to raise revenue.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is what the gentleman who accepted the nomination for the Presidency on the Democratic ticket said.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Mississippi, of course, knows well that Congress voted a tax of 10 per cent on State bank issues ostensibly to raise revenue, but everybody knew it was for no such purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was not——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But that it was to extinguish the issues of State banks, and that was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was not "a safe or legitimate object" of taxation. Congress has the constitutional power to levy taxes on the issues of State banks, on oleomargarine, or white phosphorus matches, of course, and if all the children engaged in labor in the United States were engaged in the manufacture of cravats Congress would have the power to levy a tax on the manufacture of cravats so high that it would destroy the business, but the Supreme Court has never gone beyond this and never will go beyond it, that in levying taxes the Federal Government can not go beyond the scope of Federal authority to seek its object of taxation. It never has said more than that. Oh, we all know the case of McCulloch against Maryland, quoted so often in this House, but I will refer to that once more. It is the fundamental case on taxation and the power to tax. The opinion was delivered by John Marshall, perhaps the greatest judge who ever presided over any court in all the history of the world, and in determining the power of taxation he said this:

> It may be objected to this definition that the power of taxation is not confined to the people and property of a State. It may be exercised upon every object brought within its jurisdiction. This is true. But to what source do we trace this right?

Now, listen to this:

It is obvious that it is an incident of sovereignty and is coextensive with that to which it is an incident. All subjects over which the sovereign power of a State extends are objects of taxation; but those over which it does not extend are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation. This proposition may almost be pronounced self-evident.

Now, is this a subject over which the scope of Federal authority extends? We do not have to speculate on that. The Supreme Court a very short while ago, from the dissenting opinion in which case the gentleman from Ohio quoted, not from the opinion of the court, said this:

We have neither authority nor disposition to question the motives of Congress in enacting this legislation. The purposes intended must be attained consistently with constitutional limitations and not by an invasion of the powers of the States. This court has no more important function than that which devolves upon it the obligation to preserve inviolate the constitutional limitations upon the exercise of authority, Federal and State, to the end that each may continue to discharge, harmoniously with the other, the duties intrusted to it by the Constitution.

In our view the necessary effect of this act is, by means of a prohibition against the movement in interstate commerce of ordinary commercial commodities, to regulate the hours of labor of children in factories and mines within the States, a purely State authority. Thus the act in a twofold sense is repugnant to the Constitution. It not only transcends the authority delegated to Congress over commerce but also exerts a power as to a purely local matter to which the Federal authority does not extend.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. KEATING. I understood the gentleman to say that that was from the dissenting opinion.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman misunderstood me. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] quoted from the dissenting opinion, but announced that it was the opinion of "the highest court in the land." I am reading from the opinion of the court.

Mr. KEATING. I misunderstood you.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The court says what? That this is "purely a local matter to which the Federal authority does not extend," and the Supreme Court says if the Federal authority does not extend to it it is exempt from taxation. So says John Marshall in McCulloch against Maryland.

And then there is another old case with which we are all familiar—the case of Gibbons against Ogden. In this the court said:

Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the State.

This is not an open question any further. The court, in the very recent child-labor decision, says that the regulation of the hours of labor is in the exclusive province of the State, and that Congress has no power to legislate for that purpose. The subject matter is not within the scope of Federal sovereignty, and McCulloch against Maryland says Congress can not levy a tax upon it because all such objects are exempt from taxation.

"The purpose is in the exclusive province of the State, and therefore," says Gibbons against Ogden, "Congress is without power to tax it." Now, I do not regard President Wilson as a great lawyer. Of course, I would not set his opinion up with the opinion of John Marshall or with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, and yet he is, as we all know, one of the foremost men of all the world, one of the world's great statesmen, and he was for many years a lecturer on constitutional law in one of the great universities of this country. I quote from a lecture which he habitually delivered and which was subsequently published in his book on constitutional government. I quote from his lecture on that subject.

Referring to that clause of the Constitution which confers upon Congress the right to regulate commerce among the several States, he says:

Its power is "to regulate commerce between the States," and the attempts now made during every session of Congress to carry the implications of that power beyond the utmost boundaries of reasonable and honest inference show that the only limits likely to be observed by politicians are those set by the good sense and conservative temper of the country.

The proposed Federal legislation with regard to the regulation of child labor affords a striking example. If the power to regulate commerce between the States can be stretched to include the regulation of labor in mills and factories, it can be made to embrace every particular of the industrial organization and action of the country. The only limitations Congress would observe, should the Supreme Court assent to such obviously absurd extravagancies of interpretation, would be the limitations of opinion and of circumstance.

That is what Woodrow Wilson said as a lecturer on constitutional law to his classes at Princeton.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. For a question.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman mean to imply that President Wilson has not learned anything since he wrote that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Of course, I have no doubt he has learned a great deal. He has learned this—that the matter has gone to the Supreme Court of the United States and the issue squarely presented, and that the Supreme Court tracked, almost to the wording itself, the opinion he gave to his class and showed that as a lecturer upon constitutional law at Princeton his judgment in this particular matter was entirely accurate and warranted.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask my friend from Mississippi if the President, as a matter of fact, did not change his mind upon that question before the Supreme Court made a decision?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. He did; but the Supreme Court thought the opinion of the lecturer on constitutional government at Princeton was sounder than the opinion of the President of the United States subsequently expressed.

Mr. IGOE. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he can distinguish between the power of Congress to regulate through the taxing power the dealing in futures and this?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; I can. I voted against the tax to regulate cotton futures. I voted against the tax on the white-phosphorus matches. So "let the galled jade wince; our withers are unwrung." I have not consciously voted during my long service in this House to exercise the power of taxation except for the purpose of raising revenue.

Now, what purpose have we in doing this? Not to raise revenue. Nobody claims that; and, if the gentleman from Missouri will honor me with his attention, I will endeavor to differentiate this pending proposition from the bank-tax case, the oleomargarine tax, the cotton-exchange tax, and other similar cases. No divinity hedges about bank notes, oleomargarine, phosphorous matches, and so forth. They are all clearly proper subjects of taxation if the tax, in the opinion of Congress, will produce revenue wherewith to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare. They are all objects within the scope of Federal sovereignty, and therefore subjects for taxation, and the Supreme Court in passing upon the constitutionality of these laws refused to inquire into the legislative purpose. They refused to listen to the stories which were told them to the effect that Congress had really levied those taxes for the unconstitutional purpose of destroying the enterprise taxed.

These were all innocent-looking laws, every one of them preceded by the declaration—untrue, to be sure, but nevertheless there—"in order to provide revenue," and so forth, "Be it enacted," and so forth. The court refused to believe or to listen to any gossip dehors the record that Congress was cheating, and pointed in justification of their faith in a coordinate branch of the Government to the law itself, and there it was—O spirit of Talleyrand!—"In order to provide revenue," and so forth.

But we are growing in grace; we are becoming frank; we have thrown off dissimulation; we write now in the very face of the law itself: "Tax on employment of child labor."

Let me read it:

TITLE XII.—TAX ON EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

SEC. 1200. That every person (other than a bona fide boys' or girls' canning club recognized by the agricultural department of a State and of the United States) operating (a) any mine or quarry situated in the United States in which children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work during any portion of the taxable year; or (b) any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day or more than six days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock post meridian, or before the hour of 6 o'clock ante meridian, during any portion of the taxable year, shall pay for each taxable year, in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, an excise tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the entire net profits received or accrued for such year from the sale or disposition of the product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment.

There it stands in all its nakedness, boldly refusing to hide its shame or its unlawful purpose. No less a personage than a member of the Cabinet only a few years ago in almost a passion of indignation declared on this floor that it was "a prostitution of the taxing power." Yet here it is to look the Supreme Court straight in the eyes, neither "honest nor legitimate," according to the President, yet impudently associating with all the other statutes of the realm and brazenly claiming the right of equality in the society of these other lawfully begotten children of our brain. When the court is told now of this unwarranted attempt by Congress to usurp the powers of the States they can not choose but hear!

Can Congress lay a tax on all marriage ceremonies which are performed by a Christian minister? Can Congress tax the products of the farm, the factory, or the mine in all States which do not grant suffrage to women or which prescribe a property or educational qualification for the voter? Can we tax all cotton where the farmer permits his hired hands to go to the field before 7 o'clock in the morning or remain after 5 in the afternoon? And if not, why not? The only reason which can be assigned against it is that these subjects are not within the scope of Federal power. The Supreme Court has in this very latest volume of its printed reports most solemnly and unequivocally declared that the employment of child labor is not within the scope of Federal sovereignty, and yet it is proposed to tax it. If this is constitutional, so would the other be. No wonder the court declared:

> That if Congress can thus regulate matters entrusted to local authority * * * all the powers of the States over local matters may be eliminated, and thus our system of Government be practically destroyed.

Why should we at this particular time flagrantly violate the Constitution of the United States? What will it lead to?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Can I have five minutes more?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Where are you going? This is not the opinion of a debater in the heat of debate. This is the deliberate opinion of the Supreme Court. Where do you think we are going if you do this? I read from the child-labor decision:

> The far-reaching result of upholding the act can not be more plainly indicated than by pointing out that if Congress can thus regulate matters intrusted to local authority by prohibition of the movement of commodities in interstate commerce all freedom of commerce will be at an end and the powers of the States over local matters may be eliminated, and thus our system of government be practically destroyed.

What is it that makes the heads of the chancelleries of all Europe rest uneasily on their pillows to-night? What is it that inspires with fear the liberty-loving peoples of the earth who believe in a government to protect life, liberty, and property? What is it that makes them look to the future now with anxiety? It is because on the horizon we see the ugly visage of bolshevism rising. To do what? To overturn orderly government in the world. How can we in this country—I ask you seriously—how can we in this country expect against this menace of bolshevism to maintain our system of government under the law and under the Constitution if we here now, in response to some imaginative clamor coming up from the people, do what the Supreme Court of the United States says we will do—take the last step toward the destruction of our system of government?

It does occur to me, Mr. Speaker, that in these times those of us who love orderly government ought to be clasping the Constitution to our hearts tighter than ever before, and in view of the storm that is threatening us to-day to cling to it as we would to the Rock of Ages. Under our Constitution this Government has grown, as no other country has grown, in physical power and in righteousness. We have sent our boys abroad to spread the beneficent light of our stars throughout the world, that those who love liberty and seek it may find a way. They have done well; and when they are returned I for one want to be able to look them squarely in the face and say to them, "My boys, I could not go with you to France and make the sacrifice on the battle field to preserve our system of government. I remained here in the place of high responsibility to which you appointed me. But while you fought and conquered and won peace over there, I also kept the faith." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY rose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will there be any further speeches on the gentleman's side?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This will be the last?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes. I shall conclude the argument. I wish to be recognized for 15 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in concluding the debate on this the greatest revenue bill in the history of nations, I desire at the outset to pay my tribute to the gentleman whose name it will bear.

Unswerving honesty, uninfluenced by fulsome flattery or by virulent criticism, ability of a high order, with energy and the hardest kind of work, have characterized the efforts of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] [applause]; and I would be remiss in what I conceive to be my duty if I did not say of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the ranking minority member on the committee, that absolute lack of partisanship, a high sense of duty, a devotion to high ideals, and patriotism of the highest order have characterized throughout these discussions the efforts of the gentleman from Michigan [applause], who, I presume, will soon be assigned by the present minority in this House, soon to become the majority, to a more important position than he even now occupies. [Applause.]

And I will say of the conferees on both sides, and of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, both Republicans and Democrats, that throughout the strenuous labors, extending over almost a year of time, which have characterized their efforts in the preparation of this bill and in its passage through this House, and in its final passage to-day, partisanship has been forgotten, and only patriotism and a high sense of duty have prevailed throughout. And I want to say of these two young gentlemen, who under the rules of this House are permitted to be here on the floor to-day, Mr. John E. Walker, clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means [applause], and Mr. Middleton Beaman [applause], the bill-drafting expert furnished to the Congress by Columbia University—and we pay none of his compensation—I want to say of them that at the present time they know more about the tariffs and the taxes imposed and to be imposed by this Congress, and more about the tariffs and the taxes imposed by other nations, than any other two men in all the world. [Applause.]

FUTURE TAXING BILLS.

In the brief time in which I shall address the House I want to discuss not so much this bill as future bills, because I anticipate that, during the life of the Congress so soon to commence, the same nonpartisan characteristics will prevail as have prevailed during this Congress in the preparation of taxing bills. We all of us know that there must be a revision of the tariff; we know it must come in the immediate future; and we know that when the readjustment of nations occurs tariff readjustments here will be necessary. Our own bill, drawn principally to meet German competition, is no longer tenable; and we know there must be other and different methods adopted for collecting internal revenue. The time has passed in the history of this country when taxes can be concealed, when people can be persuaded that they are not paying taxes, when taxes collected at our ports and excise taxes are sufficient to run this great Government. From now on through the future years, as long as any man now living lives, we must collect from systems of internal taxation alone every year three or four times as much as we collected from all sources under the old system which was possible and which prevailed prior to the great war.

THIS BILL WILL BE CRITICIZED.

The bill we are just sending out will meet with most violent criticism. It levies an enormous burden of taxation, and as the months pass we will begin to understand that it levies it in a manner to a very large degree illogical; but we have been compelled to build upon the foundations already existing in drafting these war measures. We have been compelled to develop the Civil War method of levying taxes. We have been compelled to study and to apply to our own conditions methods of levying taxes adopted in the warring nations; and in obedience to the clamor throughout the country we have been compelled to reduce this bill below the amount it carried when it left this House. We know now that at the conclusion of the present fiscal year we will have expended during the year for the purpose of carrying on this great Government the enormous sum of $19,000,000,000, and we know now that we will be able to get through this fiscal year with one more bond issue. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] in his conclusion that next year—during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920—it will be necessary for us to raise in some way at least $10,000,000,000. Whether we shall be required to raise and to expend more than that amount during the fiscal year ending in June, 1920, will depend upon how long this House and the Senate remain in session this summer.

If the House and Senate remain in session, even $10,000,000,000 will not pay the bill, because we are compelled to admit—some of us—that when it comes to expenditures of money and to demands on the Treasury of the United States, this House and the other branch also have almost failed to function.

MUST REVISE RULES.

First of all, we need a revision of the methods of procedure in this House, some kind of a budget committee with some powers assigned it, some rules which will prevent amendments from the floor for reasons purely sentimental which take out of the Treasury large sums of money and distribute them among large numbers of people. We shall be compelled to meet this condition of affairs in the near future by revising the rules of this House. And I want to say to the Republicans that when they present a logical method of revising the rules, and the changed conditions make it necessary, they will find some of us on this side, including myself, supporting them most enthusiastically and to the very best of our ability. [Applause.]

THREE KINDS OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

I would like to see, so far as I am concerned, just three kinds of internal-revenue taxes levied in this country. I would like to see taxes on individual incomes, I would like to see taxes on estates, and I would like to see excise taxes levied upon tobacco. That is all.

We must arrive at some system of levying taxes in this country of which the people can not complain that all are not being treated alike. An income tax answers that sort of condition. An income tax is fair; nobody can be heard to complain. It is graduated all the way up.

Is it not wrong from an economic standpoint to tax industry? Taxing an industry is like hanging weights on the wheels of some great, powerful, but easily disturbed machine. We can tax the incomes from industry after they reach individuals. These industries we are hampering with taxes do not belong to the men who operate them; they belong to the 100,000,000 people who live here in the United States. The men who operate and control them are only the trustees who have charge of them. It is an awful thing to injure industries with taxes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired, and all time has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois have more time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. We preserve in this bill these three methods of levying taxes. The estate tax as the years pass will be apparently more and more necessary. We have at the present time in the United States I do not know how many millionaires, developed by this war. When the war started we had 7,000, the next year we had 10,600, and the next year 17,085. If that ratio of progress, which of course has not been kept up since we commenced to levy taxes, if that ratio continued we would have 60,000 at the present time.

It is safe to say, without any expectation of successful contradiction, that at the present time we have in the United States 30,000 millionaires, 22,000 of whom have been created by this war. These increased estates must be taken care of in some way. We must distribute them by estate taxes upon the death of the persons who now control them. Some days ago I estimated that we have at the present time 25,000 millionaires in the United States. I have reason to believe that estimate was much too small.

It is an easy matter to distribute estates by this method of taxing them; I do not care whether it is done by the States or by the National Government. I know the States will not do it unless the National Government does do it. They have been trying, some of them, to levy taxes on inheritances or upon estates for over 100 years and have accomplished practically nothing in that direction. I would like to see at some time in the future a tax levied by the National Government upon estates, a high tax, graduated, highest upon the greatest estates providing for credits of the amounts levied by the various States. In that way we will be able to distribute large portions of these large estates at the death of the persons who control them. If we do not do it at their death, we will find mobs in this country insisting on doing it while they live. [Applause.]

OUR COMPLICATED TAXING SYSTEM.

The numerous pages of this great revenue bill contain hundreds of carefully drawn but technical and complicated paragraphs. In our efforts to conceal taxes and make it apparently easier to pay them, we have inserted paragraphs relating to amortization, depletion, deductions, normal taxes, flat rates, war profits, excess profits, estate taxes, excise taxes, special taxes, and other complicated and technical paragraphs on other subjects. Under the system I propose our methods can be simplified so that taxpayers will not be compelled to employ experts in order to make out their schedules.

HOW OUR SYSTEM BURDENS BUSINESS.

In this bill and in all the bills we have passed we impose burdensome taxes upon the transaction of business. We tax bonds, we tax also the original issues of capital stock, capital-stock sales, sales of produce on exchanges, drafts or checks payable not on demand, deeds of conveyance, powers of attorney, passage tickets to Canada and Mexico, proxies for voting at meetings of corporate stockholders, parcel-post packages. In fact, there does not seem to be any of the ordinary methods of transacting business which have escaped.

OUR ILLOGICAL METHODS OF LEVYING TAXES.

In this bill we levy a tax on women's hose which cost more than $2, while a silk dress may be bought by a millionaire's wife for $1,000 and escape taxes. We tax men's shirts which cost over $3, women's hats which cost more than $15, fans which cost more than $1, shoes which cost more than $10, men's and boys' caps which cost more than $2, umbrellas which cost more than $4—all upon the theory that they are luxuries. But if we tax these articles upon the theory that they are luxuries, upon what theory do we tax medicines, pills, and tablets when sold by or for a dealer? Are they luxuries? We tax tooth pastes, perfumes, toilet waters, and hair dyes. Do we do that upon the theory that they are luxuries? Why should we tax articles that are sold in a drug store and not tax articles that are sold in a grocery store? Upon what theory can we tax automobiles? Are they luxuries? They are considered necessities at the present time in the rural sections as well as in the cities.

We propose, however, to take all the so-called luxury taxes out of this bill as soon as it becomes a law by passing through the Congress a joint resolution—a long step in the direction of the system I am advocating.

A METHOD OF SIMPLIFYING TAXES.

I propose hereafter to advocate individual income taxes to the very best of my ability, an income-tax system which contemplates taking the taxes entirely off industrial organizations and off all the instruments used for the transaction of business, a system which will preserve intact the business of the country and which will reach the incomes of individuals only. There are easy methods by which we can compel corporations to distribute, when they do not properly distribute, earnings, and when the money reaches the bank accounts of individuals the Government can then reach out and take any amount of it that may be necessary, without interfering with business and without interfering with the wages of labor. As a matter of fact, the amount of taxes we will obtain in this bill from any other source than the sources I have mentioned is almost negligible. According to our estimates we will obtain during the next fiscal year from taxes on incomes, including individual and corporate incomes, $4,762,000,000. We will obtain from taxes on cigars and tobaccos $250,000,000, and from taxes on estates $115,000,000, making a total of $5,127,000,000. This leaves a balance of less than $1,000,000,000 which we obtain from the oppressive methods of burdening business and industry which I have been discussing.

A COMMODITIES SALES TAX.

A very small tax, indeed, on sales, to be paid either by the vendor or the vendee, would yield an immense sum of money. From a tax of this character we could exclude foods and medicines and tax every other transaction. There could be no complaint with reference to this tax that some persons were being unfairly discriminated against. It would not bear heavier upon one business than another business. A very light tax indeed, varying, of course, with the amount of the sales, could be levied which would produce a billion dollars. A tax of this character could be expanded indefinitely.

MORE SHOULD PAY TAXES.

In 1916 out of the 110,000,000 people living then within the boundaries of continental United States only 437,036 paid income taxes to the National Government. More than that will pay this year, but not many more. A citizen who does not contribute something, no matter how small, toward the support of the National Government does not develop that interest in the affairs of the Government which makes of him the best citizen. The income-tax exemptions ought to be lowered to a point where it is profitable to collect, and of course ought to be assessed and graduated with reference to the ability of the persons taxed to pay.

Whenever the amount collected is not materially larger than the amount expended in the collection of it, it is not advisable to collect. Our exemptions can be materially lowered, and we can obtain in that way in small amounts a tremendous revenue, and we can add some millions of taxpayers to the very small number who now pay taxes, and in that way we can increase the number of stockholders in this great Government of ours—who will be interested in its affairs and anxious for the success of our form of Government. At the present time we have less than 500,000 stockholders in the enterprise of carrying on this great Government.

OUR INCREASING NATIONAL EXPENDITURES.

It is going to take more money than ever to provide for the necessities of the National Government. If we supply a reasonable sinking fund with which to retire our bonded indebtedness, the tax for that purpose, together with the interest on our bonded indebtedness, will soon mean an annual expenditure of $1,600,000,000—nearly twice the amount of our entire national expenditures a few years ago—and there must be added to this very large amount all the expense of conducting this Government, including the expenses of our Army and Navy and any public improvements Congress may authorize.

For the next 25 years we can not expect a national annual expenditure much less than $4,000,000,000, and we may as well get ready for it with a logical taxing system. We can not expect much revenue at our ports. As compared with our tremendous national expenditures, the revenue we can get at our ports will be almost negligible. The system which appeals to me on account of its simplicity, and the system we ought to speedily develop, ought to include only individual taxes, excise taxes on tobaccos, estate taxes, and the amount we can get at our ports out of taxes levied for revenue only. Whenever we release business from the burdens we have been placing upon it and establish the very simple system which I have suggested, we can enter upon an era of prosperity unparalleled in the history of nations, and we will be able to retain the position in the sun which by right belongs to us through the centuries to come. [Applause.]

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. VENABLE. I rise to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion to recommit by Mr. VENABLE: "I move to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to disagree to Senate amendment No. 546, and that they further insist on the disagreement of the House thereto."

Mr. KITCHIN. On that, Mr. Speaker, and on the conference report I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUMPHREYS) there were 15 ayes and 171 noes.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KITCHIN and Mr. GARNER asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 312, nays 11, answered "present" 13, not voting 93, as follows:

SENATE.

SUNDAY, February 9, 1919.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 7, 1919.)

The Senate reassembled at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to participate in the joint memorial services in honor of Theodore Roosevelt.

The Senate, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms and by the Vice President and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

After the conclusion of the memorial services, the Senate returned to its Chamber, and the Vice President resumed the chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock meridian to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, February 10, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 9, 1919.

The House met at 3 o'clock p. m.

JOINT SESSION OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

The Doorkeeper, Mr. Joseph J. Sinnott, announced—

The Vice President and the Senate.

The Chief of Staff and Major Generals of the Army, the Rear Admirals of the Navy, and the Adjutant and Inspector of the Marine Corps.

The members of the President's Cabinet.

The ex-President of the United States.

The honorable Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The ambassadors, ministers, and chargés d'affaires of foreign governments.

The Chaplain of the House of Representatives, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, whose infinite wisdom, power, and goodness find their way into the mind and heart of man, inspiring the susceptible to great thoughts, heroic deeds, and splendid achievements, such men live, become leaders, their names gild the pages of history, sacred and profane, and become beacon lights to guide mankind ever onward and upward to larger and grander civilization.

We are here in memory of one of the Nation's noblest sons—a writer, a speaker, a scientist, a patriot, a soldier, a statesman. We respect him because he respected his country. We love him because he loved her people. We honor him because he honored and revered her sacred institutions and would have poured out his heart's blood to uphold and sustain them; a Christian, ever turning with faith and confidence to his God for strength and guidance.

God help us to cherish his memory, emulate his virtues, that we may leave a record well pleasing in Thy sight.

How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word!
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
To you, who for refuge to Jesus have fled?

Fear not, I am with Thee, O be not dismayed,
For I am thy God, I will still give thee aid;
I'll strengthen thee, help thee, and cause thee to stand,
Upheld by my gracious, omnipotent hand.

Let Thy kingdom possess our hearts, that we may hallow Thy name, our God and our Father. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Happy is the memory of that man who has for his eulogist one who not only knew all about him but who knew him; happier still if that eulogist be a man of letters, happiest if he be a friend.

I present to you the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, senior Senator of the United States from the State of Massachusetts, scholar, statesman, orator, and the friend of the lamented great President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause.]

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. LODGE said:

A tower is fallen, a star is set! Alas! Alas! for Celin.

The words of lamentation from the old Moorish ballad, which in boyhood we used to recite, must, I think, have risen to many lips when the world was told that Theodore Roosevelt was dead. But whatever the phrase the thought was instant and everywhere. Variously expressed, you heard it in the crowds about the bulletin boards, from the man in the street and the man on the railroads, from the farmer in the fields, the women in the shops, in the factories, and in the homes. The pulpit found in his life a text for sermons. The judge on the bench, the child at school, alike paused for a moment conscious of a loss. The cry of sorrow came from men and women of all conditions, high and low, rich and poor, from the learned and the ignorant, from the multitude who had loved and followed him and from those who had opposed and resisted him. The newspapers pushed aside the absorbing reports of the events of these fateful days and gave pages to the man who had died. Flashed beneath the ocean and through the air went the announcement of his death, and back came a world-wide response from courts and cabinets, from press and people, in other and far-distant lands. Through it all ran a golden thread of personal feeling which gleams so rarely in the somber formalism of public grief. Everywhere the people felt in their hearts that:

A Power was passing from the Earth
To breathless Nature's dark abyss.

It would seem that here was a man, a private citizen, conspicuous by no office, with no glitter of power about him, no ability to reward or punish, gone from the earthly life, who must have been unusual even among the leaders of men, and who thus demands our serious consideration.

This is a thought to be borne in mind to-day. We meet to render honor to the dead, to the great American whom we mourn. But there is something more to be done. We must remember that when History, with steady hand and calm eyes, free from the passions of the past, comes to make up the final account, she will call as her principal witnesses the contemporaries of the man or the event awaiting her verdict. Here and elsewhere the men and women who knew Theodore Roosevelt or who belong to his period will give public utterance to their emotions and to their judgments in regard to him. This will be part of the record to which the historian will turn when our living present has become the past, of which it is his duty to write. Thus is there a responsibility placed upon each one of us who will clearly realize that here, too, is a duty to posterity whom we would fain guide to the truth as we see it and to whose hands we commit our share in the history of our beloved country—that history so much of which was made under his leadership.

We can not approach Theodore Roosevelt along the beaten paths of eulogy or satisfy ourselves with the empty civilities of commonplace funereal tributes, for he did not make his life journey over main-traveled roads nor was he ever commonplace. Cold and pompous formalities would be unsuited to him who was devoid of affectation, who was never self-conscious, and to whom posturing to draw the public gaze seemed not only repellent but vulgar. He had that entire simplicity of manners and modes of life which is the crowning result of the highest culture and the finest nature. Like Cromwell, he would always have said: "Paint me as I am." In that spirit, in his spirit of devotion to truth's simplicity, I shall try to speak of him to-day in the presence of the representatives of the great Government of which he was for seven years the head.

The rise of any man from humble or still more from sordid beginnings to the heights of success always and naturally appeals strongly to the imagination. It furnishes a vivid contrast which is as much admired as it is readily understood. It still retains the wonder which such success awakened in the days of hereditary lawgivers and high privileges of birth. Birth and fortune, however, mean much less now than two centuries ago. To climb from the place of a printer's boy to the highest rank in science, politics, and diplomacy would be far easier to-day than in the eighteenth century, given a genius like Franklin to do it. Moreover, the real marvel is in the soaring achievement itself, no matter what the origin of the man who comes by "the people's unbought grace to rule his native land" and who on descending from the official pinnacle still leads and influences thousands upon thousands of his fellow men.

Theodore Roosevelt had the good fortune to be born of a well-known, long-established family, with every facility for education and with an atmosphere of patriotism and disinterested service both to country and humanity all about him. In his father he had before him an example of lofty public spirit, from which it would have been difficult to depart. But if the work of his ancestors relieved him from the hard struggle which meets an unaided man at the outset, he also lacked the spur of necessity to prick the sides of his intent, in itself no small loss. As a balance to the opportunity which was his without labor, he had not only the later difficulties which come to him to whom fate has been kind at the start, but he had also spread before him the temptations inseparable from such inherited advantages as fell to his lot—temptations to a life of sports and pleasure, to lettered ease, to an amateur's career in one of the fine arts, perhaps to a money-making business, likewise an inheritance, none of them easily to be set aside in obedience to the stern rule that the larger and more facile the opportunity the greater and more insistent the responsibility. How he refused to tread the pleasant paths that opened to him on all sides and took the instant way which led over the rough road of toil and action his life discloses.

At the beginning, moreover, he had physical difficulties not lightly to be overcome. He was a delicate child, suffering acutely from attacks of asthma. He was not a strong boy, was retiring, fond of books, and with an intense but solitary devotion to natural history. As his health gradually improved he became possessed by the belief, although he perhaps did not then formulate it, that in the fields of active life a man could do that which he willed to do; and this faith was with him to the end. It became very evident when he went to Harvard. He made himself an athlete by sheer hard work. Hampered by extreme nearsightedness, he became none the less a formidable boxer and an excellent shot. He stood high in scholarship, but as he worked hard so he played hard, and was popular in the university and beloved by his friends. For a shy and delicate boy all this meant solid achievement as well as unusual determination and force of will. Apparently he took early to heart and carried out to fulfillment the noble lines of Clough's Dipsychus:

In light things
Prove thou the arms thou long'st to glorify,
Nor fear to work up from the lowest ranks
Whence come great Nature's Captains. And high deeds
Haunt not the fringy edges of the fight,
But the pell-mell of men.

When a young man comes out of college he descends suddenly from the highest place in a little world to a very obscure corner in a great one. It is something of a shock, and there is apt to be a chill in the air. Unless the young man's life has been planned beforehand and a place provided for him by others, which is exceptional, or unless he is fortunate in a strong and dominating purpose or talent which drives him to science or art or some particular profession, he finds himself at this period pausing and wondering where he can get a grip upon the vast and confused world into which he has been plunged.

It is a trying and only too frequently a disheartening experience, this looking for a career, this effort to find employment in a huge and hurrying crowd which appears to have no use for the newcomer. Roosevelt, thus cast forth on his own resources—his father, so beloved by him, having died two years before—fell to work at once, turning to the study of the law, which he did not like, and to the completion of a history of the War of 1812 which he had begun while still in college. With few exceptions young beginners in the difficult art of writing are either too exuberant or too dry. Roosevelt said that his book was as dry as an encyclopedia, thus erring in precisely the direction one would not have expected. The book, be it said, was by no means so dry as he thought it, and it had some other admirable qualities. It was clear and thorough, and the battles by sea and land, especially the former, which involved the armaments and crews, the size and speed of the ships engaged in the famous frigate and sloop actions, of which we won eleven out of thirteen, were given with a minute accuracy never before attempted in the accounts of this war, and which made the book an authority, a position it holds to this day.

This was a good deal of sound work for a boy's first year out of college. But it did not content Roosevelt. Inherited influences and inborn desires made him earnest and eager to render some public service. In pursuit of this aspiration he joined the Twenty-first Assembly District Republican Association of the City of New York, for by such machinery all politics were carried on in those days. It was not an association composed of his normal friends; in fact, the members were not only eminently practical persons but they were inclined to be rough in their methods. They were not dreamers, nor were they laboring under many illusions. Roosevelt went among them a complete stranger. He differed from them with entire frankness, concealed nothing, and by his strong and simple democratic ways, his intense Americanism, and the magical personal attraction which went with him to the end, made some devoted friends. One of the younger leaders, "Joe" Murray, believed in him, became especially attached to him, and so continued until death separated them. Through Murray's efforts he was elected to the New York Assembly in 1881, and thus only one year after leaving college his public career began. He was just twenty-three.

Very few men make an effective State reputation in their first year in the lower branch of the State legislature. I never happened to hear of one who made a national reputation in such a body. Roosevelt did both. When he left the assembly after three years' service he was a national figure, well known, and of real importance, and also a delegate at large from the great State of New York to the Republican national convention of 1884, where he played a leading part. Energy, ability, and the most entire courage were the secret of his extraordinary success. It was a time of flagrant corporate influence in the New York Legislature of the "Black Horse Cavalry," of a group of members who made money by sustaining corporation measures or by levying on corporations and capital through the familiar artifice of "strike bills." Roosevelt attacked them all openly and aggressively and never silently or quietly. He fought for the impeachment of a judge solely because he believed the judge corrupt, which surprised some of his political associates of both parties, there being, as one practical thinker observed, "no politics in politics." He failed to secure the impeachment, but the fight did not fail nor did the people forget it, and despite—perhaps because of—the enemies he made he was twice reelected. He became at the same time a distinct, well-defined figure to the American people. He had touched the popular imagination. In this way he performed the unexampled feat of leaving the New York Assembly, which he had entered three years before an unknown boy, with a national reputation and with his name at least known throughout the United States. He was twenty-six years old.

When he left Chicago at the close of the national convention in June, 1884, he did not return to New York but went West to the Bad Lands of the Little Missouri Valley, where he had purchased a ranch in the previous year. The early love of natural history which never abated had developed into a passion for hunting and for life in the open. He had begun in the wilds of Maine and then turned to the West and to a cattle ranch to gratify both tastes. The life appealed to him and he came to love it. He herded and rounded up his cattle, he worked as a cow-puncher, only rather harder than any of them, and in the intervals he hunted and shot big game. He also came in contact with men of a new type, rough, sometimes dangerous, but always vigorous and often picturesque. With them he had the same success as with the practical politicians of the twenty-first assembly district, although they were widely different specimens of mankind. But all alike were human at bottom and so was Roosevelt. He argued with them, rode with them, camped with them, played and joked with them, but was always master of his outfit. They respected him and also liked him because he was at all times simple, straightforward, outspoken, and sincere. He became a popular and well-known figure in that western country and was regarded as a good fellow, a "white man," entirely fearless, thoroughly good natured and kind, never quarrelsome, and never safe to trifle with, bully, or threaten. The life and experiences of that time found their way into a book, "The Hunting Trips of a Ranchman," interesting in description and adventure and also showing a marked literary quality.

In 1886 he ran as Republican candidate for mayor of New York and might have been elected had his own party stood by him. But many excellent men of Republican faith, the "timid good," as he called them, panic-stricken by the formidable candidacy of Henry George, flocked to the support of Mr. Abram Hewitt, the Democratic candidate, as the man most certain to defeat the menacing champion of single taxation. Roosevelt was beaten, but his campaign, which was entirely his own and the precursor of many others, his speeches with their striking quality then visible to the country for the first time, all combined to fix the attention of the people upon the losing candidate. Roosevelt was the one of the candidates who was most interesting, and again he had touched the imagination of the people and cut a little deeper into the popular consciousness and memory.

Two years more of private life, devoted to his home, where his greatest happiness was always found, to his ranch, to reading and writing books, and then came an active part in the campaign of 1888, resulting in the election of President Harrison, who made him civil-service commissioner in the spring of 1889. He was in his thirty-first year. Civil-service reform as a practical question was then in its initial stages. The law establishing it, limited in extent and forced through by a few leaders of both parties in the Senate, was only six years old. The promoters of the reform, strong in quality but weak in numbers, had compelled a reluctant acceptance of the law by exercising a balance of power vote in certain States and districts. It had few earnest supporters in Congress, some lukewarm friends, and many strong opponents. All the active politicians were practically against it. Mr. Conkling had said that when Dr. Johnson told Boswell "that patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel" he was ignorant of the possibilities of the word "reform," and this witticism met with a large response.

Civil-service reform, meaning the establishment of a classified service and the removal of routine administrative offices from politics, had not reached the masses of the people at all. The average voter knew and cared nothing about it. When six years later Roosevelt resigned from the commission the great body of the people knew well what civil-service reform meant, large bodies of voters cared a great deal about it, and it was established and spreading its control. We have had many excellent men who have done good work in the Civil Service Commission, although that work is neither adventurous nor exciting and rarely attracts public attention, but no one has ever forgotten that Theodore Roosevelt was once civil-service commissioner.

He found the law struggling for existence, laughed at, sneered at, surrounded by enemies in Congress, and with but few fighting friends. He threw himself into the fray. Congress investigated the commission about once a year, which was exactly what Roosevelt desired. Annually, too, the opponents of the reform would try to defeat the appropriation for the commission, and this again was playing into Roosevelt's hands, for it led to debates, and the newspapers as a rule sustained the reform. Senator Gorman mourned in the Senate over the cruel fate of a "bright young man" who was unable to tell on examination the distance of Baltimore from China, and thus was deprived of his inalienable right to serve his country in the post office. Roosevelt proved that no such question had ever been asked and requested the name of the "bright young man." The name was not forthcoming, and the victim of a question never asked goes down nameless to posterity in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as merely a "bright young man." Then General Grosvenor, a leading Republican of the House, denounced the commissioner for crediting his district with an appointee name Rufus Putnam who was not a resident of the district, and Roosevelt produced a letter from the general recommending Rufus Putnam as a resident of his district and a constituent. All this was unusual. Hitherto it had been a safe amusement to ridicule and jeer at civil-service reform, and here was a commissioner who dared to reply vigorously to attacks, and even to prove Senators and Congressmen to be wrong in their facts. The amusement of baiting the Civil Service Commission seemed to be less inviting than before, and, worse still, the entertaining features seemed to have passed to the public, who enjoyed and approved the commissioner who disregarded etiquette and fought hard for the law he was appointed to enforce. The law suddenly took on new meaning and became clearly visible in the public mind, a great service to the cause of good government.

After six years' service in the Civil Service Commission Roosevelt left Washington to accept the position of President of the Board of Police Commissioners of the city of New York, which had been offered to him by Mayor Strong. It is speaking within bounds to say that the history of the police force of New York has been a checkered one in which the black squares have tended to predominate. The task which Roosevelt confronted was then, as always, difficult, and the machinery of four commissioners and a practically irremovable chief made action extremely slow and uncertain. Roosevelt set himself to expel politics and favoritism in appointments and promotions and to crush corruption everywhere. In some way he drove through the obstacles and effected great improvements, although permanent betterment was perhaps impossible. Good men were appointed and meritorious men promoted as never before, while the corrupt and dangerous officers were punished in a number of instances sufficient, at least, to check and discourage evildoers. Discipline was improved, and the force became very loyal to the chief commissioner, because they learned to realize that he was fighting for right and justice without fear or favor. The results were also shown in the marked decrease of crime, which judges pointed out from the bench. Then, too, it was to be observed that a New York police commissioner suddenly attracted the attention of the country. The work which was being done by Roosevelt in New York, his midnight walks through the worst quarters of the great city to see whether the guardians of the peace did their duty, which made the newspapers compare him to Haroun Al Raschid, all appealed to the popular imagination. A purely local office became national in his hands, and his picture appeared in the shops of European cities. There was something more than vigor and picturesqueness necessary to explain these phenomena. The truth is that Roosevelt was really laboring through a welter of details to carry out certain general principles which went to the very roots of society and government. He wished the municipal administration to be something far greater than a business man's administration, which was the demand that had triumphed at the polls. He wanted to make it an administration of the workingmen, of the dwellers in the tenements, of the poverty and suffering which haunted the back streets and hidden purlieus of the huge city. The people did not formulate these purposes as they watched what he was doing, but they felt them and understood them by that instinct which is often so keen in vast bodies of men. The man who was toiling in the seeming obscurity of the New York police commission again became very distinct to his fellow countrymen and deepened their consciousness of his existence and their comprehension of his purposes and aspirations.

Striking as was the effect of this police work, it only lasted for two years. In 1897 he was offered by President McKinley, whom he had energetically supported in the preceding campaign, the position of Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He accepted at once, for the place and the work both appealed to him most strongly. The opportunity did not come without resistance. The President, an old friend, liked him and believed in him, but the Secretary of the Navy had doubts, and also fears that Roosevelt might be a disturbing and restless assistant. There were many politicians, too, especially in his own State, whom his activities as civil service and police commissioner did not delight, and these men opposed him. But his friends were powerful and devoted, and the President appointed him.

His new place had to him a peculiar attraction. He loved the Navy. He had written its brilliant history in the War of 1812. He had done all in his power in stimulating public opinion to support the "new Navy" we were just then beginning to build. That war was coming with Spain he had no doubt. We were unprepared, of course, even for such a war as this, but Roosevelt set himself to do what could be done. The best and most far-seeing officers rallied round him, but the opportunities were limited. There was much in detail accomplished which can not be described here, but two acts of his which had very distinct effect upon the fortunes of the war must be noted. He saw very plainly—although most people never perceived it at all—that the Philippines would be a vital point in any war with Spain. For this reason it was highly important to have the right man in command of the Asiatic Squadron. Roosevelt was satisfied that Dewey was the right man, and that his rival was not. He set to work to secure the place for Dewey. Through the aid of the Senators from Dewey's native State and others, he succeeded. Dewey was ordered to the Asiatic Squadron. Our relations with Spain grew worse and worse. On February 25, 1898, war was drawing very near, and that Saturday afternoon Roosevelt happened to be Acting Secretary, and sent out the following cablegram:

Dewey—Hongkong.

Order the squadron, except the Monocacy, to Hongkong. Keep full of coal. In the event of declaration of war, Spain, your duty will be to see that the Spanish squadron does not leave the Asiatic coast, and then offensive operations in the Philippine Islands. Keep Olympia until further orders.

ROOSEVELT.

I believe he was never again permitted to be Acting Secretary. But the deed was done. The wise word of readiness had been spoken and was not recalled. War came, and as April closed, Dewey, all prepared, slipped out of Hongkong and on May 1 fought the battle of Manila Bay.

Roosevelt, however, did not continue long in the Navy Department. Many of his friends felt that he was doing such admirable work there that he ought to remain, but as soon as war was declared he determined to go, and his resolution was not to be shaken. Nothing could prevent his fighting for his country when the country was at war. Congress had authorized three volunteer regiments of Cavalry, and the President and the Secretary of War gave to Leonard Wood—then a surgeon in the Regular Army—as colonel, and to Theodore Roosevelt, as lieutenant colonel, authority to raise one of these regiments, known officially as the First United States Volunteer Cavalry and to all the country as the "Rough Riders." The regiment was raised chiefly in the Southwest and West, where Roosevelt's popularity and reputation among the cowboys and the ranchmen brought many eager recruits to serve with him. After the regiment had been organized and equipped they had some difficulty in getting to Cuba, but Roosevelt as usual broke through all obstacles, and finally succeeded, with Col. Wood, in getting away with two battalions, leaving one battalion and the horses behind.

The regiment got into action immediately on landing and forced its way, after some sharp fighting in the jungle, to the high ground on which were placed the fortifications which defended the approach to Santiago. Colonel Wood was almost immediately given command of a brigade, and this left Roosevelt colonel of the regiment. In the battle which ensued and which resulted in the capture of the positions commanding Santiago and the bay, the Rough Riders took a leading part, storming one of the San Juan heights, which they christened Kettle Hill, with Roosevelt leading the men in person. It was a dashing, gallant assault, well led and thoroughly successful. Santiago fell after the defeat of the fleet, and then followed a period of sickness and suffering—the latter due to unreadiness—where Roosevelt did everything with his usual driving energy to save his men, whose loyalty to their colonel went with them through life. The war was soon over, but brief as it had been Roosevelt and his men had highly distinguished themselves, and he stood out in the popular imagination as one of the conspicuous figures of the conflict. He brought his regiment back to the United States, where they were mustered out, and almost immediately afterwards he was nominated by the Republicans as their candidate for governor of the State of New York. The situation in New York was unfavorable for the Republicans, and the younger men told Senator Platt, who dominated the organization and who had no desire for Roosevelt, that unless he was nominated they could not win. Thus forced, the organization accepted him, and it was well for the party that they did so. The campaign was a sharp one and very doubtful, but Roosevelt was elected by a narrow margin and assumed office at the beginning of the new year of 1899. He was then in his forty-first year.

Many problems faced him and none were evaded. He was well aware that the "organization" under Senator Platt would not like many things he was sure to do, but he determined that he would have neither personal quarrels nor faction fights. He knew, being blessed with strong common sense, that the Republican Party, his own party, was the instrument by which alone he could attain his ends, and he did not intend that it should be blunted and made useless by internal strife. And yet he meant to have his own way. It was a difficult rôle which he undertook to play, but he succeeded. He had many differences with the organization managers, but he declined to lose his temper or to have a break, and he also refused to yield when he felt he was standing for the right and a principle was at stake. Thus he prevailed. He won on the canal question, changed the insurance commissioner, and carried the insurance legislation he desired. As in these cases so it was in lesser things. In the police commission he had been strongly impressed by the dangers as he saw them of the undue and often sinister influence of business, finance, and great money interests upon government and politics. These feelings were deepened and broadened by his experience and observation on the larger stage of State administration. The belief that political equality must be strengthened and sustained by industrial equality and a larger economic opportunity was constantly in his thoughts until it became a governing and guiding principle.

Meantime he grew steadily stronger among the people, not only of his own State but of the country, for he was well known throughout the West, and there they were watching eagerly to see how the ranchman and Colonel of Rough Riders, who had touched both their hearts and their imagination, was faring as governor of New York. The office he held is always regarded as related to the Presidency, and this, joined to his striking success as governor, brought him into the Presidential field wherever men speculated about the political future. It was universally agreed that McKinley was to be renominated, and so the talk turned to making Roosevelt Vice President. A friend wrote to him in the summer of 1899 as to this drift of opinion, then assuming serious proportions. "Do not attempt," he said, "to thwart the popular desire. You are not a man nor are your close friends men who can plan, arrange, and manage you into office. You must accept the popular wish, whatever it is, follow your star, and let the future care for itself. It is the tradition of our politics, and a very poor tradition, that the Vice Presidency is a shelf. It ought to be, and there is no reason why it should not be, a stepping-stone. Put there by the popular desire, it would be so to you." This view quite naturally did not commend itself to Governor Roosevelt at the moment. He was doing valuable work in New York; he was deeply engaged in important reforms which he had much at heart and which he wished to carry through; and the Vice Presidency did not attract him. A year later he was at Philadelphia, a delegate at large from his State, with his mind unchanged as to the Vice Presidency, while his New York friends, anxious to have him continue his work at Albany, were urging him to refuse. Senator Platt, for obvious reasons, wished to make him Vice President, another obstacle to his taking it. Roosevelt forced the New York delegation to agree on some one else for Vice President, but he could not hold the convention nor could Senator Hanna, who wisely accepted the situation. Governor Roosevelt was nominated on the first ballot, all other candidates withdrawing. He accepted the nomination, little as he liked it.

Thus when it came to the point he instinctively followed his star and grasped the unvacillating hand of destiny. Little did he think that destiny would lead him to the White House through a tragedy which cut him to the heart. He was on a mountain in the Adirondacks when a guide made his way to him across the forest with a telegram telling him that McKinley, the wise, the kind, the gentle, with nothing in his heart but good will to all men, was dying from a wound inflicted by an anarchist murderer, and that the Vice President must come to Buffalo at once. A rapid night drive through the woods and a special train brought him to Buffalo. McKinley was dead before he arrived, and that evening Governor Roosevelt was sworn in as President of the United States.

Within the narrow limits of an address it is impossible to give an account of an administration of seven years which will occupy hundreds of pages when the history of the United States during that period is written. It was a memorable administration, memorable in itself and not by the accident of events, and large in its accomplishment. It began with a surprise. There were persons in the United States who had carefully cultivated, and many people who had accepted without thought, the idea that Roosevelt was in some way a dangerous man. They gloomily predicted that there would be a violent change in the policies and in the officers of the McKinley administration. But Roosevelt had not studied the history of his country in vain. He knew that in three of the four cases where Vice Presidents had succeeded to the Presidency through the death of the elected President their coming had resulted in a violent shifting of policies and men, and, as a consequence, in most injurious dissensions, which in two cases at least proved fatal to the party in power. In all four instances the final obliteration of the Vice President who had come into power through the death of his chief was complete. President Roosevelt did not intend to permit any of these results. As soon as he came into office he announced that he intended to retain President McKinley's Cabinet and to carry out his policies, which had been sustained at the polls. To those overzealous friends who suggested that he could not trust the appointees of President McKinley and that he would be but a pallid imitation of his predecessor he replied that he thought, in any event, the administration would be his, and that if new occasions required new policies he felt that he could meet them, and that no one would suspect him of being a pallid imitation of anybody. His decision, however, gratified and satisfied the country, and it was not apparent that Roosevelt was hampered in any way in carrying out his own policies by this wise refusal to make sudden and violent changes.

Those who were alarmed about what he might do had also suggested that with his combative propensities he was likely to involve the country in war. Yet there never has been an administration, as afterwards appeared, when we were more perfectly at peace with all the world, nor were our foreign relations ever in danger of producing hostilities. But this was not due in the least to the adoption of a timid or yielding foreign policy; on the contrary, it was owing to the firmness of the President in all foreign questions and the knowledge which other nations soon acquired that President Roosevelt was a man who never threatened unless he meant to carry out his threat, the result being that he was not obliged to threaten at all. One of his earliest successes was forcing the settlement of the Alaskan boundary question, which was the single open question with Great Britain that was really dangerous and contained within itself possibilities of war. The accomplishment of this settlement was followed later, while Mr. Root was Secretary of State, by the arrangement of all our outstanding differences with Canada, and during Mr. Root's tenure of office over thirty treaties were made with different nations, including a number of practical and valuable treaties of arbitration. When Germany started to take advantage of the difficulties in Venezuela the affair culminated in the dispatch of Dewey and the fleet to the Caribbean, the withdrawal of England at once, and the agreement of Germany to the reference of all subjects of difference to arbitration. It was President Roosevelt whose good offices brought Russia and Japan together in a negotiation which closed the war between those two powers. It was Roosevelt's influence which contributed powerfully to settling the threatening controversy between Germany, France, and England in regard to Morocco, by the Algeciras conference. It was Roosevelt who sent the American fleet of battleships round the world, one of the most convincing peace movements ever made on behalf of the United States. Thus it came about that this President, dreaded at the beginning on account of his combative spirit, received the Nobel prize in 1906 as the person who had contributed most to the peace of the world in the preceding years, and his contribution was the result of strength and knowledge and not of weakness.

At home he recommended to Congress legislation which was directed toward a larger control of the railroads and to removing the privileges and curbing the power of great business combinations obtained through rebates and preferential freight rates. This legislation led to opposition in Congress and to much resistance by those affected. As we look back, this legislation, so much contested at the time, seems very moderate, but it was none the less momentous. President Roosevelt never believed in Government ownership, but he was thoroughly in favor of strong and effective Government supervision and regulation of what are now known generally as public utilities. He had a deep conviction that the political influence of financial and business interests and of great combinations of capital had become so great that the American people were beginning to distrust their own Government, than which there could be no greater peril to the Republic. By his measures and by his general attitude toward capital and labor both he sought to restore and maintain the confidence of the people in the Government they had themselves created.

In the Panama Canal he left the most enduring, as it was the most visible, monument of his administration. Much criticized at the moment for his action in regard to it, which time since then has justified and which history will praise, the great fact remains that the canal is there. He said himself that he made up his mind that it was his duty to establish the canal and have the debate about it afterwards, which seemed to him better than to begin with indefinite debate and have no canal at all. This is a view which posterity both at home and abroad will accept and approve.

These, passing over as we must in silence many other beneficent acts, are only a few of the most salient features of his administration, stripped of all detail and all enlargement. Despite the conflicts which some of his domestic policies had produced not only with his political opponents but within the Republican ranks, he was overwhelmingly reelected in 1904, and when the seven years had closed the country gave a like majority to his chosen successor, taken from his own Cabinet. On the 4th of March, 1909, he returned to private life at the age of fifty, having been the youngest President known to our history.

During the brief vacations which he had been able to secure in the midst of the intense activities of his public life after the Spanish War he had turned for enjoyment to expeditions in pursuit of big game in the wildest and most unsettled regions of the country. Open-air life and all its accompaniments of riding and hunting were to him the one thing that brought him the most rest and relaxation. Now, having left the Presidency, he was able to give full scope to the love of adventure, which had been strong with him from boyhood. Soon after his retirement from office he went to Africa, accompanied by a scientific expedition sent out by the Smithsonian Institution. He landed in East Africa, made his way into the interior, and thence to the sources of the Nile, after a trip in every way successful both in exploration and in the pursuit of big game. He then came down the Nile through Egypt and thence to Europe, and no private citizen of the United States—probably no private man of any country—was ever received in a manner comparable to that which met Roosevelt in every country in Europe which he visited. Everywhere it was the same—in Italy, in Germany, in France, in England. Every honor was paid to him that authority could devise, accompanied by every mark of affection and admiration which the people of those countries were able to show. He made few speeches while in Europe, but in those few he did not fail to give to the questions and thought of the time real and genuine contributions, set forth in plain language, always vigorous and often eloquent. He returned in the summer of 1910 to the United States and was greeted with a reception on his landing in New York quite equaling in interest and enthusiasm that which had been given to him in Europe.

For two years afterwards he devoted himself to writing, not only articles as contributing editor of the Outlook, but books of his own and addresses and speeches which he was constantly called upon to make. No man in private life probably ever had such an audience as he addressed, whether with tongue or pen, upon the questions of the day, with a constant refrain as to the qualities necessary to make men both good citizens and good Americans. In the spring of 1912 he decided to become a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency, and a very heated struggle followed between himself and President Taft for delegations to the convention. The convention when it assembled in Chicago was the stormiest ever known in our history. President Taft was renominated, most of the Roosevelt delegates refusing to vote, and a large body of Republicans thereupon formed a new party called the "Progressive" and nominated Mr. Roosevelt as their candidate. This division into two nearly equal parts of the Republican Party, which had elected Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft in succession by the largest majorities ever known, made the victory of the Democratic candidate absolutely certain. Colonel Roosevelt, however, stood second in the poll, receiving 4,119,507 votes, carrying 6 States and winning eighty-eight electoral votes. There never has been in political history, when all conditions are considered, such an exhibition of extraordinary personal strength. To have secured eighty-eight electoral votes when his own party was hopelessly divided, with no great historic party name and tradition behind him, with an organization which had to be hastily brought together in a few weeks, seems almost incredible, and in all his career there is no display of the strength of his hold upon the people equal to this.

In the following year he yielded again to the longing for adventure and exploration. Going to South America, he made his way up through Paraguay and western Brazil, and then across a trackless wilderness of jungle and down an unknown river into the Valley of the Amazon. It was a remarkable expedition and carried him through what is probably the most deadly climate in the world. He suffered severely from the fever, the poison of which never left him and which finally shortened his life.

In the next year the great war began, and Col. Roosevelt threw himself into it with all the energy of his nature. With Major Gardner he led the great fight for preparedness in a country utterly unprepared. He saw very plainly that in all human probability it would be impossible for us to keep out of the war. Therefore in season and out of season he demanded that we should make ready. He and Major Gardner, with the others who joined them, roused a widespread and powerful sentiment in the country, but there was no practical effect on the Army. The Navy was the single place where anything was really done, and that only in the bill of 1916, so that war finally came upon us as unready as Roosevelt had feared we should be. Yet the campaign he made was not in vain, for in addition to the question of preparation he spoke earnestly of other things, other burning questions, and he always spoke to an enormous body of listeners everywhere. He would have had us protest and take action at the very beginning, in 1914, when Belgium was invaded. He would have had us go to war when the murders of the Lusitania were perpetrated. He tried to stir the soul and rouse the spirit of the American people, and despite every obstacle he did awaken them, so that when the hour came, in April, 1917, a large proportion of the American people were even then ready in spirit and in hope. How telling his work had been was proved by the confession of his country's enemies, for when he died the only discordant note, the only harsh words, came from the German press. Germany knew whose voice it was that more powerfully than any other had called Americans to the battle in behalf of freedom and civilization, where the advent of the armies of the United States gave victory to the cause of justice and righteousness.

When the United States went to war Colonel Roosevelt's one desire was to be allowed to go to the fighting line. There if fate had laid its hand upon him it would have found him glad to fall in the trenches or in a charge at the head of his men, but it was not permitted to him to go, and thus he was denied the reward which he would have ranked above all others, "the great prize of death in battle." But he was a patriot in every fiber of his being, and personal disappointment in no manner slackened or cooled his zeal. Everything that he could do to forward the war, to quicken preparation, to stimulate patriotism, to urge on efficient action, was done. Day and night, in season and out of season, he never ceased his labors. Although prevented from going to France himself, he gave to the great conflict that which was far dearer to him than his own life. I can not say that he sent his four sons, because they all went at once, as everyone knew that their father's sons would go. Two have been badly wounded; one was killed. He met the blow with the most splendid and unflinching courage, met it as Siward, the Earl of Northumberland, receives in the play the news of his son's death:

Siw. Had he his hurts before?
Ross. Ay, on the front.
Siw. Why then, God's soldier be he!
Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so, his knell is knoll'd.

Among the great tragedies of Shakespeare, and there are none greater in all the literature of man, Macbeth was Colonel Roosevelt's favorite, and the moving words which I have just quoted I am sure were in his heart and on his lips when he faced with stern resolve and self-control the anguish brought to him by the death of his youngest boy, killed in the glory of a brave and brilliant youth.

He lived to see the right prevail; he lived to see civilization triumph over organized barbarism; and there was great joy in his heart. In all his last days the thoughts which filled his mind were to secure a peace which should render Germany forever harmless and advance the cause of ordered freedom in every land and among every race. This occupied him to the exclusion of everything else, except what he called and what we like to call Americanism. There was no hour down to the end when he would not turn aside from everything else to preach the doctrine of Americanism, of the principles and the faith upon which American government rested, and which all true Americans should wear in their heart of hearts. He was a great patriot, a great man; above all, a great American. His country was the ruling, mastering passion of his life from the beginning even unto the end.

So closes the inadequate, most incomplete account of a life full of work done and crowded with achievement, brief in years and prematurely ended. The recitation of the offices which he held and of some of the deeds that he did is but a bare, imperfect catalogue into which history when we are gone will breathe a lasting life. Here to-day it is only a background, and that which most concerns us now is what the man was of whose deeds done it is possible to make such a list. What a man was is ever more important than what he did, because it is upon what he was that all his achievement depends and his value and meaning to his fellow men must finally rest.

Theodore Roosevelt always believed that character was of greater worth and moment than anything else. He possessed abilities of the first order, which he was disposed to underrate because he set so much greater store upon the moral qualities which we bring together under the single word "character."

Let me speak first of his abilities. He had a powerful, well-trained, ever-active mind. He thought clearly, independently, and with originality and imagination. These priceless gifts were sustained by an extraordinary power of acquisition, joined to a greater quickness of apprehension, a greater swiftness in seizing upon the essence of a question, than I have ever happened to see in any other man. His reading began with natural history, then went to general history, and thence to the whole field of literature. He had a capacity for concentration which enabled him to read with remarkable rapidity anything which he took up, if only for a moment, and which separated him for the time being from everything going on about him. The subjects upon which he was well and widely informed would, if enumerated, fill a large space, and to this power of acquisition was united not only a tenacious but an extraordinarily accurate memory. It was never safe to contest with him on any question of fact or figures, whether they related to the ancient Assyrians or to the present-day conditions of the tribes of central Africa, to the Syracusan Expedition, as told by Thucydides, or to protective coloring in birds and animals. He knew and held details always at command, but he was not mastered by them. He never failed to see the forest on account of the trees or the city on account of the houses.

He made himself a writer, not only of occasional addresses and essays, but of books. He had the trained thoroughness of the historian, as he showed in his history of the War of 1812 and of the "Winning of the West," and nature had endowed him with that most enviable of gifts, the faculty of narrative and the art of the teller of tales. He knew how to weigh evidence in the historical scales and how to depict character. He learned to write with great ease and fluency. He was always vigorous, always energetic, always clear and forcible in everything he wrote—nobody could ever misunderstand him—and when he allowed himself time and his feelings were deeply engaged he gave to the world many pages of beauty as well as power, not only in thought but in form and style. At the same time he made himself a public speaker, and here again, through a practice probably unequaled in amount, he became one of the most effective in all our history. In speaking, as in writing, he was always full of force and energy; he drove home his arguments and never was misunderstood. In many of his more carefully prepared addresses are to be found passages of impressive eloquence, touched with imagination and instinct with grace and feeling.

He had a large capacity for administration, clearness of vision, promptness in decision, and a thorough apprehension of what constituted efficient organization. All the vast and varied work which he accomplished could not have been done unless he had had most exceptional natural abilities, but behind them was the driving force of an intense energy and the ever-present belief that a man could do what he willed to do. As he made himself an athlete, a horseman, a good shot, a bold explorer, so he made himself an exceptionally successful writer and speaker. Only a most abnormal energy would have enabled him to enter and conquer in so many fields of intellectual achievement. But something more than energy and determination is needed for the largest success, especially in the world's high places. The first requisite of leadership is ability to lead, and that ability Theodore Roosevelt possessed in full measure. Whether in a game or in the hunting field, in a fight or in politics, he sought the front, where, as Webster once remarked, there is always plenty of room for those who can get there. His instinct was always to say "come" rather than "go," and he had the talent of command.

His also was the rare gift of arresting attention sharply and suddenly, a very precious attribute, and one easier to illustrate than to describe. This arresting power is like a common experience which we have all had on entering a picture gallery, of seeing at once and before all others a single picture among the many on the walls. For a moment you see nothing else, although you may be surrounded with masterpieces. In that particular picture lurks a strange, capturing, gripping fascination as impalpable as it is unmistakable. Roosevelt had this same arresting, fascinating quality. Whether in the legislature at Albany, the Civil Service Commission at Washington, or the police commission in New York, whether in the Spanish War or on the plains among the cowboys, he was always vivid, at times startling, never to be overlooked. Nor did this power stop here. He not only without effort or intention drew the eager attention of the people to himself, he could also engage and fix their thoughts upon anything which happened to interest him. It might be a man or a book, reformed spelling or some large historical question, his traveling library or the military preparation of the United States, he had but to say, "See how interesting, how important, is this man or this event," and thousands, even millions, of people would reply, "We never thought of this before, but it certainly is one of the most interesting, most absorbing things in the world." He touched a subject and it suddenly began to glow as when the high-power electric current touches the metal and the white light starts forth and dazzles the onlooking eyes. We know the air played by the Pied Piper of Hamelin no better than we know why Theodore Roosevelt thus drew the interest of men after him. We only know they followed wherever his insatiable activity of mind invited them.

Men follow also most readily a leader who is always there before them, clearly visible and just where they expect him. They are especially eager to go forward with a man who never sounds a retreat. Roosevelt was always advancing, always struggling to make things better, to carry some much-needed reform, and help humanity to a larger chance, to a fairer condition, to a happier life. Moreover, he looked always for an ethical question. He was at his best when he was fighting the battle of right against wrong. He thought soundly and wisely upon questions of expediency or of political economy, but they did not rouse him or bring him the absorbed interest of the eternal conflict between good and evil. Yet he was never impractical, never blinded by counsels of perfection, never seeking to make the better the enemy of the good. He wished to get the best, but he would strive for all that was possible even if it fell short of the highest at which he aimed. He studied the lessons of history and did not think the past bad simply because it was the past, or the new good solely because it was new. He sought to try all questions on their intrinsic merits, and that was why he succeeded in advancing, in making government and society better where others, who would be content with nothing less than an abstract perfection, failed. He would never compromise a principle, but he was eminently tolerant of honest differences of opinion. He never hesitated to give generous credit where credit seemed due, whether to friend or opponent, and in this way he gathered recruits and yet never lost adherents.

The criticism most commonly made upon Theodore Roosevelt was that he was impulsive and impetuous, that he acted without thinking. He would have been the last to claim infallibility. His head did not turn when fame came to him and choruses of admiration sounded in his ears, for he was neither vain nor credulous. He knew that he made mistakes, and never hesitated to admit them to be mistakes and to correct them or put them behind him when satisfied that they were such. But he wasted no time in mourning, explaining, or vainly regretting them. It is also true that the middle way did not attract him. He was apt to go far, both in praise and censure, although nobody could analyze qualities and balance them justly in judging men better than he. He felt strongly, and as he had no concealments of any kind he expressed himself in like manner. But vehemence is not violence nor is earnestness anger, which a very wise man defined as a brief madness. It was all according to his nature, just as his eager cordiality in meeting men and women, his keen interest in other people's cares or joys, was not assumed, as some persons thought who did not know him. It was all profoundly natural, it was all real, and in that way and in no other was he able to meet and greet his fellow men. He spoke out with the most unrestrained frankness at all times and in all companies. Not a day passed in the Presidency when he was not guilty of what the trained diplomatist would call indiscretions. But the frankness had its own reward. There never was a President whose confidence was so respected or with whom the barriers of honor which surround private conversation were more scrupulously observed. At the same time, when the public interest required, no man could be more wisely reticent. He was apt, it is true, to act suddenly and decisively, but it was a complete mistake to suppose that he therefore acted without thought or merely on a momentary impulse. When he had made up his mind he was resolute and unchanging, but he made up his mind only after much reflection, and there never was a President in the White House who consulted not only friends but political opponents and men of all kinds and conditions more than Theodore Roosevelt. When he had reached his conclusion he acted quickly and drove hard at his object, and this it was, probably, which gave an impression that he acted sometimes hastily and thoughtlessly, which was a complete misapprehension of the man. His action was emphatic, but emphasis implies reflection, not thoughtlessness. One can not even emphasize a word without a process, however slight, of mental differentiation.

The feeling that he was impetuous and impulsive was also due to the fact that in a sudden, seemingly unexpected crisis he would act with great rapidity. This happened when he had been for weeks, perhaps for months, considering what he should do if such a crisis arose. He always believed that one of the most important elements of success, whether in public or in private life, was to know what one meant to do under given circumstances. If he saw the possibility of perilous questions arising, it was his practice to think over carefully just how he would act under certain contingencies. Many of the contingencies never arose. Now and then a contingency became an actuality, and then he was ready. He knew what he meant to do, he acted at once, and some critics considered him impetuous, impulsive, and, therefore, dangerous, because they did not know that he had thought the question all out beforehand. Very many people, powerful elements in the community, regarded him at one time as a dangerous radical, bent upon overthrowing all the safeguards of society and planning to tear out the foundations of an ordered liberty. As a matter of fact, what Theodore Roosevelt was trying to do was to strengthen American society and American government by demonstrating to the American people that he was aiming at a larger economic equality and a more generous industrial opportunity for all men, and that any combination of capital or of business which threatened the control of the Government by the people who made it was to be curbed and resisted, just as he would have resisted an enemy who tried to take possession of the city of Washington. He had no hostility to a man because he had been successful in business or because he had accumulated a fortune. If the man had been honestly successful and used his fortune wisely and beneficently, he was regarded by Theodore Roosevelt as a good citizen. The vulgar hatred of wealth found no place in his heart. He had but one standard, one test, and that was whether a man, rich or poor, was an honest man, a good citizen, and a good American. He tried men, whether they were men of "big business" or members of a labor union, by their deeds and in no other way. The tyranny of anarchy and disorder, such as is now desolating Russia, was as hateful to him as any other tyranny, whether it came from an autocratic system like that of Germany or from the misuse of organized capital. Personally he believed in every man earning his own living, and he earned money and was glad to do so, but he had no desire or taste for making money, and he was entirely indifferent to it. The simplest of men in his own habits, the only thing he really would have liked to have done with ample wealth would have been to give freely to the many good objects which continually interested him.

Theodore Roosevelt's power, however, and the main source of all his achievement, was not in the offices which he held, for those offices were to him only opportunities, but in the extraordinary hold which he established and retained over great bodies of men. He had the largest personal following ever attained by any man in our history. I do not mean by this the following which comes from great political office or from party candidacy. There have been many men who have held the highest offices in our history by the votes of their fellow countrymen who have never had anything more than a very small personal following. By personal following is meant here that which supports and sustains and goes with a man simply because he is himself; a following which does not care whether their leader and chief is in office or out of office, which is with him and behind him because they, one and all, believe in him and love him and are ready to stand by him for the sole and simple reason that they have perfect faith that he will lead them where they wish and where they ought to go. This following Theodore Roosevelt had, as I have said, in a larger degree than anyone in our history, and the fact that he had it and what he did with it for the welfare of his fellow men have given him his great place and his lasting fame.

This is not mere assertion; it was demonstrated, as I have already pointed out, by the vote of 1912, and at all times, from the day of his accession to the Presidency onward there were millions of people in this country ready to follow Theodore Roosevelt and vote for him, or do anything else that he wanted, whenever he demanded their support or raised his standard. It was this great mass of support among the people, and which probably was never larger than in these last years, that gave him his immense influence upon public opinion, and public opinion was the weapon which he used to carry out all the policies which he wished to bring to fulfillment and to consolidate all the achievements upon which he had set his heart. This extraordinary popular strength was not given to him solely because the people knew him to be honest and brave, because they were certain that physical fear was an emotion unknown to him, and that his moral courage equaled the physical. It was not merely because they thoroughly believed him to be sincere. All this knowledge and belief, of course, went to making his popular leadership secure; but there was much more in it than that, something that went deeper, basic elements which were not upon the surface, which were due to qualities of temperament interwoven with his very being, inseparable from him and yet subtle rather than obvious in their effects.

All men admire courage, and that he possessed in the highest degree. But he had also something larger and rarer than courage, in the ordinary acceptation of the word. When an assassin shot him at Chicago he was severely wounded; how severely he could not tell, but it might well have been mortal. He went on to the great meeting awaiting him, and there, bleeding, suffering, ignorant of his fate, but still unconquered, made his speech and went from the stage to the hospital. What bore him up was the dauntless spirit which could rise victorious over pain and darkness and the unknown and meet the duty of the hour as if all were well. A spirit like this awakens in all men more than admiration—it kindles affection and appeals to every generous impulse.

Very different, but equally compelling, was another quality. There is nothing in human beings at once so sane and so sympathetic as a sense of humor. This great gift the good fairies conferred upon Theodore Roosevelt at his birth in unstinted measure. No man ever had a more abundant sense of humor—joyous, irrepressible humor—and it never deserted him. Even at the most serious and even perilous moments if there was a gleam of humor anywhere he saw it and rejoiced and helped himself with it over the rough places and in the dark hour. He loved fun, loved to joke and chaff, and, what is more uncommon, greatly enjoyed being chaffed himself. His ready smile and contagious laugh made countless friends and saved him from many an enmity. Even more generally effective than his humor, and yet allied to it, was the universal knowledge that Roosevelt had no secrets from the American people.

Yet another quality—perhaps the most engaging of all—was his homely, generous humanity, which enabled him to speak directly to the primitive instincts of man.

He dwelt with the tribes of the marsh and moor,
  He sate at the board of kings;
He tasted the toil of the burdened slave
  And the joy that triumph brings.
But whether to jungle or palace hall
  Or white-walled tent he came,
He was brother to king and soldier and slave,
  His welcome was the same.

He was very human and intensely American, and this knit a bond between him and the American people which nothing could ever break. And then he had yet one more attraction, not so impressive, perhaps, as the others, but none the less very important and very captivating. He never by any chance bored the American people. They might laugh at him or laugh with him, they might like what he said or dislike it, they might agree with him or disagree with him, but they were never wearied of him and he never failed to interest them. He was never heavy, laborious, or dull. If he had made any effort to be always interesting and entertaining he would have failed and been tiresome. He was unfailingly attractive because he was always perfectly natural and his own unconscious self. And so all these things combined to give him his hold upon the American people, not only upon their minds but upon their hearts and their instincts, which nothing could ever weaken and which made him one of the most remarkable, as he was one of the strongest, characters that the history of popular government can show. He was also—and this is very revealing and explanatory, too, of his vast popularity—a man of ideals. He did not expose them daily on the roadside with language fluttering about them like the Thibetan who ties his slip of paper to the prayer wheel whirling in the wind. He kept his ideals to himself until the hour of fulfillment arrived. Some of them were the dreams of boyhood from which he never departed and which I have seen him carry out shyly and yet thoroughly and with intense personal satisfaction.

He had a touch of the knight errant in his daily life, although he would never have admitted it; but it was there. It was not visible in the medieval form of shining armor and dazzling tournaments but in the never-ceasing effort to help the poor and the oppressed, to defend and protect women and children, to right the wronged and succor the downtrodden. Passing by on the other side was not a mode of travel through life ever possible to him; and yet he was as far distant from the professional philanthropist as could well be imagined, for all he tried to do to help his fellow men he regarded as part of the day's work to be done and not talked about. No man ever prized sentiment or hated sentimentality more than he. He preached unceasingly the familiar morals which lie at the bottom of both family and public life. The blood of some ancestral Scotch covenanter or of some Dutch reformed preacher facing the tyranny of Philip of Spain was in his veins, and with his large opportunities and his vast audiences he was always ready to appeal for justice and righteousness. But his own particular ideals he never attempted to thrust upon the world until the day came when they were to be translated into realities of action.

When the future historian traces Theodore Roosevelt's extraordinary career he will find these embodied ideals planted like milestones along the road over which he marched. They never left him. His ideal of public service was to be found in his life, and as his life drew to its close he had to meet his ideal of sacrifice face to face. All his sons went from him to the war and one was killed upon the field of honor. Of all the ideals that lift men up, the hardest to fulfill is the ideal of sacrifice. Theodore Roosevelt met it as he had all others and fulfilled it to the last jot of its terrible demands. His country asked the sacrifice and he gave it with solemn pride and uncomplaining lips.

This is not the place to speak of his private life, but within that sacred circle no man was ever more blessed in the utter devotion of a noble wife and the passionate love of his children. The absolute purity and beauty of his family life tell us why the pride and interest which his fellow countrymen felt in him were always touched with the warm light of love. In the home so dear to him, in his sleep, death came, and—

So Valiant-for-Truth passed over and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side.

BENEDICTION.

Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, pronounced the following benediction:

And now may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with you all evermore. Amen.

ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The purpose for which this joint session of the Congress of the United States this day assembled having been satisfactorily concluded, it is now adjourned.

Whereupon (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 10, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 10, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast given to us our place in the world and called us to places of responsibility at a time when the world is seeking the paths of peace and the nations are conferring with each other about the way for the establishment of justice and right among all men. We pray that we may all turn back to the ancient statutes of the Lord and may find that upon building on these we may build with security and with hope and with confidence the temple of human justice and right. Grant us willing hearts to respond to the divine command and active lives to express our consecration to the divine will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, February 7, 1919, when, on request of Mr. SHEPPARD and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1847. An act to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest;

H. R. 1607. An act for the relief of David E. Gray;

H. R. 12996. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 12997. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 13232. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, between Traill County, N. Dak., and Polk County, Minn.;

H. R. 13273. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto approved October 6, 1917; and

H. R. 13353. An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies.

SENATOR FROM NEBRASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following credentials of election of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which will be read and placed on the files.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, GEORGE W. NORRIS was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Nebraska a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

Witness: His excellency, our governor, S. R. McKelvie, and our seal hereto affixed at Lincoln, Nebr., this 23d days of January, A. D. 1919.

SAMUEL R. MCKELVIE, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

D. M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State.

SENATOR FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] and ask that they may be read and placed on the file.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, JOE T. ROBINSON was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Arkansas a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

Witness: His excellency, our governor, Charles H. Brough, and our seal hereto affixed at Little Rock, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1919.

CHARLES H. BROUGH, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

TOM J. TERRAL,
Secretary of State.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I purpose asking unanimous consent to call up House joint resolution 200, and preliminary to that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. Has morning business been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; nothing has been done.

Mr. BORAH. Does that dispense with——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Baird	Henderson	Moses	Smoot
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Nelson	Spencer
Beckham	Hollis	New	Sterling
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Sutherland
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Swanson
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Thomas
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Page	Thompson
Culberson	Kellogg	Penrose	Townsend
Cummins	Kenyon	Pittman	Trammell
Curtis	King	Poindexter	Underwood
Dillingham	Kirby	Pollock	Vardaman
Fernald	La Follette	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lenroot	Ransdell	Walsh
France	Lewis	Robinson	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Saulsbury	Watson
Gay	McCumber	Shafroth	Williams
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	McLean	Sherman
Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Mich.

Mr. MCNARY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

Mr. LENROOT. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is absent on official business.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness.

Mr. BECKHAM. I desire to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is detained on official business.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is detained by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It has been suggested that it would be satisfactory to the Senate to dispense with the morning business and proceed at once to the consideration of House joint resolution 200. A week ago I gave notice that on to-day the joint resolution would be called up for consideration, and I will now ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. I will withhold the motion for a little while if any Senator has anything urgent to present.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection at all to the request the Senator is making, but there is a little morning business that I think we all wish to dispose of and would be glad to put in now—petitions and things of that sort.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I will withhold the request for a short time.

Mr. LODGE. I am much obliged to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have here a petition against what are known as the luxury taxes, signed by some 10,000 persons. They request to have stricken from the pending revenue bill the so-called luxury taxes, and give their reasons, which are very brief, and I shall ask to have the petition printed in the RECORD.

I merely wish to say that I am getting many letters on this subject, as well as these great petitions. I wish to state for the benefit of the petitioners that those taxes—so-called luxury taxes, most of them being on objects of prime necessity—were put in in the House while we were at war when it was necessary to raise $8,000,000 of revenue. After the armistice the committee of the Senate struck them out, and the House was anxious to have them stricken out, looking on them only as an extreme war tax. But the Senate in its wisdom saw fit to restore them, and by restoring them put them beyond the power of the conferees. It was impossible for the conferees to take them from the bill and nothing can be done further with that bill. It may be possible to pass a joint resolution later removing them, for they are excessive taxes which ought not to remain. I send the petition to the desk and ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS FROM MASSACHUSETTS:

The undersigned consumers respectfully request that you use your votes and influence to have stricken from the pending internal-revenue bill the so-called luxury taxes.

We request this action, because these taxes are discriminatory, will be an unjust and annoying burden to the consumer, will throw out of employment many workmen engaged in manufacturing the articles taxed at a time when it would appear to be necessary to prevent unemployment and because of the fact that the Government will derive a comparatively small revenue at an exceedingly heavy cost of collection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply rose to say that I have received similar petitions from nearly every institution in the State of Utah signed by the employees of all the dry-goods and grocery stores of that State. I am not going to present them to the Senate, because they are of a character similar to those already presented and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition adopted at a meeting of 1,000 citizens of Brookline, Mass., under the auspices of the Brookline Civic Forum, and a petition of sundry members of the National Academy of Sciences, praying for the creation of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Rotary Club of Lynn, Mass., praying for the return to private ownership of the telephone and telegraph lines, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from Local Union 1A, Telephone Operators' Union, of Boston, Mass., and a telegram in the nature of a petition from Local Union No. 142, Inside Telephone Men's Union, of Boston, Mass., praying that an investigation be made of the Federal administration of telephone and telegraph lines, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the petition of Henry H. Edes, W. M. Davis, and 136 other citizens of Massachusetts, members of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, of Boston, praying for action by the President and Congress with a view toward establishing a league of nations for the maintenance of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, it will be remembered that a few days ago we had before the Senate a bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency providing that the law be changed so that a national bank may loan more than 10 per cent upon its capital and surplus. I have received a great many telegrams on this subject, but I shall present only one, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD. It is from the North Dakota Bankers' Association. They favor the provision recommended by the board and the Comptroller of the Currency.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FARGO, N. DAK., February 8, 1919.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

North Dakota national banks very much in favor of bill increasing loaning capacity to 20 per cent of capital. Will greatly aid in development of industries.

NORTH DAKOTA BANKERS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GRONNA. I also present two telegrams, one from the chairman of the North Dakota Council of Defense, of Bismarck, N. Dak., and one from the chairman of the committee on agriculture of the General Assembly of Connecticut and the president of the Farmers' Association of Connecticut, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BISMARCK, N. DAK., February 4, 1919.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The woman's committee of the North Dakota Council of Defense finds the home demonstration agents invaluable in carrying out Government requests. Work just now well underway, and any decrease in fund available for this purpose will be fatal. Woman's committee urges you to do your utmost to defeat bill cutting appropriation.

Mrs. F. L. CONKLIN, Chairman.

HARTFORD, CONN, February 6, 1919.

Senator ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The farmers association of the Connecticut General Assembly is shocked at the news that the United States Congress is taking away nearly all of our appropriation for extension work in agriculture in our State, and we are appealing to your judgment and for your assistance in preserving this most useful and efficient instrument that assists us in feeding our people. Please help us in this crisis.

CLIFFORD E. HOUGH,
President Farmers Association.
Connecticut General Assembly of 1919.
WATSON WOODRUFF,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
Connecticut General Assembly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. My colleague and myself have received a telegram from the Michigan State Legislature in the form of a resolution which was adopted January 2 in behalf of woman's suffrage, practically ratifying the provision to be submitted to the people. This being, as I understand it, the first State to adopt such a resolution, I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

LANSING, MICH., February 8, 1919.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.:

Following is copy of resolution adopted by the Michigan Senate and House of Representatives in joint convention on January 2, 1919:

Whereas an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged in the United States or any State on account of sex" has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the Senate; and

Whereas during the war, in recognition of the value of woman's war service the Parliaments of Great Britain and Canada enfranchised the women of those countries, and those of France and Italy have virtually promised the same act of political justice; and

Whereas immediately after signing of armistice autocratic Germany and Hungary gave women the ballot; and

Whereas in our own country women vote on same terms as men in 15 States and have some voting rights in 20 others laboriously acquired during a struggle of 40 years; and

Whereas the electors of Michigan defeated woman suffrage five years ago by 96,000 votes, two months ago it carried by nearly 35,000 votes, an indication of the great change in sentiment throughout the State; and

Whereas the leaders of all political parties, major and minor, have demanded the passage of this amendment, and the national committee of the major political parties have earnestly indorsed it: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we the members of the Michigan State Legislature in joint session assembled, in recognition of the justice of women's demands and of their contribution to society in war and in peace, do hereby call upon the Senate of the United States to pass the woman suffrage amendment and give the States opportunity to ratify the same.

DENNIS E. ALWARD,
CHARLES E. PIERCE,
Secretaries of Joint Convention.

Mr. PITTMAN. I present a telegram from the governor of Nevada, transmitting resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Nevada urging the passage of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for woman suffrage, and requesting the Senators from that State to vote for it. I ask that the telegram may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CARSON, NEV., February 8, 1919.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
Hon. CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Assembly joint and concurrent resolution No. 2 was approved by me February 4, 1919, and is as follows:

"Whereas there is now pending before the Senate of the United States a resolution to submit to the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting the right of suffrage to women; and

"Whereas the President of the United States has urged the passage of such resolution not only as an act of justice to the women of America, but as a means to encourage the acceptance of democratic ideals throughout the civilized world; and

"Whereas the world war laid its burdens and sacrifices with even hand upon men and women alike and demanded and received from both the fullest measure of patriotism and devotion, in order that the great purposes for which the war was successfully fought might be permanently secured for the benefit of mankind; and

"Whereas in the period of readjustment and reconstruction upon which we have entered there will arise the most difficult and far-reaching moral, social, economic, industrial, and political problems that must of necessity affect the lives of all our people for generations to come and in the solution of which men and women must equally be concerned: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Senate of the United States be hereby requested to immediately pass such resolution to submit to the States for their approval the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Senators from Nevada be requested to present this resolution to the United States Senate and to energetically and actively support the resolution submitting such amendment."

EMMET D. BOYLE, Governor.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD, following the telegram just read, the list of the names of the women representing the National American Woman Suffrage Association of the State, which has indorsed the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the list referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly joint and concurrent resolution.

Whereas there is now pending before the Senate of the United States a resolution to submit to the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting the right of suffrage to women; and

H. Bray, Mrs. Christina W. Clark, Mrs. Tegwen M. Daniel, Mrs. O. H. Mack, Mary Franzman, Mary A. Boyd, Nevada Suffrage Ratification Committee of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, indorsed by the Woman's Citizens' Club, of Reno, Nev.

Mr. KELLOGG. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Minnesota Legislature, session of 1919.]

Resolution by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), memorializing Congress to provide means for purchasing and moving of the wheat still remaining in the hands of the farmers.

Whereas fully one-third of the wheat crop of the Northwest tributary to the terminal markets of Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth still remains in the hands of the farmers, who are anxious to dispose of their grain, but are advised by grain buyers that they are unable to purchase any more wheat for the reason that an embargo has been imposed against all shipments of grain; and

Whereas in some parts of Minnesota and North Dakota the granaries are not in condition to carry grain for any considerable period, and if the embargo against the shipments of grain is not lifted at once and the wheat disposed of there will be a great loss sustained by the farmers of this section, who, responding to the call of the Federal Government to produce this wheat, did so under personal sacrifice and under difficult conditions, owing to the fact that many of their young men were taken into the Army: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), That we request the Government of the United States to cause some provision to be made for moving of such wheat as speedily as possible, and we ask and urge the Representatives of the State of Minnesota in Congress to do all in their power to have some means provided for the purchase and movement of the wheat crop still in the hands of our farmers: Be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house is hereby instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to the Secretary of Agriculture and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen from Minnesota.

Adopted February 4, 1919.

W. I. NOLAN,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

OSCAR ARNESON,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. KELLOGG. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Minnesota Legislature, House of Representatives, session of 1919.]

A concurrent resolution to the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States.

Whereas the successful prosecution of the recent world war would have been impossible without the staunch and loyal cooperation of the Nation's workers; and

Whereas many of these workers have, while engaged in industry, sustained injuries as serious and as enduring as those suffered by soldiers on the field of battle and are as greatly in need of rehabilitation in order that they may be restored to capacity for useful pursuits; and

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill known as the Smith-Bankhead bill (S. 4922; H. R. 12880), which would make available for industrial and other cripples the same advantages of retraining that have been extended to soldiers wounded in the line of duty, granting aid from the Federal Treasury for the reeducation and placement of the disabled and giving the invaluable assistance of the Federal Government in standardizing and developing such work: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), That we earnestly and urgently petition your honorable body to give early and favorable consideration to the aforesaid Smith-Bankhead bill, both as an act of justice and as a fitting recognition of the splendid service of American labor during the recent world crisis.

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the Senate, and to each Senator and Representative from the State of Minnesota.

W. I. NOLAN,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

OSCAR ARNESON,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. KENYON presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Ottumwa, Iowa, praying that better service be rendered by the express companies, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Town Club of Marshalltown, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the return to the United States of any person who was engaged in opposition to the United States and its allies in the war, and for the deportation of all enemy aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch United Textile Workers of America, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the establishment of an eight-hour workday for textile workers, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Monday Evening Club of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the so-called Johnson-Nolan minimum-wage bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented memorials of the Ida County Farm Bureau; of Rev. Howard P. Young, of Boone; of S. F. Buck, of Diagonal; of F. J. Ritchie, of Cherokee; of H. L. Vander Hammer, of Ireton; and of Raymond Murphy, of Denmark, all in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the reenactment of the so-called daylight saving bill, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Arthur, Iowa, praying for the early return of our soldiers from abroad, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Creston, Waterloo, Dubuque, and Des Moines, all in the State of Iowa, praying for Government ownership of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Minnesota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Minnesota Legislature, session of 1919.]

Mr. CURTIS. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House resolution 11.

Whereas the largest metal-mining industry in the State of Kansas is the zinc-mining industry; and

Whereas the said industry has been greatly crippled by reason of the immense importations of zinc ore from foreign countries, which said importations amounted in four years ending July 30, 1918, to the huge total of 824,000 tons; and

Whereas the War Industries Board has recently removed the embargo of April, 1918, which prohibited the use of ship bottoms for the importation of zinc ores; and

Whereas there are now 350,000 tons of zinc ore concentrated in Australia ready for shipment to the United States, together with a potential importation of 150,000 tons of zinc ore per year from Mexico and Canada: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas, That immediate action is necessary to save the zinc-mining industry of the State from destruction by reason of these huge importations, and therefore the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to take immediate action to save said industry by attaching a rider to the present revenue bill providing for a tariff of 2 cents per pound upon the metallic content of all zinc ore imported into the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Congressmen from the State of Kansas be requested to immediately confer with the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House, with a view to having such a provision incorporated in the revenue bill.

Adopted February 5, 1919.

W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Speaker of the House.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition from the president of the Kansas Council of Women, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., February 10, 1919.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Kansas Council of Women, representative 80,000 enfranchised, prays Senate vote simple justice to American womanhood; trusting justification to grateful centuries. 'Tis the Kansas way; make it national.

EFFIE GRAHAM,
President Kansas Council of Women.

Mr. COLT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Providence, Willimantic, West Kingston, Auburn, and Bristol, all in the State of Rhode Island, praying for the early withdrawal of our troops from Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of Crawford County Branch of the Kansas Division of the Farmers' Education and Cooperative Union of America, praying for the enactment of legislation to guarantee $2.20 per bushel for the 1919 wheat crop, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dodge County, Kans., praying for the proposed extension of Federal control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WARREN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, favoring the adoption of the woman suffrage amendment, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled act No. 1, House of Representatives, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original house joint resolution No. 1, has been carefully compared with the original filed in this office on the 4th day of February, A. D. 1919, and is a full, true, and correct copy of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 7th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.]

W. E. CHAPLIN,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS,
Deputy.

[Enrolled joint resolution No. 1, House of Representatives, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.]

A joint resolution relating to woman's suffrage.

Be is resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring):

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a resolution providing for the submission of a constitutional amendment, which will grant full rights of suffrage to the women of the Nation; and

Whereas the right to vote was granted to the women of Wyoming in the year 1869, and 50 years' experience in this State has proven the real merit and worth of woman's suffrage; and

Whereas we heartily indorse said resolution and sincerely believe that suffrage for all women of this Nation would be not only a great moral and social benefit but also a practical success: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States is hereby earnestly requested to pass said resolution at an early date; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded at once by the Hon. W. Chaplin, secretary of state, to Senator JONES, of New Mexico, and also to the United States Senators from Wyoming.

E. J. SULLIVAN,
Speaker of the House.
T. G. POWERS,
President of the Senate.

Approved:

ROBERT D. CAREY,
Governor.

FEBRUARY 3, 1919—6 p. m.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portsmouth and Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HALE. I present a petition of certain members of the Seventy-ninth Legislature of the State of Maine, praying for the passage of the woman suffrage amendment, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Hon. FREDERICK HALE,
United States Senator from Maine, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned members of the Seventy-ninth Legislature of Maine, believing that in response to the demand for a more complete and consistent democracy in this country inspired by the ideals of the world war, there has been a change in the attitude of the people of Maine toward the question of the enfranchisement of women since the referendum submitted in 1917, and that the proposed Federal amendment to the Constitution granting the franchise to women would, if submitted, be ratified by the legislature of this State, do hereby, without assuming the right in any way in our capacity as legislators to dictate what your course of action should be, respectfully request you to give your vote and support to secure the passage of that measure.

WILLIAM L. WALKER AND OTHERS.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Twin City Council, No. 160, United Commercial Travelers of America, of Auburn, Me., praying for the return to private ownership of the railroads of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Philomothian Club of Fort Fairfield, Me., and a petition of the Woman's Literary Club of Caribou, Me., praying for the establishment of a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MOSES. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, requesting Congress to use its influence with the Government to pay our private soldiers and noncommissioned officers promptly, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution passed by the New Hampshire Legislature February 6, 1919.

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That whereas we have heard with regret of the delay in the payment of wages to our soldiers;

Resolved, That we request our National Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence with the Government—

First, to pay our private soldiers and noncommissioned officers promptly; and,

Secondly, to give every private soldier, noncommissioned officer, and sailor, at the time of his honorable discharge, the sum of $200.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present two telegrams from citizens of my State relative to the national suffrage amendment, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., February 9, 1919.

Hon. KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

As representative of 20,000 organized-labor men of Tennessee, we call upon you to do all in your power to secure the passage of the national suffrage amendment Monday. We expect you to use every legitimate means of influence with Democratic Senators to win the one vote needed. Defeat of this measure, justice to American women, would bring everlasting discredit upon your party.

Mr. BORAH. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Robert O. Jones, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of senate joint memorial 3, by Pettibone (by request), which was filed in this office on the 4th day of February, A. D. 1919, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 5th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1919 and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

[SEAL.] ROBERT O. JONES,
Secretary of State.

[Legislature of the State of Idaho, fifteenth session. In the Senate. Senate joint memorial 3. By Pettibone (by request).]

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho respectfully represent that—

Whereas the construction of a suitable wagon road over which auto trucks can be operated up the South Fork of the Clearwater River, in Idaho County, State of Idaho, beginning either at the town of Stites or the city of Grangeville, both being railroad terminal points, thence up said river to the gold-mining districts of Elk City, Dixie, and Buffalo Hump is a great public and national necessity; and

Whereas since the announcement by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury: "That next in importance to war munitions and foodstuffs was a greater production of gold," the question of a greater production of gold has ever since and now is being seriously considered by the National Government, and that said question is now being considered by the national committee, with a view of determining what is the best method of bringing about the desired results, and that in all probability there soon will be large appropriation made for the construction of highways into the gold districts, where needed; and

Whereas said proposed highway would intersect the gold-mining districts as follows: Clearwater, Ten Mile, Elk City, Dixie, Oro Grande, and Buffalo Hump, all known to be gold-producing sections, and with proper transportation would yield a large output of the precious metal, now so much desired by the Government; and

Whereas the construction of such a road was contemplated something like two years ago, and data compiled and submitted to the Government, showing the necessity for such a road from a cheaper postal-operating expense as well as the operating of the National Forest Department, and that the same was approved by the Government on a basis of 50–50; and

Whereas under present conditions the constitutional limitations of the State of Idaho prohibit the raising of a sufficient fund to meet the Government on said 50–50 basis, and that locally the county and State are bonded to their limit for other road purposes, including the North and South Highway, which is now under construction; and

Whereas such a highway would not only be a great benefit in opening up the several gold districts mentioned but would ultimately be extended and be another artery or highway extending across the country, connecting with said North and South Highway, and would be a great benefit to the Government in lessening the operating expenses from both Parcels Post and Forest Reserve Departments, and would also open up a vast grazing country and timberlands, and would be a great accommodation to something like 250 homesteaders along said route or adjacent thereto: Now, therefore, be it hereby

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, do recommend that $500,000 be appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to construct said highway or wagon road, as aforesaid.

The secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward copies of this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and copies of the same to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

This joint memorial passed the senate on the 24th day of January, 1919.

C. C. MOORE,
President of the Senate.

This joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 30th day of January, 1919.

M. A. KIGER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within joint memorial 3 originated in the senate during the fifteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

PAUL DAVIS,
Secretary of the Senate.

(Indorsed: Received and filed, Feb. 4, 1919. Robert O. Jones, secretary of state.)

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to which was referred Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) authorizing the appointment and sending of a commission to Porto Rico to study its industrial and economic conditions, and for other purposes, reported with amendments and submitted a report (No. 701) thereon.

FEDERAL COMMISSION ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back without recommendation the bill (S. 4968) to provide for the creation and establishment of a Federal commission on reconstruction, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 700) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I also report from the Committee on the Judiciary, without recommendation, Senate concurrent resolution 25, submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on November 21, 1918, to provide for the appointment of certain joint congressional committees on reconstruction, and I submit a report (No. 699) thereon.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Saturday morning I shall endeavor to bring before the Senate for its consideration the resolution just reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by its chairman, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I give this notice for the convenience of Members of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND NATIONAL QUARANTINE.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 443, submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] on the 8th instant, and I call the attention of that Senator to the resolution.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-fifth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 5563) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Hankinson, in the State of North Dakota, captured German cannon, cannon balls, or shells, and gun carriages, condemned United States cannon, cannon balls, or shells, and gun carriages; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENYON:
A bill (S. 5564) granting a pension to Nancy Herrald (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. HOLLIS:
A bill (S. 5565) granting a pension to Mary E. Gray (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. ROBINSON:
A bill (S. 5566) for the relief of the claimants of certain unsurveyed lands in Mississippi County, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Lands.
By Mr. SMOOT:
A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 218) changing the name of the Panama Canal to the "Roosevelt Canal"; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.
By Mr. GORE:
A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 220) empowering and requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain the cost of producing cereals, cotton, live stock, and other staple farm and food products, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.
By Mr. POMERENE:
A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 221) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to adjust and settle certain claims and making appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EXTENSION OF INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS.

Mr. NEW. I introduce a joint resolution and ask for its immediate consideration:
The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 219) to extend the time for filing income-tax returns to April 15, 1919, was read twice by its title.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.
Mr. NEW. It is very evident, as seen, I can not obtain unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution; but I shall call it up to-morrow for consideration.
The VICE PRESIDENT. It has to go to the Committee on Finance. It is a joint resolution.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for cooperative agricultural extension work, etc., from $1,500,000 to $4,573,680, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.
Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment relative to the repeal of appropriation and authorization, housing for war needs, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and I desire that it may be read.
The resolution (S. Res. 444) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate, United States soldiers should be withdrawn from Russia as soon as practicable.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I understand that under subdivision 5 of Rule IV, the resolution lies over for one day, but I give notice that I shall call it up at the earliest possible moment.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over and be printed.

FREIGHT RATES ON FERTILIZER MATERIAL.

Mr. GORE. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.
The resolution (S. Res. 445) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information in regard to the proposed consolidated freight classification No. 1.
(1) The freight rate as proposed under said classification on cotton-meal seed cake and hulls and other fertilizer materials, including nitrate of soda, acid phosphate, potash, etc., in less than carload lots, as compared with existing freight rates on such articles and materials;
(2) The proposed rates under such classification on said articles and materials in less than carload lots, as compared with the proposed rates in less than carload lots on commercial fertilizers; and
(3) The freight rates under the proposed classification on such articles and materials in less than carload lots, as compared with the rates proposed on such articles as automobiles and furniture, in like lots.

AGENTS OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.
The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 446), as follows:

Whereas it is known that a large number, to wit, more than 25 men have been in the State of Michigan for a great portion of the time since August, 1918, representing themselves to be agents of the United States Department of Justice, and many are there now; and
Whereas said men are accused of indulging in unlawful and unwarranted practices: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether he has sent any special agents into Michigan; and if he has, how many have been sent, together with their names; how many are there now; the purpose for which they were sent and are now retained there; and what instructions, if any, were given these men by him.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.
Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not wish the resolution to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If I can not get unanimous consent to have it considered at this time, I desire that it go over.
Mr. ASHURST. I desire to have the resolution go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections before it is considered by the Senate.
Mr. TOWNSEND. It is merely a request for information, with which I think the committee has nothing to do.
Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for a moment?
Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.
Mr. KING. The Senator who is chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections does not seem to be in the Chamber.
Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will have any objection to the resolution. I am perfectly willing, if any Senator objects, that it shall go over a day for consideration.
Mr. KING. Under the circumstances, I think it should go over.
Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over until to-morrow.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS BY SENATOR LODGE IN HONOR OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT (S. DOC. NO. 384).

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 447), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Address of Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, in honor of Theodore Roosevelt before the Congress of the United States, Sunday, February 9, 1919," be printed as a Senate document, and that 10,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there is on the desk a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) which authorizes the signature of JAMES D. PHELAN, a Senator from the State of California, to be attached to the conference report upon the oil and gas land leasing bill. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over without prejudice until to-morrow morning.
Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the request of the Senator.
Mr. SHAFROTH. I simply requested that the resolution to which I referred may go over until to-morrow morning without prejudice.
Mr. SMOOT. The resolution has not as yet been presented to the Senate.
The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read, and went over under the rules on objection.
Mr. SHAFROTH. It was presented to the Senate, was objected to, and was ordered to lie on the table.
Mr. SMOOT. Very well, then.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday, the 11th of February, 1919, or as soon thereafter as possible, I shall move to suspend that provision of paragraph 3, of Senate rule 16, prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the river and harbor bill (H. R. 13462), now pending, by adding a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. ——. To resume and prosecute work on projects and units thereof under the reclamation act stopped during the war, and to begin and prosecute existing projects and units thereof which are practically ready for prosecution, to be immediately available and to be expended under the terms and conditions of the reclamation act, except that in the matter of employment a preference shall be given to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, $50,000,000.

DELEGATE TO MARMORA CONFERENCE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I present an article from the New York Sun of issue of February 8, 1919, relating to George D. Herron, named as one of the two delegates to the conference at Princes Island, Sea of Marmora, to meet the Bolshevist representatives, if any representatives shall be sent. I do not ask that the article may be read; but, in view of the remarks I submitted here on the conditions attending women under the Bolshevist government and certain decrees of the Soviet council on their treatment under that government and the maintenance and care of the offspring as wards in common of the state, I ask that this article be incorporated in the RECORD, without reading, but that it be printed in full. I think it very material.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FREE LOVER TO BE UNITED STATES ENVOY—GEORGE HERRON NAMED AS ONE OF TWO DELEGATES TO MARMORA CONFERENCE—WILLIAM A. WHITE IS OTHER—EXPELLED EDUCATOR AND AFFINITY TRIED TO FOUND MARRIAGELESS COLONY.

PARIS, February 7.

William Allen White, of Emporia, Kans., and Prof. George Davis Herron have been appointed the American delegates to the Marmora conference with the Russian factions.

George D. Herron, socialist, writer, lecturer, expelled pastor, and free-love advocate, first loomed large on the American horizon when he persuaded his wife to divorce him and immediately thereafter announced that he and Miss Carrie Rand were living together.

This was the climax of one of the most sensational stories that had startled the country in years, for Herron and his affinity contemplated a sequel in a "free-love colony" in Metuchen, N. J., where all with the same beliefs—and money—could come for rest, love, and joy.

METUCHEN CITIZENRY OBJECTED.

The couple had bought several hundred acres of the lands around Metuchen and intended splitting it up into farms for the soul mates, but certain hardware of the solid citizens persuaded them to abandon their love-promotion scheme. In later years, though, the couple returned to the Jersey town and were cordially received.

Stories of the day were to the effect that Miss Rand had bought and paid for her affinity with $50,000, which she settled upon Mrs. Herron to get a divorce from her husband. The wife admitted having been paid.

The mother of Miss Rand, Mrs. E. D. Rand, widow of a lumberman who had grown wealthy, saw possibilities of a new Messiah in Herron, whom she endowed with a chair in Iowa College. She is said to have paid $60,000 for it. He was made professor of applied Christianity, and proceeded to apply his version of it until the college expelled him years later.

He was expelled by the Congregational Church of Iowa because of his free-love views blooming in his sermons, much to the consternation of the farmers who hadn't even heard of Utah. Their wives objected, too.

EXPELLED AFTER DESERTING FAMILY.

Herron held on at the college, however, for some time. Finally, when he deserted his wife and two children to go and live in the same house with the Rands, this was more than the good professors could stand, so they expelled him, too.

The divorce followed, and the Rands and Herron came on to New York, where they plighted their announcement late in May, 1901, in 50 West Forty-fifth Street. The ceremony consisted in repeating the phrase, "We intend to live together as man and wife." Then some one sang "The Land of Heart's Desire," and with it the idea of the love colony was formed.

Finding a timetable handy, the name "Metuchen" being novel and odd and likely to be remembered when all else was forgot by the strolling lovers of love colony, the Herron-Rand combination settled upon it for their Eden. But the citizens would not have it so. Like another famous garden, it was "to let" shortly after the couple arrived and let the neighbors nibble of the apple that they had bitten voraciously. The dream was over.

In the same year Herron was hissed and rebuked by an audience at Harvard when he told its members, all Harvard students, that the university was a parasitic institution. He added that Theodore Roosevelt, who was then Vice President, was a "bully and an enemy of the people." The latter remark also applied to Rudyard Kipling, he said. Harvard never invited him any more to address it.

Herron incurred the anger of the ministry by saying: "It is not Jesus that we ought to follow, but the highest truths of our own souls." After this observation many men, among them Mayor Gaynor, refused to attend dinners at which Herron was present.

AFFINITY DIES IN ITALY.

Under the constant criticism Herron's health failed. He and his affinity went to Florence, Italy, where they lived for several years, returned to this country, and again went to Florence, where Miss Rand died January 15, 1914.

While Herron was in Florence trying to recuperate Mrs. Rand founded the Rand School of Social Science, and hoped that he would return to conduct it. The future of the school was made secure with a fund of $200,000, and it is now running in East Fifteenth Street. Herron was generally considered by his college associates as being "daft or worse," according to a symposium of opinions gathered at the time of his free love affair announcement.

Recently Herron was involved in an alleged "peace scheme" in Switzerland, when Chancellor von Hertling is supposed to have sent Prof. Quiddie to Herron to effect peace between Germany and the United States. Herron was styled in German newspapers a personal friend of President Wilson. His peace formula didn't please the Germans, because, they said, it advocated "killing the Germans first and then make peace with them." Throughout Europe, according to dispatches from The Hague, the peace scheme was a farcical play among unauthorized parties.

William Allen White is proprietor and editor of the Emporia (Kans.) Gazette and is well known as a newspaper man and writer throughout the United States. He is a former member of the Progressive Party national committee and was chairman of the Progressive publicity committee.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on January 25 approved and signed the following acts:

S. 3299. An act authorizing the President to reappoint Maj. Chalmers G. Hall, retired, to the active list of the Army; and

S. 4924. An act to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries.

DISPOSITION OF SEIZED LIQUORS.

Mr. KING. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 10851) to provide a method for disposing of intoxicating liquors now or hereafter in the possession of United States court officials, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Attorney General is very anxious to have this bill passed. I do not believe there will be any objection to it, because it only authorizes the disposal of liquor that has been seized. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill and the amendment, which was to add—

Or to order the same sold for such purposes, the proceeds to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an objection. The bill goes to the calendar. Is there any further morning business? [A pause.] The morning business is closed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 200.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"SEC. 2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article."

Mr. POLLOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to move an amendment, in order that it may be pending, to insert the word "white" just before the word "citizens."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the state of the rules the joint resolution is not subject to amendment save by unanimous consent, it having passed to the third reading.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is utterly useless to ask unanimous consent, so I shall not take up the time of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has passed to the third reading. The sole question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. POLLOCK. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, when the representatives of the people are called upon to decide a momentous issue upon which their constituents are greatly divided, and to grant or refuse a right to which it is claimed the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to their course. Let this then be my excuse and apology for consuming a little of the time of this greatest of all deliberative bodies in presenting to the Senate of the United States, and through it to the people of the whole Nation, my reasons for the vote which I shall cast on the pending resolution to submit to the various States the justice and the advisability of so amending the Constitution of the United States as to extend to the women of America the right or privilege of suffrage on the same condition as that right or privilege is extended to men.

The Members of this body have been referred to as Senators of certain States, but no student of our Constitution could for a moment claim that any Senator is a Senator of a particular

State. On the contrary, he is a Senator from a certain State of the United States of America. As a Senator coming from South Carolina, one of the original thirteen colonies that voluntarily entered into the Union and helped frame the Constitution of our common country and became one of the thirteen original States; coming from the State of John C. Calhoun, the leading exponent of State rights; coming from the State that first exercised the right to secede from the Union, I want to say that we of South Carolina are happy and rejoiced that we were not permitted to remain out of the Union, and we are to-day as true and as loyal as any part of this great country of ours. We honor its flag, we glory in its history, we rejoice in its wonderful power and resources, and we are proud to be a part of the best country upon which God's sun shines. We have long since ceased to regret that in the Providence of God we were not permitted to set up a separate government of our own. We had the right to secede under the Constitution. My father, my kindred, and my countrymen fought for that right, but the Constitution of the United States was amended at Appomattox when Lee tendered his sword to Grant, and when, with the sword, it was written into the Constitution the immortal words of Lincoln on the field of Gettysburg:

> It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that the Nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

From that day forward the greatest of all State rights was destroyed, the States in their separate sovereignty ceased to exist; and now we have a nation the wonder and the admiration of the world instead of forty-eight separate and independent petty States; and in this day of world upheaval when the foundations of civilization and of human liberty have been shaken, when the last great struggle between barbarism and civilization, between slavery and freedom, has been fought out on a scale heretofore undreamed of, thank God that America, the young giant of the West, my country and your country, is one and inseparable, so that America could in part at least fulfill her mission on earth to destroy autocracy and set up democracy, to banish human slavery and set up human liberty, to take away special privilege and establish equal rights to all, to break the power of the strong oppressor and give the opportunity of self-government to the weak, and I must believe that in God's appointed time all these things will come to pass, and that it is for us to hasten its coming.

In approaching a discussion of this resolution it seems to me that two considerations must of necessity enter—the one of principle and the other of expediency. Principles are eternal, expedients are temporary. A principle is right to-day, to-morrow, and forever. An expedient may appeal to us to-day and be obnoxious to us to-morrow.

We should enter upon the consideration of this resolution from the standpoint of principle, because it is now sought to incorporate the pending resolution in the permanent statement of principles that constitute the organic law of our country. I hold, with Thomas Jefferson, that all men "are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it." I hold, sir, that man is not more than the equal of woman. I hold, sir, that woman has the same right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as man. I hold, sir, that this Government was instituted to secure these rights as much for woman as for man. I hold, sir, that our present form of Government has been and is destructive of these ends in that it has denied to woman the liberty to which she is entitled, the right to have a voice in her government; the right to participate in the selection of her officials; the right to counsel in the enactment of the laws under which she and her children shall live, upon which her life, her liberty, and her happiness depend. I hold, sir, with the Revolutionary fathers that taxation without representation is tyranny, and that to-day our country, our Government, controlled, directed, and administered by the manhood of America is tyrannically treating the best women of the world by exacting taxes from them without their express consent.

What could give to any citizen of a country a right to vote except a stake in that country? Who could have a greater stake in a country than a wife, a mother, a mistress of a home? I say to you that the family rather than the individual is the proper unit of government. I say to you that a combined family has a greater stake or interest in our country than any individual can have. I say to you that on that account a family should have a greater voice in the affairs of the Nation than any individual—that a man with his wife and daughter should have greater power than any single man, and yet, under our system of government, of voting, the bachelor's vote counts as much as the family's, and this can only be remedied by giving to woman her just right—the right to vote and thus participate in her Government. I say further that there are thousands—yes, hundreds of thousands—of women in this land who have been forced to go out into the world to make a livelihood for themselves and those who are dear to them; they are living by their own labor, and they have as much right to vote as any man. There are more than 400,000 women public-school teachers in America—about 80 per cent of all teachers in the common schools—and they are molding the opinions of the oncoming generation who will administer our Government, and yet they themselves are denied the privilege of participating in their Government.

Whence came the right of man to vote? Was it given under the Constitution of the United States? Search that wonderfully compact instrument from beginning to end, and nowhere will you find that the right to vote and hold office was ever granted to man to the exclusion of woman.

Under the XIV Amendment to the Constitution it is provided:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

Article II, section 5, of the Constitution, prescribed the qualifications for President, and nowhere does sex enter into it, but merely citizenship, age, and residence. The same is true as to Representatives in Congress as laid down in Article I, section 2, and the same is true as to Senators as laid down in Article I, section 3. The word "person" is used, and under the XIV Amendment all persons, whether male or female, are included in the term citizen. Therefore, since the adoption of the XIV Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, denying to the States the right to abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States, and denying the States the right to deprive any person of liberty or the equal protection of the law, I respectfully submit that as a matter of constitutional law we have no right to say to woman "Thou shalt not vote."

Who gave man the right to vote? It will be answered that the States conferred that privilege. And who controlled the States? The manhood of the States, and the men assumed a power, a privilege that every impulse of human nature, every dictate of conscience, every high and noble and worthy sentiment should have required that they should have shared with woman. They won the right to exercise full citizenship only with the aid, the comfort, the sympathy, and the patient endurance of hardship of the women—they won this by force of arms with the assistance of woman—and then when they had won the victory of American independence and freedom and liberty they withheld from woman, without whom they could not have won, her fair share of that freedom and liberty. She is a citizen without its privileges, a taxpayer without a voice, a partner without her profit, and all this because she can not bear arms and fight wars for her own independence and freedom and liberty, just as man could not do without her comfort and assistance.

For more than 140 years in America we have had freedom and liberty for half our people, and we have had patient and uncomplaining slavery for the other half. For nearly a century and a half we have had democracy for one-half of our people and tyranny for the other, and I say, sir, to-day that this Nation can not and will not endure forever one half free and the other half serf. The hosts of democracy are marching on, they are toppling over kings and thrones and setting up governments of the people; they are destroying special privileges and setting up equal rights; they are annihilating brute force and they are establishing justice; they are doing these things in foreign lands, and they will soon accomplish them here so that our country will not only be known as the land of the free and the home of the brave, but it will also be known as the land of truth, of justice, and of righteousness the world over.

This is no new proposition before the American people. For 40 years and more the women of America have been carrying on the unequal struggle, but they have been slowly gaining ground, so slowly, in fact, that perhaps men might have become discouraged; so gradually that if they had been engaged in a less honest cause they themselves might have abandoned it; but with the devotion and constancy of womankind, in the face of defeat after defeat, having nothing but the justice of their cause to hearten them, they have made the fight, they have kept the faith, they have endured hardship and heart burns even to the point where they brought censure and ridicule on themselves in order that they might keep the flame burning, in order that the conscience of man might be touched to hear their plea and do them justice. And now a brighter day is dawning. God grant that it may be my good fortune, in the brief time that I shall be a Member of this body, to aid in bringing about the adoption of this resolution whereby the political shackles shall be broken from the hands of the women of America, and whereby they shall be permitted to step out in the full bright light of American citizenship.

No sound reason has ever been advanced why woman should not have this privilege accorded to her, nor can any sound reason be advanced. She is a human being just as is man, she is subject to the laws of the land just as is man, she is required to contribute to the maintenance of the Government just as is man, she is interested in good government just as is man, she responds to the call of her country just as does man, she bears and rears the whole citizenship of the country, she loves her country and sacrifices for it even more than does man. That she should have this privilege is right, therefore it can not be wrong. To exercise that privilege is honorable, therefore it can not be dishonorable; and the manhood of America has already indorsed woman's right to vote from one end of America to the other. A number of the States of the Union have accorded the right; the Republican national convention has indorsed the principle; the Democratic national convention has indorsed the principle; a two-thirds majority in the National House of Representatives has voted its approval; a large majority—nearly two-thirds—of the Senate of the United States has voted its approval; the people of America, through their representatives in the two great political conventions, have spoken for the principle and have declared the claim of the women is just; the people, through their representatives in the Congress of the United States, have tried to accord this privilege to them; the President of the United States, speaking as only Woodrow Wilson can for the democracies of the world, has appealed to this body to do this simple act of justice to the mothers, the wives, and the daughters of this land just as Britain has done.

They had earned this consideration at the hands of the manhood of America before this awful war, and who will say that the women of this land have not doubly earned all that they ask, all that they desire, all that could be bestowed upon them by their magnificent spirit of patriotism since we have been engaged in this war for world freedom? They have, without a murmur, given up their husbands, their sons, their sweethearts, and placed them on the altar of their country; they have sacrificed their own home life that the homes of all might be safe; they have gone into the hospitals and ministered, as only a woman can, to the sick, the wounded, and the dying; they have laid aside their personal comforts and pleasures and have joined the great Red Cross army that the men over yonder might suffer less; they have taken up man's work in order that men might be free to fight for liberty and civilization; they are working in the offices, the factories, the mercantile establishments, and on the farms that industry may not die and the world suffer therefrom; aye, they have done all things that befit a woman, a good citizen, and if any doubt should have existed heretofore as to woman's right to vote it does seem to me that she has by her conduct in America during the past two years dispelled that doubt.

When nurses were needed she has volunteered, when laborers were needed she has responded, she has aided in the great campaigns for floating the Government's bond issues, she has subscribed liberally from her own funds, and by her enthusiasm and charm has caused the men to do their duty. When men have become discouraged she has heartened them, when men have lagged behind she has encouraged them.

America has done and is doing with woman's help what she never would have done without it.

The argument that this is a matter for action by the States, and that to pass this resolution is a violation of State rights, is not a reason but an excuse on the part of many for opposing this resolution, and a very poor excuse at that.

When a respectable portion of the American people ask that the question of amending the Constitution of the United States be submitted to the States for their approval or disapproval, it is a denial of State rights to refuse to let the States through their legislatures act. There is but one right that each separate State has under the Constitution which can not be taken away from it without its consent, and that is to have equal representation in the Senate, but the Constitution may be amended in all other particulars when three-fourths of the States so decree. And surely no one will say that the right of any one State should be greater than the right expressly conferred upon three-fourths of the States acting jointly through their several legislatures to amend the Constitution in other respects. The right of three-fourths of the States to amend the Constitution is one of the highest rights of all State rights, and when this resolution shall have passed this body by the necessary two-thirds vote, as I feel sure that it will, then the right—the States' right—to adopt or reject the proposed amendment will be conferred upon the States rather than withheld from them. I do not hesitate to say, sir, that to refuse to pass this resolution under the circumstances is to refuse to give to three-fourths of the States a right which they have under the Constitution, and that under the pretext that we would be giving to three-fourths of the States the power to take away from a single State a power or right which it does not possess under the Constitution.

No one State has the right to say what the qualifications for voting shall be when three-fourths of the States express themselves otherwise, and no State has the right to say to three-fourths of the States that they shall not amend the Constitution other than as to equal representation in this body. John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, possibly the greatest exponent of the doctrine of State rights in America, the patron political saint of South Carolinians and one of the greatest statesmen that our country has ever produced, in his masterly reply to Webster in 1833, speaking of the rights of the States under the Constitution, said:

> In this compact they have stipulated, among other things, that it may be amended by three-fourths of the States—that is, they have conceded to each other by compact the right to add new powers or to subtract old by the consent of that proportion of the States without requiring, as otherwise would have been the case, the consent of all—a modification no more inconsistent with their sovereignty than any other contained in the document.

And so, Mr. President, occupying for the time being the same seat so well and ably filled by Mr. Calhoun, I find that in disagreeing with those who take the position that to amend the Constitution in this way is to despoil the doctrine of State rights I am but following the lead of the greatest of State rights statesmen.

The original Constitution is silent as to the powers delegated to the United States or prohibited by it to the States—the question of the right to vote was not delegated, it is true, to the United States, nor was it prohibited by the Constitution to the States, and it was provided in the tenth amendment as follows:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved in the States, respectively, or to the people." This amendment was adopted by the votes of 11 of the then 14 States, and South Carolina was the fourth State, January 19, 1790, to adopt this amendment. Had it not been for the passage of this amendment, it might be now debatable whether the power to prescribe the qualifications for voting was in the United States or in the several States, because, as you will note in Article I, section 2, it is provided that the qualification for suffrage for Members of Congress shall be the same as that provided in the different States for the most numerous branch of the legislature of that State, and the seventeenth amendment is practically a repetition of that provision in the Constitution in so far as the qualification for suffrage for the United States Senate is concerned. Had it not been for the passage of this amendment, it might be now debatable whether the power to prescribe the qualifications for voting was in the United States or in the several States, because the power was neither delegated to the United States nor expressly retained by the several States; but since the adoption of the tenth amendment any doubt that may have existed has been removed—the power is in the several States—and the Federal Government can only take away or limit this right by amending the Constitution of the United States; and by the adoption of the fifteenth amendment the power to limit the right of the several States to abridge the right of suffrage has been expressly recognized and upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The right on the part of three-fourths of the States to amend is therefore stronger than the right of any one State to prevent the amendment, and while I do not believe, as a matter of policy, that the fifteenth amendment should have ever been placed in our Constitution, and while I would go as far as any man to repeal that amendment, we must all admit that the power to adopt the amendment was not an abridgment of State rights.

It is argued that we should not submit this proposed amendment to the various States on account of the race question in the South. Do Senators realize that when two-thirds of this body, representing two-thirds of the States in this Union, shall have passed this resolution, as pass it we will, that this resolution must then be adopted by the legislatures of not a majority, not two-thirds, but three-fourths of all the States of the Union?

Do they realize that the legislatures of 13 States out of the 48 States can prevent its adoption, that it will require favorable action on the part of the legislatures of 36 States before this resolution can become a part of the organic law of the land? Will any Senator say that there is more wisdom, more fairness, and more justice in any 33 Members of this body than there is in the representatives of 36 of the States of this Union?

Are we living up to our professions of democracy, of faith in our people, when we refuse to permit them to decide these questions themselves? Are we sincere, and can we make the world believe that we are sincere, when we say that we entered this great war from purely altruistic motives, in order that the peoples of the earth may govern themselves, not only in selecting their officials, enacting their statutory laws, construing and executing their own laws, but making and changing their constitutions upon which all these things depend, and still deny to our own people the right to settle this question that involves the liberty and freedom of one-half of our citizenship? Sir, I say here to-day that I have confidence in the white people of America—blood is thicker than water. Efforts may be made by certain politicians to force upon us the rule of the ignorant, the vicious, and the inferior; some men who do not appreciate the burden of the white man in the South may undertake to turn over to the negro the control of our affairs in the South, but I have confidence in the white manhood of the North; I believe in the white womanhood of the North; I have faith in the white civilization of the whole United States.

We may have to fight the same political battles that we fought in reconstruction days in the South, but it will be white people against negro people. The black man could not control the white man, and the negro man and the negro woman combined can not any the more control the white man and the white woman combined, but to quote the words of a distinguished citizen and statesman of the South, "Never, sir, will a single State of this Union, North or South, be delivered again to the control of an ignorant and inferior race. We wrested our government from negro supremacy when the Federal drum beat rolled closer to the ballot box and Federal bayonets hedged it deeper about than will ever again be permitted in this free Government. But, sir, though the cannon of this Republic thundered in every voting district in the South, we still should find, in the mercy of God, the means and the courage to prevent its reestablishment." And here to-day, speaking in behalf of the womanhood of America, speaking as a representative of a section that has been much misunderstood, and naturally so, I swear anew my allegiance to my own people, my own blood, my own race, and while you of the North, the East, and the West, who are not set about with our own peculiar problem, can not pass this resolution without assistance from the South, I pledge you that in my capacity as a Senator of the United States I know no section, I see only my whole country, and I covenant with you, and you covenant with me, that you will do under this amendment as you have done under the fifteenth amendment—you will not undertake to place in control over us a race of people that you would never allow to govern you. The white men have outvoted the negro men, and that under trying conditions, and, God helping us, from this day forward the white men and the white women will outvote the negro men and the negro women.

Mr. President, in the short time that I have been a Member of this body the three greatest social questions that ever have engaged the attention of a people have been before the American people. It has been my good fortune to witness the ratification of the last amendment to the Constitution whereby liquor was driven out of America. It has been my privilege, sir, speaking my own sentiments, and as God is my judge, believing I speak the sentiments of the people of America, to speak for the peace of America and for the peace of the world.

So to-day another opportunity is presented to me which I gladly grasp. That is, not only to raise my voice in behalf of human liberty and freedom for the women of America, but it shall be my privilege to cast a vote for that which I know to be right and which therefore can not be wrong.

Mr. President, when this joint resolution was last before the Senate of the United States it needed but two votes to pass it. Since that time it has been my fortune to come here. It is now my privilege, my pleasure, to present to the womanhood of America one-half of all the votes that were needed when the joint resolution was here before. I do not know what changes there may have been, but I do know that if all those who voted for the joint resolution when it was here before shall vote for it again to-day, when that vote is supplemented by my vote the women of American can need but one vote to-day. So the responsibility is placed squarely up to every Senator in this body who may vote "nay." You can grant or you can deny justice to the women of America. Each man has the whole responsibility resting upon him. Dare you deny that right? You who hesitate, you who believe in it, you who want to follow your President, you who want to follow your legislatures, you who want to follow the American people, you who hear the call of justice, will you dare assume all the responsibility, because if the joint resolution fails to pass to-day each and every man who votes "nay" will thereby take upon his own shoulders the whole responsibility for the failure of the measure.

Sir, I come from the South. I come from a State that has a majority of negro population. Some men have said that they do not want to force anything on the South. I tell you, speaking for the new South, speaking for the real South, speaking for the American South, we want this privilege. We feel that the women are entitled to it, and we know that we can handle any race question that comes up in this enlightened age. We know there is no danger from it. You need not withhold your vote because you think that some of us down there do not want it.

Let me call this further to the attention of the Senate. The Republicans are committed to the principle. The Democrats are committed to the principle. The two great political conventions have put it in their platforms. It is just a question now of the method by which you will get it.

Let me tell you that no man will be nominated for the Presidency by either party who is not an advocate of woman suffrage. Let me tell you that neither convention of either party would dare fail to place in its platform when it meets in convention next year a plank calling for the passage of this joint resolution. Everybody will be for it when the next conventions meet. You will be bound to vote for it then whether you will or no.

Let me tell you, you may defeat it to-day, but you only postpone it. You may postpone it for a few months, it may be possibly for a year, but this Congress, as it is gradually dying, has the opportunity to make itself immortal. If you do not pass this joint resolution the incoming Congress will pass it. You can not prevent the passage of the joint resolution. You can not prevent giving women the right to vote. They are going to have it. It is just a question whether you will do it to-day or whether you will do it a little later.

I beg Senators, when only one vote is needed, not to turn deaf ears to 50,000,000 of people. It is too late now for any man belonging to either party to doubt the wisdom of women voting. We are all committed to it. It is coming; it is here. I believe, Mr. President, that the joint resolution is going to pass to-day, and this Senate will go down in history forever more on account of that than on account of any other one thing that it may have done during its time.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I shall vote for the joint resolution because I believe in it, and because I know that if it is adopted and the women of the entire country are given the vote they will use it intelligently. I did not rise in my place to discuss that subject particularly this morning, but just to occupy the time of the Senate for a few moments on a matter which deals with it relatively.

Mr. President, the other day the Secretary of War presented to the ranking officers of the Army in this country distinguished-service decorations. The newspapers heralded the fact, and properly so, for I think it can fairly be said that no group of men in this country rendered more valuable service in our war with Germany than did these very officers.

We have all read the published accounts of the fact that many of our officers and men abroad have been cited for bravery in action, but I have failed to observe where the women of America who enlisted in the Army and rendered patriotic service as nurses back of the very front lines have received any unusual consideration at the hands of our Government. This fact prompted me to address a communication to the Secretary of War the other day, of which the following is a copy:

JANUARY 29, 1919.

Hon. NEWTON D. BAKER,
The Secretary of War, War Department,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SECRETARY BAKER: I observe that the War Department is awarding to a number of officers and enlisted men, both in France and in this country, medals of honor for meritorious services performed during the war, all of which, in my judgment, were well earned; but it occurs to me that there are many women who served with the Army in France in our hospitals who are equally entitled to consideration for services rendered, and if medals of honor can be awarded to these women under the law, I trust that they will not be overlooked.

If, however, you can not do this, I will be pleased if you will prepare and send to me a bill that will cover the situation. This country, has reason to be proud of its women, particularly those who have made such great sacrifices to take care of the men who have been wounded in battle.

Yours, very truly, ——— ———.

This letter was published in many of the New York newspapers, and as a result I have received a number of responses, among them the following, which I am much pleased to bring to the attention of the Senate as an evidence of the sympathy existing between the boys who fought overseas and the girls who took care of them when they were sick and wounded:

Mr. President, I now desire to read the following letter:

UNITED STATES EMBARKATION HOSPITAL No. 3,
New York City, January 30, 1919.

Senator CALDER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: To-night I read with interest your letter to Secretary Baker regarding medals to be issued to women war workers. Nothing would please the overseas boys more than to see our overseas and home girls receive the service medals so well earned. I know the home girls have done wonderful work in supplying our overseas Army with all the comforts possible. Here in New York they are treating us royal, but, Senator, it brings tears to my eyes when I think of the hardship the girls endured on the other side—the long hours they worked, the conditions they worked under, and the miserable accommodations they had. God bless them, Senator; you have got to be there to fully appreciate what the girls have done for us. I for one will never pass up the big drum again, and I will always honor the Salvation Army. I have seen the Red Cross hospital raided by the Huns and several nurses who gave all—much more than I. I hope the people as a whole will honor all women war workers, as they most surely deserve it.

It is true we left many of our boys over there, but is it not true that we left some of our girls over there as well?

This is one subject Congress can and will agree upon, and I know our President will be more than pleased to award the medals.

How I wished that I commanded words to express my appreciation of all war workers.

Thanking you for your interest taken on behalf of our girls—you know, Senator, we overseas boys call all lady war workers our girls, and we love to think of them as such—and that the honor that is their due will soon be theirs, I am,

Yours, very truly,

Pvt. GUSTAVUS A. BETTS.

Hospital. 1084914.

I am afraid, Mr. President, that in the hurry and rush of war we have failed to pay the tribute due these wonderful women who were willing to make every sacrifice for their country. Thousands of our best women have been with our Army from the beginning of the war, at times under most difficult circumstances, and some have been under fire repeatedly. I have in mind one Miss McDonald, a nurse, who went over with a unit from the Presbyterian Hospital, of New York City. Miss McDonald was wounded at Ypres, losing an eye, and was treated for several months but returned to service again. I am informed that she received a British decoration, but, so far as I can learn, she has not yet been cited by her own Government. This should not continue a day longer. These splendid women ought not, under any circumstances, to be overlooked. They did more than they were asked to do, not only in France but here in this country as well.

No war was ever won by any nation without the united support of its women, and it is true, indeed, the American women have rendered every service in their power for their country. I call this matter to the attention of the members of the Military and Naval Committees especially, and hope, if legislation is required to properly honor these women, that such measures as may be necessary be immediately brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, when the joint resolution was pending before the Senate last fall I offered the following amendment to it:

On page 1, line 11, after the word "sex," insert the following: "but no male person who is not a citizen of the United States shall exercise the right of suffrage at an election for Senators and Representatives in Congress or for electors for President and Vice President of the United States, and no female person who is not such a citizen otherwise than by marriage, or who, having acquired citizenship by marriage, has not complied with such requirements and conditions as may be prescribed by the Congress, shall exercise such right.

At that time, in speaking upon the amendment, I said:

"I am in favor of a constitutional amendment properly drawn which will permit the worthy women of this country who are citizens, either by birth or through the regular and orderly processes of naturalization, to have the right of suffrage; but I want that amendment so drawn that it will protect the worthy women, who should vote, against the unworthy, who should not vote, and I want it so drawn that Congress can hereafter pass laws properly protecting this enlarged and increased electorate. I conceive it to be our duty under our oath as Senators to pass an amendment that will do this.

"Generally, married women are regarded as citizens of the country of which their husbands are citizens. This principle is recognized by the laws of the United States, section 1994 of the Revised Statutes providing that—

"Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States and who might herself be lawfully naturalized shall be deemed a citizen."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that this is a House joint resolution, and that if any amendment, no matter what it might be, should be offered to it and passed by the Senate it would send the resolution back to the other House for concurrence, and, therefore, it would be impossible to pass the measure during this session of Congress?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That may be a prophecy of the Senator from Colorado, but I am not aware that the ordinary processes of legislation should be stopped by reason of such a prophecy. I want to point out to the Senate, and to make it emphatic, that either we should amend this joint resolution or we should immediately address ourselves to amending our immigration laws before the proposed amendment to the Constitution is ratified in the event it shall pass the two Houses of Congress. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Colorado will allow me to continue, inasmuch as I wish to be placed on record in regard to this resolution——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey decline to yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I trust the Senator will bear with me for just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield further to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from New Jersey may not have been in the Chamber when the Vice President announced that no amendment whatever would be in order to the joint resolution, because in the parliamentary status of the joint resolution it has been read a third time, which is the final action that can be taken before the passage.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I was in the Chamber when the Vice President announced that ruling; I am aware of it; but I know of no ruling which will deprive me of speaking on the joint resolution, which I am doing at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will proceed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In my remarks on the occasion referred to I continued:

"It is of fundamental importance that in considering this provision of law the fact shall not be overlooked that Congress, in adopting it, was proceeding in pursuance of authority conferred upon the Congress by Article I, section 8, paragraph 4 of the Constitution—the authority 'to establish an uniform rule of naturalization.' Therefore, the marriage of a foreign woman to an American citizen is, in its effect upon the status of the woman, a process of naturalization, and it must be borne in mind that the woman who acquires citizenship in this manner is, by virtue of the language of section 1994 itself, as fully naturalized as though she had gone through the court processes of naturalization required in the cases of males and in the cases of unmarried females, and as completely a citizen of the United States as though she had been born here. The Constitution 'contemplates two sources of citizenship, and two only—birth and naturalization'—said the Supreme Court in the leading case on citizenship, entitled United States v. Wong Kim Ark (169 U. S., 649, 702).

"The procurement of United States citizenship by a foreign woman through marriage to a citizen is not, of course, surrounded with any of the safeguards that are, and have been for many years, placed around the procurement of citizenship through the regular court processes provided by law. Some of those safeguards are the following:

"A male alien desiring to become a citizen of the United States must make a declaration that he is not an anarchist, a polygamist, or a believer in the practice of polygamy, and that it is his intention in good faith to become a citizen of the United States and permanently to reside therein. Not less than two years and not more than seven years after he has made his declaration of intention he must again petition the court and take an oath that he is not 'a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government, or a member of or affiliated with any organization or body of persons teaching disbelief in organized government,' and so on. Then he is examined by the United States examiners, and if the court so directs he becomes a citizen, but under the Revised Statutes a foreign woman who has attained her citizenship by marriage to an American citizen is not held to conform to that process of law.

"Is it not essential that we should write in the Constitution a provision which will enable Congress to pass legislation that will restrict the menace arising from this condition? I do not think the amendment as drawn does this, and I believe that Congress should take the precaution to lay the foundation for protecting the country in this regard. After consultation with the legal advisers of the Immigration and Naturalization Bureaus I am firmly of the opinion that if the amendment should be adopted as drawn it will not be possible thereafter for Congress to remedy the situation described by me by passing legislation. In other words, the constitutional amendment, unless it shall be changed in some such manner as that I suggest, will prevent the passing of any legislation to place any restriction with regard to the exercise of the franchise upon foreign women who have become citizens by marriage.

"This citizenship-by-marriage provision was enacted by the Federal Congress when women could not vote and at a time when Congress had no thought of giving them the vote, its object being to protect property and dower rights and to care for many legal and international questions. To accomplish these purposes Congress conferred the benefit of such citizenship upon such women. Now women are asking for the additional benefit of the right of suffrage—too long denied them—but a changed situation is created, which Congress should carefully consider before passing a constitutional amendment. The view has been expressed by some lawyers that Congress could afford protection to the elective franchise under this constitutional amendment by hereafter passing statutes naturalizing foreign women married to citizens and worthy of the privilege of voting. Possibly a statute could be passed that hereafter would protect the electorate and compel married women who have become citizens by marriage to be naturalized in a court proceeding before they vote, but I do not believe it."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point the entire address I delivered on that occasion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Sept. 30, 1918.]

"Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, a few days ago I proposed an amendment to the pending joint resolution. While I realize that the Senate is fatigued, I shall be forced to be away to-morrow if I can arrange a proper pair, and I would like to speak briefly upon my amendment. I ask that the Secretary may read the amendment.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

"The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution add the following:

"but no male person who is not a citizen of the United States shall exercise the right of suffrage at an election for Senators and Representatives in Congress or for electors for President and Vice President of the United States, and no female person who is not such a citizen otherwise than by marriage, or who, having acquired citizenship by marriage, has not complied with such requirements and conditions as may be prescribed by the Congress, shall exercise such right.

"Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the avowed and the obvious object of the resolution now pending before the Senate is to place women who are citizens of the United States upon an equality with men who are such citizens in the matter of the exercise of the right to vote; to confer suffrage upon female citizens of this country throughout the length and breadth thereof. My object in proposing an amendment to that resolution is to make it possible, in what seems to me the best way open to us, for the resolution actually to accomplish that obvious purpose and to avoid what seems to me to be the very serious danger that, in the very act of conferring the right to vote upon women and of abolishing the inequalities in that regard which have heretofore existed, we shall perpetuate and increase evils already existing and create new ones that will prove a constant and increasing source of embarrassment to us in the future administration of governmental affairs.

"At the outset I desire to make it perfectly plain that I am not opposed to the adoption of the woman-suffrage amendment—on the contrary, I am distinctly in favor of its adoption—but my attention has been attracted to the situation which I shall now endeavor to explain to the best of my ability, and I have felt that this situation is so serious that I should be derelict in the performance of my duty as a Member of this body should I fail or neglect to call its dangers to the notice of each and every Member of the Senate.

"With this by way of preface, I shall proceed to state the purposes of and reasons for the additions to the proposed constitutional amendment which I have offered in the form of an amendment to the resolution. My first object is this: To place in the Constitution itself a provision which will safeguard the country against the exercise of the right of franchise in Federal matters by aliens residing or sojourning within our midst. And it has seemed to me that not only is this of such great importance as to justify efforts toward the accomplishment of the reform at any and all times, but the pendency before the Senate of the resolution under discussion affords an opportunity for its accomplishment in an appropriate and efficient manner that ought not by any means to be overlooked.

"Under the constitutions of seven States of this Union aliens now exercise the right of franchise in connection with every elective office candidates for which are ordinarily voted for in the other States, to wit, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Texas. Recognizing the menace to the safety of government of such a policy as this, a number of States have recently amended their constitutions so as to allow only native-born persons and persons who are fully naturalized under the regular legal process to vote therein, to wit, Alabama, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and others that I can not recollect.

"To show the abuses which arise under such a policy, which is contrary to the very spirit of the Federal naturalization laws, attention might be directed to the fact that the following methods have recently been applied in a certain Western State where the declarations of intention made by aliens in the course of a year would hardly approximate two dozen and the declarations made within 30 days preceding and including election day—made under the influence of vote manufacturers—have approximated a thousand or more in several of the courts exercising naturalization jurisdiction in the State: The ambitious candidate has his henchmen line up all the foreigners in the district whom he can enlist. He makes his drive through the industrial plants, foregathers with the aliens in their club organizations, extols the virtues of his candidate—and this applies regardless of party—and by various inducements and blandishments prevails upon the foreigners to assemble at convenient places and in the day and night time the accommodating clerk of the court supplies the necessary blank forms and accepts the statutory fees coming from an appropriate source. Up to and including election day this business continues. All day long, in the presence of Government officials, the stream of aliens has been seen to enter the room where the clerk of the court is located and to leave that room with statements from the clerk showing that the aliens have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, and, in the light of the provision of the State constitution, showing also by implication that such aliens have become clothed by the mere act of declaring an intention to become citizens with such character, intelligence, and understanding of our institutions that they are entitled to exercise the franchise in the same way and with the same effect as a person born in our midst.

"Under the resolution pending before the Senate, unless the part of my amendment directed to this situation, or some similar amendment, should be adopted, the evils and abuses to which I am calling attention will not only be perpetuated but will, perhaps, be practically doubled; for if and when the amendment proposed in the resolution is ratified by the requisite number of States, each and every foreign woman now living in the seven States I have mentioned and each and every one who shall take up residence there later who has attained the statutory age will be able to declare her intention, if she is unmarried, and by that simple act will be clothed with the right to vote alongside of the man.

"With this situation existing, any unmarried woman coming from the most anarchistic section of Russia, from the fastnesses of Bolshevikism, from the I. W. W. ranks, or from any other source inimical to our interests or even believing in the utter destruction of our Government—any unmarried woman, no matter what her character may be, might be induced in the States mentioned to declare her intention to become a citizen, whereupon she could proceed to stamp the impress of her views and of her character, through the exercise of her right to vote, upon the laws of this country. This is an illustration none too extreme; but even if it should be regarded as extreme, the answer is that we must think through to the very depths of the possibility of an evil if we are correctly to measure the extent of such evil.

"Is it desirable or wise to lay a foundation in a constitutional amendment for the perpetuation of such a situation as this, especially when it may be so easily guarded against? I think not, and because of that view I have inserted in my proposed amendment the provision—

"But no male person who is not a citizen of the United States shall exercise the right of suffrage at an election for Senators and Representatives in Congress or for electors for President and Vice President of the United States.

"And have, in addition, so worded the remainder of my proposed amendment, the direct purpose of which is to meet another situation, to the description of which I am about to proceed, that the same result will be accomplished with regard to females.

"The second object which I have in view is this: To insure that, in conferring the right to vote upon women who are citizens, we do not create a legal situation in which foreign women might, through the operation of the almost universally recognized principle that a married woman's citizenship follows that of her husband, qualify to exercise the franchise in Federal elections, although wholly unfitted by character, education, residence within the country, and knowledge of and regard for its institutions, or otherwise, to have a voice in public affairs. My second object, in other words, is so to change the wording of the resolution before us that it shall be made actually to confer upon women rights equal to those enjoyed in this regard by men, and not greater than those enjoyed by men.

"Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

"The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New York?

"Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator rises to ask me a question, I would be very glad to answer it after I conclude. I know the Senate wants to adjourn, and I hope the Senator will not interrupt me now.

"Mr. CALDER. Very well.

"Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I have already remarked, the object of the pending resolution is to place women on the same footing as men so far as the right of franchise is concerned. I am in favor of a constitutional amendment properly drawn which will permit the worthy women of this country who are citizens, either by birth or through the regular and orderly processes of naturalization, to have the right of suffrage; but I want that amendment so drawn that it will protect the worthy women, who should vote, against the unworthy, who should not vote, and I want it so drawn that Congress can hereafter pass laws properly protecting this enlarged and increased electorate. I conceive it to be our duty, under our oath as Senators, to pass an amendment that will do this.

"I do not know who prepared the pending constitutional amendment, but I believe it has been drawn without proper consideration or study of the Constitution and conditions that exist under our naturalization statutes, the careless disregard of them, the abuses that have crept into the making of citizens, and the apparent indifference of some authorities to the grave menace to the institutions of popular government that thus arise.

"In giving to this subject that careful study which its gravity demands, my attention has been attracted to two circumstances in particular. The passage of a resolution of this kind is closely related to the precarious situation in regard to aliens which has been brought about by the war and our participation in it. Congress has been forced to pass drastic laws at the eleventh hour to protect this country against sedition, treason, and deep-seated disloyalty, arising from the fact that so many foreigners reside amongst us and that Germany has carried on a surreptitious propaganda here ever since the war and evidently, from latter-day developments, even for many years before the war. It is not necessary for me to recite the many outrages, bombings, dynamitings, murders, committed by the disloyal foreigners residing here. The consideration of this amendment conferring upon female citizens the right to vote necessarily brings up at this critical time the grave question of our immigration and naturalization laws and policies, especially in their relation to and effect upon women of alien birth already here or who may hereafter come.

"The other particular circumstance was not fully appreciated by me, in its relation to the constitutional amendment as drawn, until I conferred with officials of the Bureau of Immigration and learned its extent and seriousness. It arises from the abuses that exist in connection with the traffic in women for immoral purposes. While our immigration laws have been framed with the object of protecting society against this traffic, nevertheless many women become citizens of the United States through pro forma marriages contracted simply for the purpose of giving the poor, unfortunate women a status of citizenship under our laws and preventing them from being deported. The pimp, the procurer, these vice scavengers of humanity, products of the swill barrel of foreign lands, carry on their immoral, unspeakable practices almost within the shadow of Ellis Island, the women being brought in from Europe, from the Orient, and from the Latin countries, and, except in the cases of Chinese and Japanese, a pro forma marriage contract can be entered into and these women become citizens of the United States and can not be deported unless the Government can show—under the most recent amendment to section 19 of the immigration act—that the marriage was contracted after the woman became liable to deportation under the law; and heretofore the enforcement of the act has been seriously impeded through the fact that a foreign woman, no matter what her character, can secure citizenship simply by going through with a marriage ceremony, the other party to which is an American citizen.

"The foregoing are the two respects in which, it seems to me, the importance of the second part of my proposed amendment is made especially apparent at this time. I desire now to proceed to a more detailed discussion of the matter in its legal as well as its practical aspects.

"Generally, married women are regarded as citizens of the country of which their husbands are citizens. This principle is recognized by the laws of the United States, section 1994 of the Revised Statutes providing that—

"Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States and who might herself be lawfully naturalized shall be deemed a citizen.

"It is of fundamental importance that in considering this provision of law the fact shall not be overlooked that Congress, in adopting it, was proceeding in pursuance of authority conferred upon the Congress by Article I, section 8, paragraph 4, of the Constitution—the authority 'to establish an uniform rule of naturalization.' Therefore the marriage of a foreign woman to an American citizen is, in its effect upon the status of the woman, a process of naturalization, and it must be borne in mind that the woman who acquires citizenship in this manner is, by virtue of the language of section 1994 itself, as fully naturalized as though she had gone through the court processes of naturalization required in the cases of males and in the cases of unmarried females, and as completely a citizen of the United States as though she had been born here. The Constitution 'contemplates two sources of citizenship, and two only—birth and naturalization,' said the Supreme Court in the leading case on citizenship, entitled United States v. Wong Kim Ark (169 U. S., 649, 702).

"The procurement of United States citizenship by a foreign woman through marriage to a citizen is not, of course, surrounded with any of the safeguards that are, and have been for many years, placed round the procurement of citizenship through the regular court processes provided by law. Some of those safeguards are the following:

"A male alien desiring to become a citizen of the United States must make a declaration that he is not an anarchist, a polygamist, or a believer in the practice of polygamy, and that it is his intention in good faith to become a citizen of the United States and permanently to reside therein. Not less than two years and not more than seven years after he has made his declaration of intention he must again petition the court and take an oath that he is not "a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government, or a member of or affiliated with any organization or body of persons teaching disbelief in organized government,' and so on. Then he is examined by the United States examiners; and if the court so directs, he becomes a citizen, but under the Revised Statutes a foreign woman who has attained her citizenship by marriage to an American citizen is not held to conform to that process of law.

"What is the object of the resolution? It is to give men and women the same rights under the Constitution, to place them upon an equality in regard to the elective franchise. Does it do that? Will it attain its object?

"Under the Federal statute already quoted an alien woman who marries a man who is a citizen of the United States by birth or naturalization becomes a citizen, and under this resolution, as drawn, she would be entitled to vote; but a male alien or a female alien not married must be naturalized in a regular court proceeding under our naturalization laws before he or she becomes a citizen qualified under this proposed resolution, as drawn, to vote. Is that equal rights?

"A male alien—a German, for instance—marries an American woman, but he does not thereby become a citizen, and under this constitutional amendment he could not vote by reason of that marriage relation. But a female alien—a German woman, for instance—marries an American citizen, perhaps a German who has been naturalized. She thereby, ipso facto, becames a citizen, and under this constitutional amendment could vote. Is that equal rights? Certainly not. It is conferring upon married women rights not conferred upon unmarried women or upon any man—rights which ought not to be conferred upon either women or men in any such haphazard, unregulated fashion.

"Again, the foreign man or unmarried foreign woman must reside here continuously for at least five years before the boon of citizenship will be conferred; but the foreign woman may by marrying a citizen become invested with all the rights and privileges of citizenship immediately upon landing upon our shores, including, if the constitutional amendment as proposed should be adopted, the right to vote. The foreign man or unmarried woman seeking in good faith, through the regularly ordained channels, to become a citizen of this country must be of 'good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same.' But in the case of the foreign woman who marries a citizen no such standards are enforced; the marriage, ipso facto, confers citizenship, even though she is of bad character and even though she knows nothing and cares less about the principles of the Constitution. She does not have to be of good character, because the Supreme Court long ago held, in the case entitled Kelley against Owen, Seventh Wallace, 496, that the qualifying phrase, 'and who might herself be lawfully naturalized,' found in section 1994 of the Revised Statutes, means no more than that she must be of the general class—races—for which naturalization is authorized. Under this situation will the rights conferred be equal? Obviously not. Upon this fact too great emphasis can not be placed: If this resolution passes in its present form, foreign women married to citizens will become voters without any of the safeguards of naturalization through court processes.

"Mr. President, how many foreign women are there in the United States?

"The census of 1910 recorded 13,500,000 persons of foreign birth in our population. During the years 1911 to 1914, 3,000,000 more were added, according to the estimate of the Immigration Bureau. This is net—makes allowance for those who returned to their native lands. From 1915 to 1918 it is estimated immigration has been about 300,000 a year, making in these years of the war 1,200,000 immigrants added to our population. The total number of foreign-born persons here would, therefore, seem to be about 18,000,000.

"Mr. President, there are in the United States to-day 5,821,757 women of foreign birth. They are mostly in the large industrial States. I shall not read the statistics relative to them now. Suffice it to say that New York State has 1,296,849; Massachusetts, 526,922; Pennsylvania, 586,085; but that number has been increased by reason of the fact that the figures that I have read are from the census of 1910, and since that time immigration has increased by over 3,000,000. Therefore it is safe to assume that there are nearly 7,000,000 women of foreign birth in this country. I ask to have the letter which I hold in my hand from the Department of Labor giving these statistics inserted in the RECORD.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

"The letter referred to is as follows:

"2 and 3. Section 1994 of the Revised Statutes provides as follows:

"'Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States and who might herself be lawfully naturalized shall be deemed a citizen.'

"Section 4 of the act approved March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1228), which is merely declaratory of section 1994, Revised Statutes, provides as follows:

"'That any foreign woman who acquires American citizenship by marriage to an American shall be assumed to retain the same after the termination of the marital relation if she continues to reside in the United States, unless she makes formal renunciation thereof before a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, or if she resides abroad she may retain her citizenship by registering as such before a United States consul within one year after the termination of such marital relation.'

"4. The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution defines those who shall be deemed citizens by virtue of their birth. Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution gives Congress power 'to establish an uniform rule of naturalization. * * *.' The various provisions of law under this authority will be found in the Revised Statutes.

"Yours, very truly,

"JOHN W. ABERCROMBIE,
"Acting Secretary.

"Hon. J. S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, it will be seen from the foregoing that we already have here a very large number of foreign-born women. Of course, many of these are illiterate, many have had no educational advantages. Another fact that should not be overlooked is this: The tendency to enter into marital relations is marked among these immigrant races. Of course, we know little or nothing about their loyalty and the real allegiance of these women and less about their character; many of them may be anarchists, nihilists, polygamists, yet these women may, simply through the performance of a marriage ceremony, become citizens of the United States.

"Is it not essential that we should write in the Constitution a provision which will enable Congress to pass legislation that will restrict the menace arising from this condition? I do not think the amendment as drawn does this, and I believe that Congress should take the precaution to lay the foundation for protecting the country in this regard. After consultation with the legal advisers of the Immigration and Naturalization Bureaus I am firmly of the opinion that if the amendment should be adopted as drawn it will not be possible thereafter for Congress to remedy the situation described by me by passing legislation. In other words, the constitutional amendment, unless it shall be changed in some such manner as that I suggest, will prevent the passing of any legislation to place any restriction with regard to the exercise of the franchise upon foreign women who have become citizens by marriage.

"This citizenship-by-marriage provision was enacted by the Federal Congress when women could not vote and at a time when Congress had no thought of giving them the vote, its object being to protect property and dower rights and to care for many legal and international questions. To accomplish these purposes Congress conferred the benefit of such citizenship upon such women. Now women are asking for the additional benefit of the right of suffrage—too long denied them—but a changed situation is created, which Cngress should carefully consider before passing a constitutional amendment. The view has been expressed by some lawyers that Congress could afford protection to the elective franchise under this constitutional amendment by hereafter passing statutes naturalizing foreign women married to citizens and worthy of the privilege of voting. Possibly a statute could be passed that hereafter would protect the electorate and compel married women who have become citizens by marriage to be naturalized in a court proceeding before they vote, but I do not believe it.

"To hold that it can is tantamount to holding that the Congress can by statute compel a woman who has already been naturalized by marriage and who has by that process of naturalization become as full a citizen as though born here, to go through another process of naturalization—the court process—before she will be allowed to vote, notwithstanding a provision in the Constitution prohibiting the United States or the several States from denying or abridging on account of sex the right of a citizen to vote. No law will or can be passed hereafter in that regard that will protect the electorate against the unworthy or unqualified women who are given this right under this constitutional amendment unless you lay the foundation in the amendment itself by the use of words that will confer upon Congress the power to do so.

"Perhaps it might be thought that the second section of the article of the amendment proposed in the resolution, providing that the Congress shall have power by appropriate legislation to enforce the provisions of the article, would lay a sufficient foundation for subsequent legislation dealing with the subject I am discussing. But I think that, obviously, such is not the case. The purpose of the second section of this proposed article of amendment is exactly the same as the purpose of section 2 of Article XIII, section 5 of Article XIV, and section 2 of Article XV of the Constitution. Its purpose is to indicate which of the three branches into which our Government is divided is to be charged under the Constitution with the enforcement of the particular article; and it confers a power to enforce—that is, carry out—not a power to modify, regulate, abbreviate, or extend. If it conferred a power of the latter character it would, moreover, be absolutely inconsistent with the first section of the proposed article of amendment.

"I contend that under this amendment providing that the right to vote shall not be abridged or denied on account of sex, the right being conferred when this constitutional amendment is ratified by the States, such right having been created through marriage—which marriage relation is possible because of sex—the moment you attempt to compel these women to go through any additional requirements before they exercise the franchise you will be doing the very thing the amendment prohibits, because you will be abridging the right of a female citizen to vote. Any such statute, if passed, would be unconstitutional. Of course, I do not contend that Congress can not at any time, under the authority conferred upon it by the Constitution to pass uniform naturalization laws, either amend or repeal section 1994 of the Revised Statutes. The power of Congress in this regard is no doubt plenary. This fact might naturally lead some to ask the question, 'Why attempt to cover this point in a constitutional amendment? Why not leave it to Congress to repeal the statute lying at the foundation of the difficulty?' But to such a question there are two sufficient answers.

"In the first place, section 1994, although a statute and therefore open to repeal or revision, is simply declaratory of a principle of law that is almost universally recognized and runs infinitely into important legal questions of both a local and an international nature. It is not likely, therefore, that Congress will ever go so far in amending and extending the naturalization laws as to abandon this principle. And just so long as citizenship can be acquired by women through the performance of a marriage ceremony will there exist the inequalities and evils to which attention has been called.

"In the second place, by such a constitutional provision as that proposed by me, the past as well as the future can be cared for. There are, of course, now in the United States a great many women, formerly foreigners, who have acquired citizenship through marriage. It may be seriously doubted that Congress could legally divest these women of the citizenship already acquired in that manner. The Supreme Court has said, in the Wong Kim Ark decision, already mentioned, that 'the power of naturalization vested in Congress by the Constitution is a power to confer citizenship, not a power to take it away.' But wholly aside from this legal doubt, it would hardly be fair and just to pass a law changing the status of these women from that of citizenship to that of alienage—certainly it would not be just or fair in many of their cases. On the other hand, no unfairness or injustice—and nothing in any sense illegal—is involved in so qualifying the conference of a constitutional right to vote as to make it possible for Congress hereafter to enact legislation requiring those whose citizenship arises merely from marriage to meet, in every substantial respect, before they will be allowed to exercise the right of suffrage, the conditions that males and unmarried females are required to meet before citizenship is conferred upon them.

"Accordingly the purpose I have in mind in inserting in my proposed amendment the provision that 'no female person who is not such a citizen otherwise than by marriage, or who, having acquired citizenship by marriage, has not complied with such requirements and conditions as may be prescribed by Congress, shall exercise such right' is to pave the way for the passage through Congress, in the event that the constitutional amendment should be adopted, of a law which would compel foreign women who acquire citizenship in the instantaneous and unregulated manner of going through a marriage ceremony to meet conditions and requirements similar to those now governing the conference of citizenship through court processes before they would be permitted to stand alongside men and women born here and men and women born abroad and naturalized here in the regular safeguarded manner and cast votes having the same effect in determining the course of government as the votes cast by the native-born and regularly naturalized citizens.

"I repeat, Mr. President, I am in favor of adopting a constitutional amendment which will bring about equality between men and women citizens in the matter of the vote; but I am also in favor of so wording such amendment that we will not perpetuate and increase already existing evils and create new inequalities that could not hereafter be rectified otherwise than by the slow and uncertain method of adopting still another constitutional amendment.

"I ask to append to my remarks, without reading, a statement showing citizenship qualifications for voting in woman-suffrage States.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

"The statement referred to is as follows:

"CITIZENSHIP QUALIFICATIONS FOR VOTING IN WOMAN-SUFFRAGE STATES.

"FULL SUFFRAGE.

"Arizona: Citizens only. (Const., VII–2.)
"California: Citizens only. Naturalized citizens must have been admitted to citizenship 90 days prior to the election. (Const., II–1.)
"Colorado: Citizens only. (Const., VII–1.) 'The same qualifications as to * * * citizenship * * * required by law to entitle male persons to vote shall be required to entitle female persons to vote.' (Courtright's Stat., 1911, sec. 2147.)
"Idaho: Citizens only. (Const., VI–2.)
"Kansas: Citizens and persons who have declared their intention to become citizens. (Const., V–1.) An amendment has been submitted to be voted on at the 1918 election limiting the right to vote to citizens of the United States. (Laws, 1917, c. 353.)
"Montana: Citizens only. (Const., IX–2.)
"Nevada: Citizens only. (Const., II–1.)
"New York: Citizens only. Must have been a citizen for 90 days. A citizen by marriage must have been an inhabitant of the United States for 5 years. (Const. amend., Laws, 1917, p. 2784.)
"Oregon (a senate joint memorial [Laws, 1917, p. 975] has been submitted to Congress requesting 'that equal qualifications be required of and equal privileges granted to each individual voter, irrespective of sex or the marriage relation in the States adopting woman suffrage'): Citizens only. "North Dakota: Citizens only. (Const., V–121; Laws, 1917, c. 254.)
"Rhode Island: Citizens only. (Const. amend., VII; Laws, 1917, c. 1507.)"

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I know that there has been a ruling by the Vice President that no amendment can be offered to the joint resolution, but I had heretofore prepared an amendment, after the word "sex," on line 11, to add the following:

Provided, That no married woman shall be entitled to vote who would not be so entitled if she were a single woman.

Unless we can pass an amendment to our immigration laws to enable us to correct the evil to which I have referred, this proposed constitutional amendment will enfranchise thousands—yes, millions—of alien women who have never taken the oath of allegiance which the male alien is compelled to take, and who have never been compelled to undergo the searching investigation by United States officials, who examine every male applicant for citizenship. We will, therefore, if the proposed constitutional amendment is adopted unamended, enfranchise, through the provision of the Revised Statutes to which I have referred, millions of women without throwing this protection around the electorate. It is a mooted question whether an amendment can be made to the immigration laws, and therefore I feel that here and now is the place for us to write into the fundamental law of the land a prohibition against a condition that no patriotic American citizen wants to see.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I object to unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico desire to be heard before the Chair rules?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] having read the proposed amendment, I presume it is not necessary to have it read again at the desk.

This amendment was presented to the Senate last September, and on that occasion I stated at some length the reasons why I felt compelled to oppose any amendment to the joint resolution. Did I not feel the same way now I should be inclined to waive the parliamentary point of order and permit the Senate to consider the amendment, but it is quite obvious that the vote on the joint resolution itself would be greatly jeopardized if we were to amend it in any particular.

As has been stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], if an amendment were made to the pending joint resolution, it would require it to be again passed upon by the House. The time of this session of Congress is very short, and we feel that the joint resolution itself would be jeopardized by attaching any amendment to it.

As stated on the former occasion, the proposed constitutional amendment in its present form is the same as that which has been presented to the Congress for many years in the past. In a sense it has become sanctified by age, and I know that it would lead to the opposition of the great masses of the women of this country who have been so faithfully and so persistently advocating the passage of this proposed constitutional amendment in its present form.

If it were not for these considerations, Mr. President, I should not raise the point of order; but, under the circumstances, I feel compelled to do so. Therefore I raise the point of order that the amendment can not be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the joint resolution having been ordered to a third reading and having been read the third time, the amendment is not in order. The only question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, the question of woman suffrage has been discussed before this honorable body from every angle. Every Senator has his convictions and doubtless has well fixed in his mind just how he intends to vote when the roll is called; but, Mr. President, having only recently become a Member of the Senate, I desire to avail myself of the opportunity presented to briefly set forth my position on this great question.

I favor giving women the right to vote. As a member of the Louisiana Legislature I voted to submit the question to the people of Louisiana in the form of an amendment to the constitution of the State of Louisiana.

Following the legislative session of 1918 the senatorial campaign was waged for the seat made vacant by the death of Senator Broussard. The question of woman suffrage was not a vital issue in that campaign; but, as a candidate, I announced in public print and from the stump my intention to vote for the amendment to the constitution of Louisiana giving the women of my State the right to vote. I worked for its adoption and voted for it on November 5 last; but, Mr. President, during the campaign I told my people everywhere that should I be elected to the Senate I would vote against the Susan B. Anthony amendment. I consider that statement as binding.

At an extra session of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana held in August, 1918, a joint resolution was adopted memorializing the Congress of the United States to reject the pending amendment to the Federal Constitution, which joint resolution reads as follows:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the people of Louisiana (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to reject the so-called Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Federal Constitution requiring each State to grant suffrage to the female sex without choice or limitation, and authorizing Federal power to enforce the amendment, the said Congress of the United States to declare by this action that the democracy of each separate American State is safe against the force and power of a combination of other American States; and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon our sister States of the Union to likewise declare for State integrity and the safety of American democracy and vigorously oppose Federal interference or control with State franchise; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each House of Congress in the United States.

Mr. President, this, briefly, represents my point of view, and I heartily concur in the principles here set forth.

It is impossible for us who have the racial question to deal with to close our eyes and treat with indifference a problem which has been a boil upon the body politic for more than a generation, and which, happily for the welfare of both races, has been resting quiet for 15 or 20 years by the enactment of just laws in every State of the South.

Under these laws the South is prosperous. Crime has been reduced, and justice is meted alike to both races.

The passage of this amendment would again open an old sore, revive questions pregnant with dangerous consequences to the South, and would in time extend the power of Federal control to male suffrage and cause a most serious situation.

I have no patience with that little band of women, the militant suffragists, who seek notoriety and bring reproach upon the cause which so many noble women have espoused.

There is no denying the fact, Mr. President, that woman is entitled to the same authority in all questions governmental as man. She has risen even higher than ever before in the estimation of mankind through the wonderful sacrifices and patriotism which she has shown in this war, from which we have just victoriously emerged. She should have the same right and expression by the ballot that men to-day exercise, but let that right be given promptly by each sovereign State of our Union.

The eminent jurist from Louisiana, my distinguished predecessor, Senator Guion, stated on the floor of the Senate:

My objection to the amendment now pending in the Senate is that under our form of government the right to give or withhold the privilege of suffrage rests with the States and is not given to the General Government.

Suffrage is a matter of local or domestic concern, to be dealt with by each State, acting in its sovereign capacity in the exercise of the power reserved to the States under the Federal Constitution, and as may best subserve and accord with existing local conditions and without interference by the Federal Government.

Holding these views, Mr. President, and having pledged myself to my people, I will now fulfill that obligation and will record my vote against the pending amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Moses	Smith, Ga.
Baird	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll discloses the presence of 84 Senators. There is a quorum present. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. HOLLIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLIS (when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S name was called). On this question the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN] are paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If the Senator from Kentucky were present, he would vote "yea"; if the Senator from Oregon were present, he would vote "yea"; and if the Senator from Missouri were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I am released from my obligation on this question, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when Mr. GOFF'S name was called). On this question the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] are paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. If the Senator from West Virginia were present, he would vote "yea"; if the Senator from Oklahoma were present, he would vote "yea"; and if the Senator from Tennessee were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). On this question the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and I are paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. If at liberty to vote, the Senator from Utah and I would vote "yea" and the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]; but I understand that he is in favor of the passage of this joint resolution and otherwise paired, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. Owing to the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOLLIS (when Mr. PHELAN'S name was called). On this question the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] are paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. If at liberty to vote, the Senator from California would vote "yea," the Senator from New Mexico would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER (when Mr. REED's name was called). I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is detained from the floor by sickness.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Maryland was called). The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is confined to his home by illness and unable to be present.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], but in view of the announcement made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCNARY. My colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is detained on important public business.

The roll call resulted—yeas 55, nays 29, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas are 55, the nays 29. The joint resolution, not having received the votes of two-thirds of the Senators voting, is rejected.

The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15140.

THE CENSUS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to avail myself of this opportunity to make a brief announcement.

On the 15th day of January the Senate adopted an amendment to the census bill, upon which amendment I submitted some preliminary remarks, not having had an opportunity to fully discuss the amendment. The amendment was adopted in the Senate and rejected by the conference committee. I desire to give notice that when the conference report is presented I shall discuss it at some length. However, as I am compelled to be absent some of the time from the floor of the Senate in committee work I shall appreciate it very much if the chairman in charge of the conference report will send for me if the same shall be brought up during my temporary absence from this body.

THE REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I present, on behalf of the conferees on the part of the Senate, the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the House bill 12863, known as the revenue bill. I wish to state, in connection with filing the report, that upon the request of some conferees on the part of the Senate and other Senators I shall not ask for the consideration of the report at this time, but tomorrow morning as soon as the morning business is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 2, after line 18, to strike out:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

For payment of necessary expenses connected with the organization and conducting of community forums and civic centers in school buildings, including equipment, fixtures, and supplies for lighting and equipping the buildings, payment of janitor service, secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks, including the purchase of one motor vehicle for use of the central office for strictly official business not exceeding $1,200, and maintenance of same, and employees of the day schools may also be employees of the community forums and civic centers, $12,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to say to the Senator having charge of the bill that I had some doubts as to the advisability of striking out this provision when the matter was in the committee, but I had so little information about it that I permitted the bill to be reported with this amendment. I thought at that time this deficiency had probably been incurred largely because of the abnormal conditions in the District of Columbia while the war was going on.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is not a deficiency at all. They still have $6,000 of the $15,000 that was appropriated, which will certainly carry them until the next deficiency bill comes along; and if it is necessary to make any further appropriation, no harm can result by its going over until that time. I myself confess I felt some doubt about it, but I am informed there is not a present deficiency, that there is $6,000 of unexpended money to the credit of this service, and another deficiency bill will be along very soon. I was very anxious to get this bill through, because it will save the Treasury $15,000,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am very glad to hear that statement from the chairman of the committee. While I am not in favor of bureaus or divisions or departments of the Government creating deficiencies regardless of the amount of money that Congress may appropriate, I did think that this work is of such importance, especially under the conditions existing now, that we would hardly be justified in being too strict with this organization. Ordinarily I would not be in favor of this or any other organization for which we have appropriated money that we thought was necessary to carry on the work going on just because its appropriation ran out and proceed as if it had unlimited money to carry on its activities.

As I said, I thought there was some justification even for this organization creating a deficiency at this time, but as the chairman says there is not in fact a deficiency, and they have $6,000 already on hand, and as we know there will be a general deficiency before the end of the month or by the first part of next month, I can not see that the work will be particularly interfered with or cramped. Therefore on that statement of the chairman I shall not oppose the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if striking out this appropriation is going to interfere with carrying on the work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand from the chairman that it will not, that there is in fact the sum of $6,000 still available of the appropriation we made to carry on the work, and that this is really no deficiency at all.

Mr. KENYON. What I want to get at is whether the work can still go on.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no doubt about that. There is no reason in the world why it should not go on. There is $6,000 on hand, and another deficiency bill will be coming along right behind, and the regular bill will not be very far behind that.

Mr. WEEKS. May I ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill? The next item relates to the fire department. I notice in that item the heading "permanent improvements." Why do permanent improvements which seem to be original appear in this deficiency bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand that that appropriation became necessary because of the change from horse-drawn vehicles to motor vehicles.

Mr. WEEKS. It seems to me an appropriation of this kind should appear in the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a deficiency.

Mr. WEEKS. Has the money been spent?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is certified to as an actual deficiency. That is the reason why it is not in the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Why call them "permanent improvements"?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Because the improvement is permanent, but the appropriation was not. That resulted in a deficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the chairman, in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], stated that he desired this bill to be hastened to passage as quickly as possible as it will save the Treasury of the United States $15,000,000,000. That impression has gone out to the people generally throughout the country. In letters that I receive complaining of the passage of the revenue bill raising $6,000,000,000, the writers state their objection owing to the fact that as long as the Treasury has $15,000,000,000 in cash on hand, and more than that, there is no necessity for raising this amount of money.

It ought to be distinctly understood that the money is not in the Treasury of the United States at all for these purposes. There has been a part of it appropriated in the regular way that the departments of the Government can spend unless it is repealed. There is another part, and a major part of it, that are authorizations, where the appropriations have not actually been made, and of course that could not be expended by the Government until an appropriation had been made. What it means is simply that there is no repeal of legislation that has been placed upon an appropriation bill authorizing the expenditure, and there are also direct appropriations amounting to $15,400,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Employees' Compensation Commission," on page 4, line 16, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

Not to exceed $5,000 of the appropriation of $25,000 for carrying on the work of the commission in France, contained in the deficiency appropriation act, approved July 8, 1918, may be expended in the District of Columbia for the purposes named in the act: Provided, That no per diem in lieu of subsistence shall be allowed in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Office of Auditor for War Department," on page 6, after line 14, to strike out:

The bureaus and offices of the Navy Department now housed in the Navy Department Annex on New York Avenue shall be removed therefrom to the Navy Office Building in Potomac Park as soon as possible and the space vacated thereby in the Navy Annex shall be occupied by the office of the Auditor for the War Department: Provided, That rent for the said building for the remainder of the fiscal year 1919 shall be paid by the Marine Corps.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether there are any restrictions in any law as to the compensation that may be paid to those who are employed under this authorization?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is a restriction in the proviso on page 5, beginning at line 15.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is in error. If he will pardon me, that relates to the Treasury Department and the general supplies of that department, whereas the item to which I have invited the Senator's attention——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It applies to the entire appropriation.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I invite his attention to page 6, line 14. It seems to me that there is no limitation provided and the provision to which the Senator refers does not apply.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator from Utah my understanding of the item. It grows out of war conditions, where it was necessary to have a very much larger force than usual for the auditors, and especially for the Auditor for the War Department. It is apparent to anyone that these clerks are not permanent, and therefore no permanent status is taken. It is necessary, not knowing the exact condition, to give a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. KING. Was there anything before the committee which indicated the maximum that would be paid to any employee under the appropriation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not that I know of. The auditor's office of the War Department function under the civil-service requirements, and the assumption is that the clerks will be appointed on the same basis.

Mr. KING. The Senator will keep in mind the fact that in some of the departments, where lump-sum appropriations are made and no restrictions upon the amount of compensation has been provided in the various bills, those having charge of the expenditures have gone into other departments and paid increased compensation and thus drained departments of the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is undoubtedly true, but I do not think that applies to the old departments of the Government. The auditor's office of the War Department is one of the old organizations.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator, if he will pardon me, he is mistaken in that because the complaint was made to me by officials in some of the old departments of the Government. Complaint has been made in that way of the Treasury Department, that many of their competent clerks and employees have been taken away by some of the new bureaus, agents, and instrumentalities created during the war.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is true, but the Senator misunderstood me. I thought he meant that the old organization where they had to get additional clerks for war purposes maintained the old basis of salaries, and this is one of the old organizations and not a new one.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia a question about the item? Is the Navy Department Building on New York Avenue a Government building?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator that the building belongs to private persons. It was rented by the Navy Department for an annex, and now the Navy Department has informed the committee that it can move that portion of its clerical force from that building down to the new building, which belongs to the Government on B and Seventeenth Streets. The purpose was to transfer it to another department. The reason why the committee struck out the paragraph was because in the last part of the bill we propose an amendment appointing a commission to take care of the distribution of space in all public buildings, and we did not want to limit the hands of the commission, if that amendment is agreed to, by an enactment of law in reference to this particular building.

Mr. WEEKS. Is it in this building that the headquarters of the Marine Corps are now located?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; that is, it is the building on New York Avenue right opposite the Emergency Hospital.

Mr. WEEKS. I assume it is under a lease for a year?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is under a lease, but I think that lease is subject to cancellation by the Government.

Mr. WEEKS. The reason why I ask the question is because I think in every case where it is possible a leased building should be given up and the new building which we have constructed should be occupied.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the policy pursued in this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Therefore the fact that it was stricken out of the bill attracted my attention.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama whether the Government would not have to pay rent for this building in the meantime after it is determined that it is no longer of use to the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not sure, but my understanding is that the terms of the contract under which the building is leased can be canceled at the option of the Government. I want the Senator to understand that that is not a positive reply but that is my understanding after making some inquiry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In view of the fact that Congress strikes this provision out of the bill, will the Government feel justified in canceling the lease for the building?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the provision in the last part of the bill providing for a commission to allocate space in the various buildings is passed and the commission determines not to occupy this building, it will have to cancel the lease.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but how long will it be before that commission will meet?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is the commission to be composed of Senators and Representatives?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; it is to be composed of Senators and Representatives.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then, it is likely we shall have to pay six months' rent on the building.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if the House provision should remain in the bill, the building would not be vacated, for it is provided that—

The space vacated thereby in the Navy Annex shall be occupied by the office of the Auditor for the War Department.

The committee felt that there was plenty of office room in the District of Columbia for every department of the Government. It is true that the annex to the Winder Building—and that is what this is—is leased by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in view of the explanation of the Senator from Utah, it seems to me that the amendment is a proper one.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no doubt about it. Not only that, but I think the Government of the United States has the right to cancel a lease which was not made within the session of Congress when payment was begun under it; in other words, that one session of Congress can not bind another to make an appropriation for a lease which was authorized by a previous Congress. I have not looked up the law, but I know from personal experience that the Government has taken that position and has so acted in the past. In the nineties, long before I was in public life, I erected a building in my home city for the Government of the United States, to be used as a courthouse. The plans were drawn by the department, the rooms were located and arranged according to those plans; the vaults were put into the middle of the building, and they ran through every story of the building.

No one would ever have constructed a building such as I then erected without a lease running for at least 10 years. The lease was made for 10 years, but that building was occupied but a few months over a year. Statehood came for our Territory; the Government had no further use for the building; it moved out; and when I asked the officials to live up to their contract they simply said: "The contract is void after the close of the Congress which was in session at the time the building was occupied." I desire to say to the Senator that in order to utilize the building for other purposes it was necessary to change the construction so as to make it almost a new building. In fact, I lost over half the cost of the building through the action of the Department of Justice.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can readily see that that was a great hardship, but I presume that these Government leases all contain a clause providing that upon certain notice—and that notice ought to be of reasonable length, probably six months or a year—the Government shall have the right to cancel the lease of any building.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt even though this language was used in the House, should the office of the Auditor of the War Department be moved into the building the Government could cancel the lease. I think the amendment offered by the committee is absolutely right and just, for I do not want to see the Government of the United States pay a dollar of rent from now on if it is possible to use the buildings which we have, and those buildings cover acres and acres of ground. So far as I am concerned, no further rents shall be paid by the Government of the United States if we have the space to house the different departments, bureaus, and divisions of our Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Contingent Expenses," on page 7, after line 2, to strike out:

For purchase of boxes, book rests, chairs, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $23,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," subhead "Temporary Employees," on page 7, line 23, after the word "demand," to strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$5,000,000," so as to read:

For the temporary employment of such additional force of clerks and other employees as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be proper and necessary to the prompt, efficient, and accurate dispatch of official business in the War Department and its bureaus, to be allotted by the Secretary of War to such bureaus and offices as the exigencies of the existing situation may demand, $5,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish we might have some explanation about this little increase of a million dollars.

Mr. KING. I am going to move to cut it down to three million.

Mr. KENYON. Perhaps it is trivial to inquire about the way we are spending Government money, but I understood we were trying to get rid of some of these clerks. The House allowed $4,000,000 for this item of clerk hire, and it seems to be a rather large increase to raise it to $5,000,000. What is the reason for that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the legislative bill, which is now pending in the Senate, the committee has cut down the number of these clerks; that is, they have refused to make an allowance for next year as to the number of additional clerks. Of course, this item applies to this year up to the 1st of July. There were a great many clerks there, and it was stated to the committee by Gen. Lord, who is acting as the financial agent of the War Department, that he must have $6,000,000 instead of $4,000,000, but after considering the question the committee reduced the amount of the request for an increase by Gen. Lord to $5,000,000; in other words, we gave them a million dollars more than the House did on his statement that he would otherwise fall short.

Mr. KENYON. Was Gen. Lord before the House committee, I will ask the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think he was.

Mr. KENYON. And all of his evidence was given to the House committee, and they allowed only $4,000,000?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They allowed $4,000,000; but after the Senate committee heard Gen. Lord and received a letter from Secretary Baker on this subject, which, if the Senator from Iowa desires me to do so, I shall send to the Secretary's desk and have read, we took this action.

Mr. KENYON. I should be very glad to have the Senator have the letter read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 31, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MARTIN: I feel very strongly that the department will need all of the $6,000,000 which has been estimated for as necessary for the pay of additional temporary employees till June 30, if the limited-service men who have been on duty in the various bureaus are discharged from the service, which in a large number of cases will require the appointment of civilians to replace them.

The estimates submitted to me by the bureaus aggregate nearly $9,000,000, or, to be exact, $8,785,082.85. In my desire to cooperate to the utmost with Congress in securing the reduction of this temporary force now that the great emergency which had called it into existence had in large measure diminished, I made an arbitrary cut of about 32 per cent, reducing it to $6,000,000, which was the amount submitted. I am now inclined to think that if the reduction made is adhered to it will prove more costly to the Government in the end. In the desire to hasten as rapidly as possible the restoration to normal conditions, I perhaps gave too little consideration to the fact that the $9,000,000 estimated for by the bureaus contemplated the necessity of replacing limited-service men on duty in various bureaus. The total number of such men on duty at the time of the signing of the armistice was 5,811. January 1 it had been reduced to 2,823, and the discharge of limited-service men is proceeding steadily under the plan of military demobilization.

The pay roll for additional employees for December was, in round numbers, $1,602,000, and the average number of employees on the roll during that month was 16,111. The net reduction of this force from November 11 to December 31 was 1,506 employees. I am inclosing a table showing that on the basis of a deficiency appropriation of $6,000,000, it would be necessary to separate from the service 6,611 employees by June 30, or at the average rate of over 1,100 a month from January 1. If the reduction should be continued at the same rate, the force would be reduced by November 30, 1919, to 4,000 people, making a reduction of 13,500 in a year's time from the signing of the armistice. It seems to me that, all things considered, such a reduction as this contemplates is the maximum that it would be wise to make at this time, and I feel this all the more strongly because it is clear that the discharge of the limited-service men will necessitate a large number of new appointments, which I did not have immediately in mind at the time I made the arbitrary reduction from $9,000,000 to $6,000,000 in the estimates that were submitted to me by the chiefs of bureaus.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Statement showing the proposed rate of expenditure for additional employees for the balance of this fiscal year based upon a deficiency appropriation of $6,000,000.

Month.	Estimated pay roll.	Average number employees (estimated).	Estimated decrease.
			Pay roll.	Number employees.
December[1]	$1,602,000	16,111	.....	.....
January[2]	1,450,000	14,500	$152,000	1,611
February[2]	1,300,000	13,000	150,000	1,500
March[2]	1,200,000	12,000	100,000	1,000
April[2]	1,100,000	11,000	100,000	1,000
May[2]	1,000,000	10,000	100,000	1,000
June[2]	950,000	9,500	50,000	500
	8,602,000	.....	652,000	6,611
Deduct:
December roll paid	$1,602,000
January 15 roll paid	741,000
Balance of appropriation (approximate)	304,000
	2,647,000
	5,955,000

[1] Actual. [2] Estimated.

The additional force on November 11, 1918, was in round number 17,500. To get down to 9,500 by June 30 will be a reduction of 46 per cent in seven and two-third months or at the rate of about 1,050 a month.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that in his testimony before the committee, on page 13, Gen. Lord made this statement:

As I stated, I called a meeting yesterday of the representatives of the bureaus as to this deficiency, as to this $4,000,000 for the balance of this year, and went over with them very carefully their needs, and went into the items of the particular need that made it necessary that they should have any particular number of additional employees; and the total of their estimate called for 14,252 additional employees between now and June 30.

And then he inserted the table.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Alabama permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Are the 14,000 clerks, which the Senator just mentioned, in addition to the 12,000 or 14,000 or 16,000 which the department now has?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not so understand. But it means that the department had about 15,000 clerks before, and the Secretary now thinks between this time and the end of the fiscal year he will need 14,252. He has lost a number of clerks who were working for the War Department on soldier's pay. Of course there is a very great difference between a typewriter working for $30 a month as a soldier and a typewriter working for $100 or $125 a month as a civilian.

I think I am in accord with the view expressed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] that the number of clerks employed in the departments should be largely cut down; I think the good service of the Government requires that; I think that they have too many clerks; that what we need is more efficiency and fewer clerks; but with the large number of telegrams that are pouring into the War Department about the men in Europe, the large amount of correspondence that is coming there now about the American Expeditionary Forces, I think we should be safer if we allowed this additional million dollars as an actual deficit than we would be to strike it out of the bill. Therefore I want to ask the Senator from Iowa at least to allow the additional million dollars to remain in the bill, so as to allow the matter to go to conference. If in conference we find, after discussing the matter with the other House, that we can get along without it, of course, the Senate conferees will agree that it go out; but if we strike it out now we shall have a hard and fast rule to hold them down to $4,000,000. This is a deficit; it is not something that can be taken care of in the future. We may make a mistake in an appropriation contained in an annual appropriation bill and later in the year, if we have not provided sufficient money, we may make it up as a deficit; but this is a deficiency; and, if we do not give the money, these clerks will have to be discharged.

Mr. KENYON. Is it not true that they are calling for a large number of additional clerks between now and June 30, according to the testimony of Gen. Lord?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think they desire additional clerks.

Mr. KENYON. How could there be a deficiency if these are to be used as additional clerks?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a deficiency incurred in running the department. I think the deficiency is caused to some extent by the discharge from the service of enlisted men who were serving in the clerical force there. It is due also to the fact that Gen. Harris, The Adjutant General of the Army, is calling for, I think, 6,000 clerks to take care of the congested condition of the mail in his office. I do not think it is necessary for us to bring in proof that there is a congested condition in that office.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think there is a congestion of clerks, and I think they would do more efficient work if there were fewer of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am in accord with the Senator, and in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill we refused to authorize many items of this kind. In that bill, however, we can afford to do so, for, if we make a mistake, we can take care of it in the future; but I think it would be unwise to strike out the additional million dollars provided for in this item.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I was unfavorably impressed with the proposition of granting more than $4,000,000 until I made a thorough examination of the situation in the War Department. There have been 1,046 enlisted men on duty in the various offices of the War Department who have left that department since November 11. There was a total number of 4,917 at the date of the signing of the armistice, while on January 31 of this year that number has been decreased, as I have it, by 1,046. The reason for this appropriation, however, is not found in that decrease of 1,046 enlisted men who were there employed. The estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury for $6,000,000 shows that it was to pay for the original demands of the War Department for 14,250 employees for five and one-half months at an average of $1,200 a year, making a total expenditure of $7,838,600. That was, as has been stated, cut down to $6,000,000 in the estimates. Then the House cut that sum to $4,000,000, but the showing made by Gen. Lord was such that the committee thought the safest way was to increase the appropriation by $1,000,000, in view of the work that has been imposed upon the War Department since the signing of the armistice, involving the closing of accounts in France, the transfers there being made, and particularly the work in The Adjutant General's office, which has immensely increased. In fact, Gen. Harris made the statement that unless they had 6,000 additional employees it would be almost next to impossible for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to arrange for the settlements due the injured soldiers and the allotments to the families of soldiers, the delay in connection with which all of us have so bitterly complained of in the past. It was for that reason that I thought perhaps it would be better to give this million dollar increase.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Iowa that when this matter came up before the subcommittee having charge of this bill I think it was the unanimous feeling of the committee that this item should not be increased beyond the amount contained in the bill as it came to us from the House. Gen. Lord and Gen. Harris came before the committee and insisted upon making a showing as to the necessity for it; and they showed so clearly the overwhelming necessity for it, that we added $1,000,000. In my judgment, assuming their statements to be correct—and we have no reason to think they are not—it would have been wisdom on the part of the committee to have given them the $6,000,000 asked for, because they showed clearly that, in their judgment, at any rate, from their knowledge of the conditions in their offices, they would need $6,000,000 between now and the 1st of July in order to do what is actually necessary to be done in connection with the demobilization of the Army and to discharge the work that has been imposed upon the department since the armistice.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. In just a moment. We all know of the complaints that come to us from the country with reference to delays and the failure to hear from the boys, the failure to get information regarding them, and all that sort of thing, and we know of the requests for discharge, and of the letters inquiring why discharges are not made more rapidly. Gen. Lord and Gen. Harris both stated that, unless they got this money, the work in their department would be absolutely demoralized; that it would be so congested that that of itself would cause additional delay and make additional expense. So the committee felt that it was absolutely necessary to make this increase, and, as I have stated, in my judgment, the showing warranted a larger increase than we made.

Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have recently been at the War Department, indeed, I have been there very frequently during the past two or three months, and I have been there a number of times during the past few weeks. According to my observation, many of the clerks are doing but very, very little, and many who are there employed now could be dispensed with. I recall going into one office a few days ago, where I saw seven stenographers who told me they had only had two letters during the entire day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What branch of the War Department was that?

Mr. KING. That was in the munitions building. My observation is that there is a lack of system, a lack of economy in the clerical work of the War Department. I think that it is wrong to give this amount. If I had my way I would cut it down to $4,000,000. I think that if we told Secretary Baker and his aids that $4,000,000 is all they could have the work would be done.

A lady who is at the head of one branch and has some 20 or 30 clerks under her immediate supervision told me that it was difficult to get work out of those who were under her, and that the same condition existed elsewhere in the department. When I asked her why she did not discharge them or recommend for discharge those who are incompetent, inefficient, and inept, or who refused or failed to do their duty, she stated, in substance, that it was a very difficult thing to get anyone discharged, and her intimation was that it would not be approved by those who are her superiors.

From my observation, I make bold to charge that there is gross inefficiency in the War Department. I refer now to the handling of the work by the clerks in the War Department. I will not at this time pretend to state who is at fault, but I think some of the chiefs of divisions and bureaus are censurable for inefficiency and for the waste that is going on in the War Department. I not only hope that the committee amendment will be disagreed to, but, if the opportunity is afforded, I shall move to make this appropriation not more than $4,000,000. I have no doubt in the world that, if the clerks will do their duty and if the higher officials in the department will also do their duty, the work can be done for $4,000,000.

I think it is about time that some of these various departments were taught that they may not create divisions and employ, without limit, any number of clerks that their fancy or caprice impels them to employ and then call upon Congress to make appropriations to pay them. There ought to be some economy in the administration of the affairs of the Government in these various departments. I ask the Senator now if, notwithstanding the pressure of business that is alleged, any of the departments have asked their employees to work eight hours a day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know as to that.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that they have not done so, although the law specifically requires that they shall do so when there is a pressure of business?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, the law authorizes the heads of the departments to require the clerks to work overtime if necessary, but I do not know that any orders have been issued of that nature. I do know, however, that I have been informed by some of the heads of some of the bureaus in the Quartermaster General's Office—I do not know what the conditions are in other branches of the War Department—that they have asked their clerks to work overtime and that the clerks have done so, and have done so cheerfully.

Mr. KING. That is the only branch of the public service here, to my knowledge, where such a policy has been pursued.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be true. I have no doubt that there is much basis for the suggestions and the criticism the Senator makes. I do not know that, however, from personal knowledge or personal observation. I do know that I have been brought in contact with some of the officials of the Quartermaster General's Office and, in my judgment, that office is being handled just about as efficiently as it is possible to do it under the circumstances; that is, I am satisfied that the head of that branch or division of the War Department is doing everything in his power to do his work efficiently. I know that he does not want to stay in the Army; I know that he does not want to stay in the position that he is in, and that he is staying there simply as a patriotic duty. He may not be efficient; I do not know; I believe that he is, and I believe that he is handling the work about as well as any man could handle it.

I think I appreciate the difficulties that the head of a department or the head of a great organization in the War Department must face in trying to get effective service out of his subordinates. Of course, that depends very largely upon the ability and the executive capacity of the heads of the bureaus, their relationship with their employees, and the feeling that exists between them and their employees. One man will get splendid service out of a corps of a hundred men and women under him while another man would probably not get half the work out of the same force. I have been in some branches of the Quartermaster General's office and, so far as my observation could go, good work was being done and everybody seemed to be busy. Just what they were accomplishing, of course, I can not say; and the committee, my recollection is, had no information as to the needs of any branch of the War Department except the Quartermaster General's office and The Adjutant General's office. Unless we are absolutely and wholly to discredit these men, we must give them this money or run the risk of disorganizing the service.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator whether this information came before the House committee, and if so, how does it happen that they made the amount $4,000,000?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know.

Mr. KENYON. According to the letter of the Secretary of War the amount must be $6,000,000 to save the force from being demoralized.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think the Secretary knows very much about that. He just gets his information from the other officials; but I want the Senator to bear this in mind: I think it would have been better for us to have made it $6,000,000, and I do not believe that the letter of the Secretary was laid before the subcommittee. I do not remember ever hearing of that letter before; but the Secretary states that the recommendations to him amounted to about $9,000,000, and he simply cut that amount, arbitrarily, 33 per cent. In other words, he had absolutely no reason whatever for cutting it down unless he distrusted the capacity and the ability of those who submitted the estimate to him to submit a proper estimate. If these are the right kind of men, who know what they are doing, we ought to have the right to think that their estimate of $9,000,000 is more nearly what will actually be necessary for them to do the work that they have to do than $6,000,000. This $6,000,000 was simply arrived at, in an arbitrary sort of way, by cutting off 33 per cent.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is not that so about every request that comes to us?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think very likely it is.

Mr. KENYON. An arbitrary sum is fixed, and we are told that if they do not get it things are going to be demoralized; and so we go ahead and vote whatever they ask.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, no; I do not know of any item that has been before the Appropriations Committee for which the necessity was so clearly shown as this item, unless we are not to place any reliance whatever on these men who come down before us. Gen. Lord and Gen. Harris were there. Gen. Lord, who made the principal statement before the committee, impressed me as a patriotic man. He impressed me as a man who is trying to get the very best possible service out of the force in his department, and he impressed me as a man who knows something about the work he has to do. I may be mistaken about it, but that is the way it impressed me.

It may be that the clerks under him are not doing the work that they ought to do. I do not know about that; but that is a matter of administration that will have to be cared for in an administrative way. We can not make clerks do more work by simply cutting down appropriations. If they are not doing the work they ought to do, they ought to be dismissed and clerks put in who will do it; and if the bureau chiefs are not looking after their clerical help as they ought to do it, then they ought to be gotten rid of. When the head of a department that has to do with the discharging of these men and sending them to their homes as quickly as possible comes in here and says that unless this money is appropriated the work can not be done, I think we ought to discharge our responsibility and provide the money, and then place the responsibility of failure where it really belongs.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to ask the Senator if either of these generals appearing before the committee specified the bureaus or divisions in their department in which the work is in arrears, where these clerks are needed, and where demoralization will result if they are not provided?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Practically in all their lines of work. The Quartermaster General's office has a certain line of work in connection with demobilization and in connection with the Army. I do not know the exact scope of it, but I took it that it applied to their work generally, to each of these two divisions or departments, or whatever they may be called.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, this is another one of those cases in which Congress is told, "If I do not receive this ungrudgingly, I shall not know how to deal with other more important matters," and then no information is given us as to what those other more important matters are?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President; that is not correct. That is correct in the case of some of the requests that come from some of the executive branches of the Government, but it is not correct with reference to this particular item or request of the Quartermaster General's office. Gen. Lord did not refuse to answer a single question of the committee. He came there and was ready to give us all the information that we asked for. He explained just as fully as the committee saw fit to allow him to go into the matter. If we had seen fit to ask him with reference to the particular bureaus or particular bureau chiefs, or the duties of a particular bureau or a particular bureau chief, I have not any doubt in the world but that he would have gone into it fully. There was no attempt at concealment on his part at all.

Mr. MOSES. If, in my absence, the Senator has given the information which I am about to ask for, I will not ask him to repeat it; but did the committee elicit from either of these generals—Gen. Lord or Gen. Harris—the number of clerks now employed in their branches of the department, and how many more could be employed for the additional $1,000,000?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that they stated about the number of employees they have, although I am not sure; but Gen. Lord did state, according to my recollection, that they would need from 13,000 to 14,000 more clerks between now and the 1st of July to do the work that they felt they would have to do in order to anything like keep up with the demands in connection with the demobilization of the troops. I think about six or seven thousand of those would be required for The Adjutant General's Office, and the remainder for the Quartermaster General's office. I think that is the statement he made. Those would be the employees, not for the $1,000,000 but for the $6,000,000 that they asked for. The House gave them $4,000,000, and we gave an additional $1,000,000, making it $5,000,000 to take care of these employees.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I am not competent to speak for Gen. Lord, but so far as Gen. Harris's office is concerned I have not noticed any very considerable delay in replying to communications which I have sent there. On the contrary, I think the replies from The Adjutant General's Office have been more prompt and more satisfactory than from any other of the offices in the War Department with which I have had occasion to do business; and in view of the information which I have growing out of my own experience in conducting business with The Adjutant General's Office, I can not see how additional money could advance that work very much. When one can make inquiry about an individual in an Army as large as ours and receive a detailed reply in three or four days, as I have most frequently in addressing inquiries there, I should think that was nearly the acme of expedition in sending out and giving information.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say to the Senator that it used to be so that when we sent a letter to The Adjutant General's Office one day we got a reply the next day. That was almost uniformly true.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator now the number of employees that there were in the department on November 1, 1918, and the estimated number that will be required during the balance of the fiscal year.

On November 1, 1918, there were employed in the War Department 17,156. It is estimated that there will be employed an average, during the fiscal year 1920, of 10,140 additional employees over and above the number that were originally employed in the War Department before the declaration of war; and now it is estimated that they will require for the balance of this fiscal year, up to June 30, 1919, 14,586.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I draw from the encyclopedic knowledge of the Senator from Utah whether this augmented number of employees will be required after the 30th day of June, and if so, how long?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator desires, I can give the number that will be required after June 30 in every office, as I have it here; but it would take too long a time. I wish to say, however, that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, it is estimated that over 15,000 employees will be required in the War Department; and in that connection, Mr. President, if the legislation is passed that has been asked for by the introduction of bills in the House and in the Senate—and I will admit that I introduced, at the request of the adjutant general of my State, a similar bill, not knowing what it was going to cost the Government of the United States when I introduced it—if that legislation passes, requiring the Government of the United States to compile information as to the complete record of every soldier who was in the war, whether serving in this country or in France, and send that information to the adjutant general of every State, it will take over 1,000 additional employees to do it.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah has, in compact tabulated form, the information of which he speaks, showing the number of employees who will be required in all of the different bureaus after the close of the present fiscal year, will he be good enough to put it in the RECORD in connection with his remarks? He need not bother to read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask, then, that there may be printed in connection with what I have stated, if the Senate has no objection, this tabulated statement, showing the total additional number of employees January 31, 1919, the total enlisted men employed January 31, 1919, the grand total employed, and then the estimated number for the balance of the year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement showing number of additional employees and enlisted men on hand in the various offices of the War Department January 31, 1919, and number of additional employees required for balance of year (5½ months).

14,252 employees for 5½ months, at $1,200 per year, $7,838,600.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a word, and I am through.

I do not know how it is with other Senators, but I know that my work has more than trebled since the armistice was signed. The requests coming from parents with reference to their boys, repeated over and over again, and requests from boys to get out, have more than trebled since the armistice came on. Now, if my work has trebled and the work of other Senators has trebled in that way, I can very easily see how the work of the War Department must have been very greatly increased; and it will continue until we reach the peak and begin to go down on the other side of getting these boys out of the Army.

Mr. President, if there is any increase as to the necessity of which I have been satisfied upon the showing made by the men who were responsible for the work that must be done, it is the increase that we have made here; and the only fear I have is that we have not given them an ample increase to discharge the burdens that will be placed upon them.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to add a word to what has been said relating to this paragraph. I am not confident that it is necessary to add a million dollars to it. I have not given that matter careful consideration, and I do not know that it can be done at this time; and yet I want to say that in my judgment, if there were a proper redistribution of employees from one bureau to another in the War Department, it would not be necessary to add anything to the appropriation.

There were 1,500 employees in the casualty office at the end of the war. On the 27th of November the Chief of Staff announced, as the result of a cablegram from Gen. Pershing, that there were 264,000 casualties in the Army. Naturally, there have been a few from disease since that time; but there have been practically 240,000 casualties now reported to the public, and I presume by the end of February or some time in March that number will have been covered. Then, there will be 1,500 employees who can not be required for that particular service, and I want to suggest to Senators that unless Congress cuts off these employees they will be continued in the positions which they hold as long as there is a possible excuse to keep them there.

I was informed not long ago that in looking around for quarters in the District of Columbia at the beginning of the war, when there was great demand for additional accommodations, somebody found, out in the southwest section of the city, a considerable number of men and women employed in compiling and sorting records of the War of 1812, 108 years before. That is simply indicative of what we will have from this very much greater war unless Congress is assured that men and women are discharged when their services are not absolutely essential to the Government. I do not think we can depend upon the heads of bureaus to take that step in all cases. I think it must be taken by cutting off the appropriations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I saw the other day a report purporting to emanate from the Government, in which it was stated that there had only been a reduction of 3,000 employees in all of the departments since the armistice from the peak which had been reached during the progress of the war; in other words, that there were only 3,000 less now than there were when the highest number of employees were in the various departments of the Government; and in some of the departments they have increased the number.

Mr. WEEKS. What the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has stated is undoubtedly true in the cases of many Senators; and yet that condition must be getting better every day as men are discharged from the service. The correspondence which the Senators and Representatives and the department are having will gradually decrease; and there should be some means of compelling a gradual decrease, at the same rate, of the number of employees who may not be needed.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator having this bill in charge, referring to the department to which the Senator from Massachusetts has just referred, the casualty department, in which it was stated that there were 1,500 clerks employed, whether this bill makes provision for compensation for them in any way; whether there is any deficiency claimed with respect to that department?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There was no testimony before the committee with reference to those particular clerks; and of course any clerks that are on the rolls are being paid out of sums that were appropriated in the past. This additional appropriation has nothing to do with that proposition.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether there is any provision in any appropriation bill or in any other enactment requiring these various heads of departments to dismiss and discharge their employees when they cease to have sufficient work for them to do?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from Utah that if we ever get this bill through, we will do more to clear up the situation he is talking about than any bill that has ever been before Congress, because, while the first two pages of this bill take care of deficiencies, the last pages of the bill cover back into the Treasury cash that has already been appropriated for the Army to the amount of $6,856,835,124.70, and to the Navy $334,361,866.98, making a total of cash covered back into the Treasury, in the Army and Navy Departments, of $7,191,196,991.98. The bill also cancels the following contractual obligations that are now outstanding: For the Army, $8,190,629,294.70; for the Navy, $31,000,000; making a total of contractual obligations that are being canceled by this bill of $8,221,029,294.70; or a total cancellation of cash that is covered back into the Treasury and contract obligations that are canceled of $15,412,266,286.38.

I know of no more effective way of limiting abuse in the expenditure of money than to put it back in the Treasury, and this bill is accomplishing more along that line than any piece of legislation that ever passed the Congress of the United States; so that the question of the smaller items that we are discussing now is insignificant in comparison with what will be accomplished if we are enabled to pass the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. KING. Of course the figures to which the Senator has just called attention were based upon appropriations made and contracts authorized, but which appropriations have not been contracted for or expended, and which the War Department, or the various other departments to which the credits were given, would not proceed to expend, or contract to expend, even though this bill were not enacted into law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The presumption, of course, is as the Senator says, but we are turning this money back into the Treasury so that there will be no presumption about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Not back into the Treasury. We have not got the money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, we are canceling the cash obligations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, some Senators were called out, and they asked, if this matter came to a vote before they got back, to have a quorum called. I promised them I would do it, so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Baird	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smoot
Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Spencer
Colt	Kellogg	Page	Sterling
Cummins	King	Penrose	Sutherland
Curtis	Kirby	Poindexter	Thomas
Dillingham	La Follette	Pollock	Trammell
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pomerene	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gay	Lodge	Robinson	Walsh
Gerry	McCumber	Saulsbury	Warren
Hale	McKellar	Shafroth	Weeks
Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Wolcott
Henderson	Moses	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] on official business. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 9, after the word "each," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions appropriated for herein, if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this provision in relation to the reemployment of soldiers was stricken out because it was a mere limitation on the appropriation in this bill, and has been put by the House as a limitation on the appropriations in other bills. In the legislative bill instead of leaving it as a limitation on the appropration, we changed it so that it would be a matter of general law and would not have to be carried on every bill. We thought at the time the legislative bill was reported that it would go through first, and therefore this should be stricken out; but in order that there may be no mistake about it, if there is no objection, I will move to amend it so that it will conform to what was the recommendation of the committee in reference to the legislative bill and make it the existing law for all bills. I move to amend by striking out of the bill the words reported to be stricken out by the committee and add a period after the word "each" in line 9, page 8, and then to insert the following language as a separate paragraph:

That all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions, if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

That is what the House passed, except that the House passed it as a limitation on an appropriation. We recommend it as a permanent piece of legislation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," subhead "Contingent expenses," on page 10, line 6, after the words "Navy Department," to strike out "$2,570.84" and insert "2,614.84," so as to make the clause read:

For rental of additional quarters for the Navy Department, $2,614.84.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 21 on page 15.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question in regard to these items. I have seen it stated that under this bill we save $15,000,000,000. I see very large appropriations here. How is that saving effected?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They are appropriations made heretofore by law which are revoked.

Mr. LODGE. It revokes the other appropriations?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. These are additional appropriations. These are deficiencies, and in the bill later on there is a repeal.

Mr. LODGE. I had not looked at that part of the bill. I wanted to know where those appropriations have been revoked.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We shall come to it in a very little while.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Massachusetts will turn to page 20, line 6, he will see where the repealing clause commences in reference to these appropriations.

Mr. LODGE. I will wait until we get to that page, and then I will ask the Senator about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the chairman if these large amounts on page 15 are all deficiencies.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They are actual deficiencies. They have been actually incurred and estimated and certified as such.

Mr. SMOOT. They apply to different departments of the Navy from those where more than was necessary was appropriated.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Those where more than was necessary was appropriated are repealed, and these departments have fallen short of what they actually had to have?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is the case.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to page 19, on line 7. The last paragraph read being as follows:

To pay the widow of Jacob E. Meeker, late a Representative from the State of Missouri, $7,500.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer an amendment and call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it. I move to strike out lines 6 and 7, on page 19, and to insert:

To pay to the legal guardian of Dolan Meeker, Naomi Meeker, Miriam Meeker, and Louise Meeker, minor children of Jacob E. Meeker, late a Representative from the State of Missouri, $7,500.

I think the chairman of the committee is familiar with the exceptional circumstances in this case, and I will ask the chairman if he feels that he is in a position to accept the amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hesitate very much to make a change about a matter that belongs peculiarly to the House. Under the comity between the two Houses each is expected to control its own expenditures. This is for the family of a deceased Member of the House, and it seems to me that the House membership ought to be in a better position and better entitled to determine the disposition of the fund than the Senate could be.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the Senator declines to accept the amendment. Am I correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I would rather not. I am entirely without information on the subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am perfectly well aware of the custom which prevails in Congress of paying the widows of deceased Members of Congress $7,500. It is general legislation, and it is, of course, based upon the assumption of dependency. I stated that the facts in this case are exceptional. Under the facts which, I think, are known to practically every Member of the Senate I believe these minor children should have the benefit of this provision and that this appropriation should not go to the widow. The facts, as I understand them——

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator from Arkansas know that Mr. Meeker at his death left $30,000 of insurance, $10,000 of which was used to pay his debts and $20,000 for the minor children, the widow securing none of the insurance?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. The only provision for the widow, if it is allowed to stand, being this provision which the House has inserted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. I was just about to state that some time prior to his death Mr. Meeker was divorced from a former wife and left the four children whom I have named in the amendment, the youngest being 5 years of age. He did carry, as I am informed by a letter from the former widow, policies of insurance for the benefit of his minor children. His estate was badly involved. Seven hours before his death, in anticipation of his death and for the express purpose of depriving his legal heirs—those who otherwise would have been his legal heirs—of this provision he married his former clerk.

Those are the circumstances, extremely exceptional, which I believe make it the duty of Congress to see that this money goes to those who were in fact dependent upon Jacob E. Meeker and to whom he owed an obligation.

I do not know that there is anything further I can state concerning the matter. My information is that when the allowance which, under the statutes of Missouri, goes to his widow has been paid, when her dower interest in his personal property has been paid to her, there will be very little left except the insurance to provide for the minor children. The mere fact that he made some inadequate provision for the support of the children does not, in my judgment, justify Congress in setting the precedent which would be set in this case if this amendment is not adopted.

The matter was not called to the attention of the House of Representatives. Twenty-five Members of the House have solicited me to offer this amendment, and I do it in the firm conviction that the Senate has a duty in this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator any information as to whether this is a statutory allowance or is it just a custom of the two Houses that has grown up?

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no statute. It is a pure gratuity which the Congress has customarily granted to the dependents of a dead Member, and if it has any justification in reason or in principle it is the obligation of Congress to pay it to those who were dependent upon the deceased Member.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are the children minor children, and how many are there?

Mr. ROBINSON. They are minor children and they are four in number. I can give the ages as represented to me: Dolan, 17 years; Naomi, 17 years; Miriam, 9; and Louise, 5.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long had he been divorced?

Mr. ROBINSON. I can not state. That is all I desire to submit upon the subject.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I hold no brief for Mrs. Meeker in this case. I did not know the matter was coming up, but I do know the facts in the case. Mr. Meeker was my friend, and the Representative in Congress from the city where I live.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is misinformed as to the facts. It is true that seven hours before Mr. Meeker died he married a lady who had been employed in his office, but it is not true that the marriage was for the purpose of giving any estate away from the children, because the marriage had been arranged and a home had been arranged and furnished in Washington weeks before. The marriage had been arranged for November, which was four or five weeks after the Representative died.

Mr. McKELLAR. Whatever the purpose or whether there was any such purpose, would not the ordinary and natural effect of the marriage just before his death take this $7,500 away from the minor children?

Mr. SPENCER. The reason that would appeal to my mind would be the fact that long before his death a house had been secured and furnished for their occupancy upon their marriage, which was to have occurred late in November had not death intervened. That had all been arranged, the marriage was fixed, and then when Mr. Meeker suddenly without warning was taken ill and the doctors said he was upon the eve of death he called in the judge of one of the circuit courts to perform the marriage ceremony.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the Senator to say that as a matter of fact the date for the marriage had been set at a time which was actually subsequent to the time of the death of the Congressman who, in anticipation of death and knowing that he was probably to die, arranged to consummate the marriage earlier?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator is quite right. A house has been furnished and everything that the Senator and myself would be expected to do previous to marriage has been arranged between these two. There was nothing unusual in it. The only unusual circumstance in connection with the matter was that death intervened, and on the eve of death the man himself sought to have the marriage ceremony performed sooner than it would otherwise have been performed.

Mr. ROBINSON. What was the object of that?

Mr. SPENCER. I presume it was to get married.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator makes a jest of a very solemn matter. The Senator has said that the man knew he was within a few hours of his death, and I think the Senator can not seriously say that he expected this lady to perform the obligation and the relationship of a wife to him in fact.

Mr. SPENCER. If I may answer the Senator, the thing that appealed to me and appeals to me now is that every ordinary provision for marriage had been made before his sickness, which to my mind absolutely controverts any idea of marriage upon the deathbed merely for the purpose of taking away from the children the money which otherwise might have been expected to go to them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. What provision did he make for his little children?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Utah evidently was out of the Chamber when I answered that question previously. Mr. Meeker left $30,000 of insurance. Ten thousand dollars of the insurance was used to pay his debts. Every dollar of the remaining $20,000 went to the children and not one dollar to the widow. It is but fair that the record should show that long before his death Mr. Meeker, in taking up the question of this insurance, suggested that the insurance policies be transferred to the woman whom he was about to marry, and upon her solicitation the insurance was allowed to remain where it was at the hour of his death—payable entirely to his children. Outside of that insurance money I am informed there is a piece of land heavily encumbered, but, as my information goes, of substantially no value. So the only thing the man left was his insurance and this possible contingent gratuity which might come from Congress and which is now in question.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Do I understand from the Senator that it was the desire of Mr. Meeker to deprive his children of this insurance and it was on the protest of the lady who afterwards became his wife that that desire was not carried out?

Mr. SPENCER. The information as it comes to me is that the insurance, all payable to his children, ought in fairness to have had some division in connection with it, the same provision that would have been made by law if it had not been insurance but had been property otherwise. I understand it was Mr. Meeker's intention not to cut out the children, but to proportion the amount between the children and his wife, because a part of the insurance money which went to pay his debt was to pay an allowance which the court had made to his former wife, and that of course was paid in full.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] whether it would not be an equitable distribution of this $7,500 to give one half of it to the widow and the other half to the children. That is the way in which it would be distributed if the person had died in my State without any will. In view of the fact that at present there is no law which controls it, and inasmuch as it is subject to our discretion as to what shall be done with it, I believe it would be fair to give to the wife one half and to the children the other half.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I really know nothing in the world about the moral obligation which Mr. Meeker owed to his wife and to his children. We have had no opportunity or occasion to investigate those obligations. All we know is that if there is anything about which the two Houses of Congress are jealous it is the right of each House to control its expenditures for its own Members. Mr. Meeker was a Member of the House, and the House has made such disposition of this matter as it saw fit. It seems the children already have $20,000, and all the widow can possibly get is this gratuity from Congress. Mr. Meeker saw fit to make this lady his wife, and she is now his widow. He was a Member of Congress, and he no doubt knew the custom of Congress in this respect. At any rate, the responsibility is on the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives has given this money to the widow, and if that is not done by the Senate it will be a violation of the comity that for many years has existed between the two Houses and will no doubt lead to acrimonious controversy when the conference committee meets. I hope the Senate will observe the long-established rule and permit the House to dispose of this matter as it sees fit.

Mr. ROBINSON. The logic of the statement of the Senator from Missouri is not forceful. This is the first exception, the first controversy, that has ever arisen concerning the subject. I say that every consideration of justice, every consideration of honor and recognition of the obligations that ordinarily control men in public life, make it your duty and my duty, when we are voting away public money for the benefit of dependents of a deceased Congressman, to vote it to those who were dependent upon him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for a division.

The question being put, on a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if it is necessary, I want to give notice that the matter will be again brought up in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri reserves the amendment for a separate vote in the Senate.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 15, on page 20, the last clause read being as follows:

REPEAL OF APPROPRIATIONS AND AUTHORIZATIONS, MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

SEC. 2. That the following unexpended balances or portions of unexpended balances or combined or unexpended balances or combined portions of unexpended balances of appropriations for the support of the Military Establishment contained in appropriation acts or for fiscal years enumerated in this section shall be carried to the surplus fund and be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act, namely.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the items that now follow in the bill are the amounts covered back into the Treasury?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been asked by a number of Senators to make a brief statement showing when the appropriations named in the pending bill are repealed and, taking into consideration the amount of the appropriations that were made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, what the balance of appropriations would be. Briefly stated, it is as follows:

The total appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, amounted to $36,119,536,082.75. The pending bill repeals items to the amount of $15,400,186,239.38, leaving a net total of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, after deducting this $15,400,186,239.38, as provided for in this bill, of $20,719,349,843.37. In the pending deficiency bill there is appropriated $295,244,329.45, making the total appropriations, less the amount of $15,400,186,239.38, $21,014,594,172.82. That, Mr. President, is the total of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, as they now stand. That, I will say, includes not only the direct appropriations, which are called "cash appropriations," but it also includes the appropriations which are authorized.

Mr. President, it is estimated that the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, will be $18,000,000,000. Upon that estimate will be based the amount of the next liberty loan; in other words, $18,000,000,000 is supposed to be all that can be expended by the United States Government during the present fiscal year. So, Mr. President, there is no danger whatever in the deduction of these amounts from the amount that was appropriated for the year, for it will be noticed that, with all the repeals, there still remains appropriated $21,014,594,172.82, or $3,000,000,000 more than the actual estimates for the expenses of the Government for this year.

I will frankly admit that, when I first read over the bill and noticed the repeals, I thought perhaps in some particulars we were going too far; but I am now quite convinced that we could have gone $3,000,000,000 further, and never in any way have interfered with the successful carrying on of the finances of our Government.

At the request of a number of Senators I have put these figures in concise form, so that anyone who desires to refer to them may do so without hunting for and figuring out the totals in the different appropriation bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] has reserved an amendment for a separate vote in the Senate. The question is on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. [A pause.] They are concurred in, without objection. The question now is on concurring in the amendment reserved by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, is the amendment which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole, on which I reserved a separate vote, now before the Senate for consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is whether the amendment shall be concurred in.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there are several Senators now present who were not here when the question was decided as in Committee of the Whole. Very briefly I have this to say——

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Spencer
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Cummins	Kellogg	Page	Swanson
Curtis	King	Pomerene	Thomas
Fletcher	La Follette	Ransdell	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Robinson	Underwood
Gay	Lewis	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Hale	Lodge	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Hardwick	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Henderson	McKellar	Sherman	Watson
Hitchcock	McNary	Simmons	Wolcott
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on concurring in the amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, found on page 19 of the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, on page 19 the House of Representatives made an allowance of $7,500 to the widow of Jacob E. Meeker. The Senate, in Committee of the Whole, changed the allowance from the widow and made it payable to the four children of Mr. Meeker by a former marriage.

The facts in the case are precisely these: Mr. Meeker was serving his third term in the House. He was divorced from his wife, who had borne him four children. His divorced wife and the four children are still living. Alimony, substantial in character, was awarded in that divorce proceeding and was paid.

Some months before Mr. Meeker's death—just how long I do not know—he had planned to marry a lady who was in his employ. The house in Washington was selected, the furniture was bought; and when, suddenly, sickness of serious character laid Mr. Meeker low and the doctors told him that death was near, in the full possession of his faculties he summoned Judge Garesche, of the circuit bench, whom I well know and with whom I have talked about this matter—and that conversation is largely the reason of what I am saying here to-day—who assured me that Mr. Meeker was in the full possession of his faculties and remained so for some hours afterwards; and upon those facts he was married upon his deathbed to this woman, and he died seven hours afterwards.

Mr. Meeker's estate consisted substantially of $33,000 of life insurance. And I ask particular attention to these figures, Mr. President, for in my judgment the crux of the whole matter lies here. Three thousand dollars of that total of $33,000 of life insurance went to his former wife, besides $8,000 of additions, making $11,000 to his former wife; $20,000 went to the four children. His present wife did not receive one dollar of it. The remaining $10,000 was used to pay the debts of the estate, and his present wife did not receive one dollar of it. As I am informed, in addition to the life insurance, all that he had was an equity in a farm, heavily encumbered, of which equity four-fifths would belong to his children and one-fifth would belong to the present wife. So that we have this result: If this gratuity—for there is no law for it—of $7,500 which the House has voted to the widow of this man is denied her, she goes out as the widow of the man without a single dollar, and the money which, by custom at least, has always gone to the widow, so far as I know, irrespective of the calendar arrangement of the marriage, is given entirely to the children.

I think that is unfair. I think that the woman, right or wrong, whom Mr. Meeker chose for his wife, and married, is entitled to the allowance which always has gone to the wife of the man upon his death.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, inasmuch as a number of Senators have entered the Chamber since this amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole, the amendment being reserved for a separate vote in the Senate, I feel it appropriate to state the grounds which, in my judgment, justified me in offering this amendment, and which I think make it our duty to concur in it.

This case is exceptional. It is perhaps the first instance in which a controversy has arisen in the Congress as to the payment of a gratuity to the dependents of a dead Congressman. There is no statute authorizing such payments. It is the custom to make these appropriations, and I think it has been the universal custom to make the appropriation to the widow. There is no wide divergence or difference as to the facts as stated by myself and the Senator from Missouri, as I understand him to state the facts.

Mr. Meeker and his former wife were divorced. By that marriage he had four minor children, the oldest being 17 and the youngest 5. Seven hours before his death, for the purpose of giving her the benefit of this gratuity, he married a lady who had been formerly a clerk in his office.

My position can be stated in a moment.

In voting public money to dependents of deceased Members of Congress it is the duty of Congress to make it available for those who were in fact dependent upon the deceased Congressmen. The undisputed facts are that the lady who is his widow did not occupy the relationship of wife to him; she was not dependent upon him; she earned her own living when she worked in his office, and she earns her own living now when she works in the office of another Congressman; but these children, who are flesh of his flesh and blood of his blood, are entitled to whatever gratuity Congress may see fit to bestow upon his dependents.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say a single word about the practice of the two Houses.

It is an unwritten but very rigid rule that neither House should interfere with the appropriations made by the other exclusively for its own purposes. I have known one or two cases on a deficiency bill where an appropriation had been omitted by the House, and they would come in at the last moment, at the close of a session, and ask us to put it in; and that was done officially by the proper representatives of the committee. I think, Mr. President, it would be a very unfortunate thing to undertake to amend a provision of the House for one of its own Members on what is obviously a disputed question.

I am not going to discuss the merits of the matter, though I must say I think the case presented by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] is quite unanswerable; but that is neither here nor there. My sole point is that we ought not to take such a step as this, and I agree entirely with the Senator from Virginia on that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in? [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for a division.

On a division the amendment was nonconcurred in.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, is an amendment to this paragraph in order now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Any amendment is in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move to strike out "$7,500," at the end of line 7, page 19, and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,750" and the words "and to his children $3,750."

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator state that amendment again?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The amendment would give the widow $3,750 and his children $3,750.

Mr. President, if Mr. Meeker had died and this had been a part of his estate, in my State that would have been the exact division to which the persons who are next of kin would be entitled. In other words, in my State the widow gets one-half and the children get one-half. Inasmuch as this is a gratuity we have a right to apportion it in any way we deem proper.

As I understand, the matter was not the subject of discussion in the House. The question which has been raised by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] was not presented in any manner; and if this amendment prevails the conferees can examine into the matter more closely. But as we are making this appropriation for the purpose of giving to those who are dependent upon this man $7,500, we can make no mistake, it seems to me, in giving to the widow one-half and to the children one-half. That is the way it would have gone to them, in the absence of any will, in my State.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Can the Senator tell me whether Congress ever has divided up these gratuities or whether they have always been granted to the widow?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. I have not looked into that question. My impression is that Congress has made a change in some of the beneficiaries. What I mean by that is, if my recollection serve me right, they have in some instances given the gratuity to the executor or to the administrator; but I do not think there has been any action to change the beneficiary from the widow to any other person.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The cases the Senator has in mind were cases where there was no widow, and the gratuity went to the estate, were they not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I think in another instance the children were made the beneficiaries when there was no widow.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not doubt that. What I was asking was, Does the Senator know of any case where there was a widow where the allowance was not made to her?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that I have just heard of this matter within the last hour, and I have not looked up the matter at all. I do not know the precedents, nor do I pretend to, except from general remembrance of some things that occurred in past Congresses.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will say that my experience on these bills has been that wherever there was a widow the fund has always gone to the widow, and where there was not a widow it has gone to the children, but never to anyone else aside from those who were dependents.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, because his experience on appropriation bills is greater than mine, the question of dependency never arises at all, as I understand. The allowance is given to the widow or children whether they are dependent or not. They may have independent property.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely. Congress has never looked into the question of how much independent estate was left. It is a gratuity that has gone to the widow through all time, and when it subsequently turned out that there was no widow it went to the children, and that is all there is to it. To make any change in this respect would be an entire change of precedent.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me the method proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] is open to the same objection that I have made before. I think we ought to observe the usual relation of comity between the two Houses in a matter of this sort. Where the House has provided in its own way with reference to one of its own Members, I think we should be very slow to intervene in any way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], in presenting this matter in Committee of the Whole, stated that he had been requested by a large number of Representatives to change this very item so as to give all of the gratuity to the children. By adopting this amendment the matter will be in conference, and the conferees can examine further as to what is the will of the House; but if the House provisions is concurred in there will be no opportunity to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on that theory we should be obliged to make an amendment whenever a small minority of the House, or any handful of Members, came over here and asked us to make the change. This bill is the work of the majority of the House and of the majority of the committee that had it in charge. Unless we receive something from the Committee on Appropriations or from the House representing the majority of the House, I do not think we can undertake to meet all the objections that any small group of Members may desire to bring over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in stating the case a while ago, I think I said that this was the first instance in which a question had arisen in Congress as to the beneficiary in the granting of a gratuity to the heirs of deceased Members of Congress. My attention has since been called to the case of an Iowa Congressman, in which, at the instance of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], an amendment was adopted providing for a division of the fund so as to authorize paying a portion of it to the father of the deceased Congressman instead of paying all of it to the widow.

With respect to the point raised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and by others that the adoption of an amendment changing the name of the beneficiary in a provision of this character originating in the House of Representatives would disturb the comity existing between the two Houses I desire to say that, to my way of thinking, that suggestion is totally without force. In the first place, the granting of a gratuity is not a matter of right. It occurs under a custom that has prevailed for a long time. In the next place, when Congress votes away public money it ought to vote it to somebody who is entitled to it; and if Congress sets the precedent which is implied in this case, in my judgment it will be acting unwisely.

The question was not raised in the House of Representatives. Whether or not it was discussed in the committee I do not know. Of course, under the rules it could not be officially known; but I do know that a number of Members of Congress—none of them, however, from Missouri—have discussed the question with me, and my information is that if the House had the opportunity it would not be averse to paying this fund to the real dependents of the deceased Congressman.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that this matter was not an issue in the House in any way?

Mr. ROBINSON. There never was any question raised about it. The committee reported the provision as it is now in the bill, and there was no amendment offered in the House, and no discussion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was just a perfunctory proceeding?

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a perfunctory proceeding.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. Is the Senator aware that in the House there was voluminous correspondence about this very matter with the city of St. Louis and Judge Garesche to determine the mental condition of Mr. Meeker, and that there was a considerable inquiry in regard to the matter?

Mr. ROBINSON. I assume if the question was raised in the committee the committee made some investigation of it, although I do not know about that. I stated that the proceedings of the committee could not be officially known under the rules of the House of Representatives, but that no point was made upon the matter in the House of Representatives; that it went through in a mere perfunctory way.

As to the sanity or insanity of Mr. Meeker I do not raise any question. I made the statement myself that for the purpose of giving this lady the benefit of this provision, which would otherwise have gone to his children, in the presence of death, seven hours before it came, he married her, and upon that statement of fact, undisputed, I say that the decent thing for Congress to do is to pay the gratuity to the children.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. Did the Senator say there was some suggestion in the House in reference to Mr. Meeker's sanity at the time?

Mr. SPENCER. None with regard to his sanity, but the very fact that he died within seven hours after the marriage ceremony led to the query as to what was his real mental condition at the time, and therefore they wrote to Judge Garesche, who performed the ceremony, and whose reply was so satisfactory as to the clear mental condition of Mr. Meeker, both at the time of his marriage and for some hours subsequent to it, that it all vanished out of sight.

Mr. McKELLAR. But that question was raised?

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. He referred to an Iowa case. I have just entered the Chamber, and I do not know to what case he alluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not sure myself, although the Senator from Iowa will recall the case in which a portion of the gratuity was paid to the father of the deceased Congressman on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. That was the case of Congressman Pepper. He left no widow, and the father was very much dependent upon him. I was told at that time that it was contrary to the usual custom, but it was so voted.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was a division of the gratuity.

Mr. KENYON. It all went to the father. There was no widow. Of course, I have always taken the position myself that we have no right to do this at all. I do not know what right we have to make a present of a year's salary to the widow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think it would be a mistake for the Senate to interfere with matters that concern the House and concern the House alone. We have always insisted on the part of the Senate in reference to our clerical pay, our contingent fund, our action here where money was expended for the benefit of the Senate, that only the Senate was responsible, and the House has taken the same position.

Two years ago, at the request of a number of Members who came over here, the Senate attempted to make, and did make, a vital change in reference to the clerical pay of the secretaries of Members of the House. Of course, when it went to the House and went to conference, the House conferees informed the Senate conferees that they could take their bill back; that they knew how to run their own business and proposed to do it; and the result is the conference committees on the part of the Senate of these appropriation bills have never heard the end of it yet.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it is a fair comparison to which he has just referred with the situation which is now confronting us?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is a fair comparison.

Mr. KING. I make this suggestion to the Senator: Suppose the question should arise in the House of increasing the compensation of Congressmen to $10,000 each per annum, would not that be a part of the business of the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that is a change of existing law. I am talking about what is purely a gratuity on the part of Congress. The Senate never attempts to define the gratuity for a Member of the House nor the House for the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does not the Senator think there is this distinction between the two cases, that the matter of clerks' pay is a subject matter to be dealt with as having to do with the machinery of legislation in the House, the process of legislative business, whereas this is merely a matter of appropriating money to a widow, and has nothing at all to do with legislation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend this is a very much more dangerous proposition than for the Senate to interfere with the mere appropriation of money. This is purely a matter of sentiment based on nothing in the world but sentiment, that the family of a deceased Member shall be taken care of by the Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why does the Senator assume that the House of Representatives would resent the Senate making a change in the beneficiary if the Senate thinks that that change should be made?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell the Senator why. I am informed since the Senator first brought this matter up—I did not have the information then—that the House committee went into this entire proposition and decided what they thought it was proper for the House to do, and the House accepted it; and I have no doubt the House, although it was not brought out on the floor of the House, understood the facts in the case, or many Members did, when the question was voted on.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, let me call the Senator's attention to the case cited a while ago, and in this connection I want to get that case in the RECORD right,—the case discussed between the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and myself. In the case of deceased Congressman Pepper the House of Representatives refused, or failed at least, to make any provision whatever for the relatives of the Congressman, and this body wrote a provision in the bill, notwithstanding the oversight or failure or refusal of the House to make any provision, and that did not bring on any revolution either in Congress or anywhere else.

I must say to the Senator from Alabama, in view of the fact that the adoption of an amendment merely places the provision in conference, it seems to me absurd to say that the Senate is under the obligation to make an appropriation of $7,500 in a case of this sort to a beneficiary that the Senate does not believe is entitled to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, there is where the serious proposition comes in, one where I think the Senate is going to face a serious issue with the House. Mr. Meeker represented a district in Missouri for a number of years. He had a constituency which honored him with a large majority for a number of years. He had many friends in the House of Representatives. I had the honor to serve with him myself. He was a capable, sincere, and earnest public servant.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just wait a minute, if the Senator will allow me. He died in a most heroic way. I do not know of any man under the dome of this Capitol who sacrificed himself more devotedly to public duty. The influenza was marching through this country carrying a swath of death with it greater than that from which our troops suffered in Europe. A camp near St. Louis had thousands of young soldiers down and dying by the hour, without nurses and without help. Volunteers were asked to come to the rescue, and this Congressman, valuing the cause of his country, went to the aid of these young soldiers and offered himself as a nurse. There he contracted the influenza that turned into pneumonia and caused his death. He was engaged to be married; the date was set; and under these circumstances on his dying bed he married the woman he was engaged to. When you fail to follow the vote of the House of Representatives and the precedent of the Congress and refuse to vote this money to the woman he left as his lawful widow, you put a blot forever on that woman's name and you strike at the man, the one man under the dome of this Capitol who gave his life to the young soldiers of this country and died a hero's death. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think that any real true friend of Mr. Meeker would take umbrage because the Senate saw to it that his helpless minor children were given this gratuity? I think it is not entirely the widow who ought to be considered in this matter. I think the children have just as strong a right as the wife to our consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that I myself was a friend of Mr. Meeker, though we did not sit on the same side of the Chamber.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was also. I liked him very much, and I indorse all the Senator has said about him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He was my friend. I believe he knew what he wanted to do in this matter and, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to stand by him.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, what we have to do with it is simply to give the House, after the matter is brought to their attention, a fair opportunity to reconsider this question. It can be done by the adoption of this amendment. It can not be done if the amendment is not adopted.

If the House wants to insist upon it the conferees on the part of the Senate will unquestionably yield to the House, and under the rule which the Senator from Massachusetts has announced it probably ought to do so; but it seems to me, in view of what has occurred here this afternoon, and the fact that these minor children ought to be taken into consideration, a division of this money ought to be made, unless there is strong objection made by the House to it after a consideration of the entire matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is rather too late to go on with the bill this afternoon. I am going to ask, however, that the Senate shall take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator will not do that, because there are some matters pending here—particularly the resolution in reference to a conference report—that should be considered. If the Senator will promise to yield, so that those matters can be taken up the same as if we had regular morning business, I will have no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would suggest that the Senator may not be able to yield for morning business without displacing his bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3992) to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians, and I submit a report (No. 702) thereon.

This is a very urgent matter and is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 1, after the word "Barada," to insert "Phil Frost, Charles Frost, Leonard Frost, Frank Frost, Mary Frost, Sarah McCreary, Benjamin Peters, Emiel Peters, Frank Sailors, Edgar Sailors, Garlie Sailors, Bryan Sailors, and Edward Turpain"; and in line 10, after the word "Indians," to insert "Provided, however, That the enrollment of any of the persons named in this bill shall not be permitted to disturb or affect any allotment which has been made heretofore to the Omaha Tribe of Indians, or to any of them, nor to share in the distribution of any money now in the Treasury to the credit of such Omaha Tribe of Indians"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to investigate the claims of Thomas Barada, Mitchell Barada, Waring Barada, Maggie E. Rockwell, Mart Peters Sailer, Celestine Barada Kuhn, Margaret Kuhn, Josephine Kuhn, N. Edward Kuhn, John A. Kuhn, George F. Kuhn, Mary Kuhn, Stella Kuhn James, Barbara Kuhn James, Ethel Kuhn Ruthledge, Frank A. Peters, Jacob Peters, Frank E. Peters, Ernest C. Peters, Ruth Barada Sandage, Josephine Peters Mitchell, Pine Barada Beck, Toy Barada, Blade Barada, Nellie Barada Mott, Mary Barada Martin, Mrs. Era Barada Phillip, Mrs. Ada Barada Barber, Miss Alice Barada, William Barada, Walter V. Peters, and Job Barada, Phil Frost, Charles Frost, Leonard Frost, Frank Frost, Mary Frost, Sarah McCreary, Benjamin Peters, Emiel Peters, Frank Sailors, Edgar Sailors, Garlie Sailors, Bryan Sailors, and Edward Turpain to enrollment and membership in the Omaha Tribe of Indians; and if such investigation shows the persons named, or any of them, to possess Omaha Indian blood from a common Omaha Indian ancestor, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to enroll the persons named, or so many of them as possess Omaha Indian blood from a common Omaha Indian ancestor, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians and to accord to such persons so enrolled all the rights and privileges of any enrolled member of the Omaha Tribe of Indians: Provided, however, That the enrollment of any of the persons named in this bill shall not be permitted to disturb or affect any allotment which has been made heretofore to the Omaha Tribe of Indians, or to any of them, nor to share in the distribution of any money now in the Treasury to the credit of such Omaha Tribe of Indians.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS AT SANTA FE, N. MEX.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5516) to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., p. 875), as authorized the erection of a building for the accommodation of the post office and United States courts at Santa Fe, N. Mex., be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to require that said building shall be for the accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices, exclusive of the United States courts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 11, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 10, 1919.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate February 10, 1919.

POSTMASTER.

MINNESOTA.

Charles J. Hohenstein, Gibbon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 10, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who hast made us and the laws which environ us, open Thou our understanding that we may perceive and obey them.

Thus, as individuals and as a Nation, expand our intellectual, moral, and spiritual life; that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in us, as in Heaven; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 8, and the Journal of the proceedings of Sunday, February 9, 1919, were read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. WILLIAM R. WOOD of Indiana, on the late Theodore Roosevelt, in my home city yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a speech made by Mr. WOOD of Indiana on the life, character, and public services of Mr. Roosevelt. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House communications from the following States, giving notification of the ratification of the prohibition amendment, for filing in the archives of the House:

Michigan, West Virginia, Iowa, Tennessee, New Mexico, California, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Carolina, Wyoming, Idaho, Illinois, and Missouri.

THE NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 3.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, that is entirely too small a number to consider the vast increases in this naval program. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] makes the point of no quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the House resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 268, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 160, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15539) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51: "Increase of the Navy."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. These paragraphs on page 51, under the heading "Increase of the Navy," are numerous. Will they be considered paragraph by paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. They will be considered paragraph by paragraph. That is always the rule on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MASON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise.

Mr. MASON. I rise to ask permission to proceed for five minutes out of order in order to place in the RECORD a copy of a——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman at this moment for that purpose. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding I ask unanimous consent to return to pages 17 and 18 for the purpose of offering some amendments to correct the language.

There is legislation in the bill authorizing transfers from the Naval Reserves into the regular Navy and also providing for extensions. When the bill was before the Committee of the Whole for consideration and these paragraphs were reached I stated to the committee that the effect was that where a person was given authority, as provided here, to extend for one year or two or three or four years, he would have to serve out the four years in order to be entitled to receive the benefit of the four months' continuous service provided under existing law. Where a person under existing law enlists or serves a four-year period and gets an honorable discharge, he may within four months reenlist and get the benefit of the four months' pay. That is existing law, and has been for years.

Now, when this matter was before the Committee on Naval Affairs in the hearings we inquired very carefully into this, and we were informed that that was the interpretation and was the purpose of the legislation, and the committee reported it with that understanding, and so stated to the House. But since then—since the adjournment the other day—I have taken the matter up with the officers in the Bureau of Navigation, and they tell me that they think under this language they would be entitled to four months if we extend it for one year, and if we extend it for two years he would be entitled to it, or if we extend it for three years he would be entitled to it, or he would be entitled to it if we extend it four years.

That was not the purpose of the committee, and I think it was not the purpose of the Committee of the Whole when we passed upon it. I then stated otherwise. So I wanted to offer amendments to make it clear that men would get the benefit by the extending of the law, which now is that they shall serve four years, so as to add what they have already served to what they might serve in the regular Navy, and make it four years before they would get the benefit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to pages 17 and 18 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman made a statement which doubtless he understood himself and which members of the Naval Committee understood, but I confess I do not understand. Let us have the amendment. Let us know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to offer amendments and have them read for the purpose of information. The Clerk will read the first one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PADGETT offers the following amendment: Page 18, line 4, strike out "(other than a dishonorable discharge)" and, at the end of line 8, change the period to a colon and add: "Provided, That said enlisted man is otherwise entitled to an honorable discharge."

Mr. PADGETT. That is upon a different question, Mr. Chairman; but the language there, as it was accepted and submitted, reads "other than a dishonorable discharge." There are bad-conduct discharges.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the right to object. We should have this thing explained.

Mr. PADGETT. I will explain it. We considered that it reached all of those, but we understand that there is a dishonorable discharge and a bad-conduct discharge. Under this language, as it is in the bill, a person would get an honorable discharge if he was not given a dishonorable discharge, and his record might be such that he would have a bad-conduct discharge or an ordinary discharge. This is to make it the same as on lines 14 and 15 of page 18—the proviso—that he shall have an honorable discharge if his conduct otherwise entitles him to an honorable discharge.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. It was stated here on the floor recently several times that the Navy, in granting discharges to men who had enlisted for a term of four years, did not grant honorable discharges but only a discharge.

Mr. PADGETT. An ordinary discharge.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what an "ordinary discharge" is, but it is not an honorable discharge.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. This provision as it stands would allow transportation to those men. But the way the gentleman amends it, it would not?

Mr. PADGETT. No. They would get an honorable discharge if, not having served out the full term of their enlistment——

Mr. MANN. Let us get at the practical facts. That is what I want to know. Of course the gentleman is able to talk in naval language, which I do not fully appreciate. Here is the case of a man who enlisted for a term of four years, supposing he was enlisting for the term of the war. The Navy now in granting him a discharge, it is stated, does not grant him an honorable discharge. I believe this bill is designed in one place to correct that, but not in this paragraph.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes. It says he shall have an honorable discharge.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. He may prescribe an honorable discharge if the man is otherwise entitled to an honorable discharge.

But under the existing law they say that he is not entitled to an honorable discharge. Now, the language of the bill as it stands will grant him an honorable discharge and grant him transportation if he does not receive a dishonorable discharge; but under the language of the amendment which the gentleman suggests he would get then just what he gets now, a discharge, without saying whether it is honorable or dishonorable, because under the existing law they say he is not entitled to an honorable discharge.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the effect of this amendment is that a man could, if he should, be given a bad-conduct discharge—not a dishonorable discharge, but a bad-conduct discharge. He would not be entitled to an honorable discharge, but under the bill as it is written he does not get a dishonorable discharge, therefore he is compelled to have an honorable discharge. This would allow them to give him a bad-conduct discharge if his record justifies it.

Mr. MANN. I understand that part of it, but that does not answer my inquiry. What I want to know is whether a man who supposed that he was enlisting for the term of the war, but who made an actual enlistment for four years, will get an honorable discharge and get his transportation under this amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the way I understand it. In view of what the gentleman says, perhaps it might be plainer if it read "(other than a dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge)," just leaving the parentheses.

Mr. MANN. That is all right.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what is intended. I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment, and, in line 4, after the word "dishonorable," insert the words "or bad conduct."

Mr. LITTLE. As I understand it, the amendment has not been offered yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been offered. The question is whether there is objection to returning to this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first state the question. The question is, Is there objection to the committee returning to page 18 for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, are we to understand that the boys who prefer to be discharged and to go home and go to work or go to school, instead of hanging around doing nothing, have been refused honorable discharges?

Mr. PADGETT. Under the existing law it is understood that a man is entitled to an honorable discharge only when he fully complies with his contract.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman may understand that, but I do not. Who is responsible for that understanding—each individual officer who is discharging the men, or somebody at headquarters?

Mr. PADGETT. That has been the interpretation all along, before the war and during the war. The Secretary has recommended that the law be amended so that all of them discharged since November 11, the date of the signing of the armistice, shall have an honorable discharge.

Mr. WINGO. Why does not the gentleman offer that as an amendment in this connection? There has been a great deal of confusion and complaint throughout the country about it. Why does not the gentleman provide that a man who enlisted for the war and who has been discharged since November 11 shall be entitled to an honorable discharge?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not know of any rule of law, and I never heard of any before, under which anybody could be refused an honorable discharge simply because he was discharged before his term of service had expired.

Mr. PADGETT. That has been the ruling and is the ruling, and we are trying to correct it, so that these men shall have an honorable discharge if they are discharged before the termination of the four years or before the termination of the war; that is, if discharged since November 11.

Mr. LITTLE. I have known hundreds of instances in which men have received honorable discharges in that way.

Mr. PADGETT. They have not been granting them, and in order to provide that they shall grant them we offer this amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman will permit me, I have known of hundreds of instances in which men have received honorable discharge before the term of service expired, where there was some good showing made. That has been the case in the Army, and I am profoundly astonished that the Navy has enforced a different rule. It is not the law.

Mr. PADGETT. They have been doing it, and I am trying to correct it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If this amendment which the gentleman proposes prevails, will it enable a man to get his full travel allowance?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have received complaints that the men who were discharged in the manner the gentleman has described were not getting their full travel allowance.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the principal object of it—to give them an honorable discharge and their travel pay.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. While the gentleman says the object is not only to provide travel pay for those men who enlisted for the war and who are discharged upon their application, without waiting for the department to discharge them, but also to give them an honorable discharge, the language does not provide it.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it says they shall have an honorable discharge and shall be furnished with transportation. That is provided in lines 6 and 7, on page 18.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think that language will give them an honorable discharge?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I know it will.

Mr. WINGO. I understood the gentleman's explanation to be that the language would not do that.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I said the existing law would not, and this amendment is simply to provide that those who receive bad-conduct discharges will be excluded, as well as those who receive dishonorable discharges. A man with a bad-conduct discharge ought not to receive this consideration.

Mr. WINGO. Certainly. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri demands the regular order, which is, Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object for the present.

Mr. WINGO. Unless we can get information about this, we are compelled to object.

Mr. PADGETT. I am trying to give the gentleman all the information he desires.

Mr. WINGO. I am not criticizing the gentleman from Tennessee. He is always courteous and patient in the conduct of his bills.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 17 to offer the following amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I think we ought to wait until we dispose of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to page 17 to offer the amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WALSH. I object for the present. I am not objecting to the amendment, but I think we ought to wait until we dispose of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. WEEKS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the Navy, construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore and herein authorized, to be available until expended, $107,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 51, line 11, strike out $105,000,000 and insert in lieu thereof $50,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the amendment, if adopted, will open a way to cut down a little bit the money appropriated in the bill. I should like to say that I have had the advantage of seeing the mysterious telegram from the President of the United States to the Secretary of the Navy in regard to this naval bill and the building program it authorizes.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. This appropriation is for the ships heretofore authorized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Which can not be built in the time covered by this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. But this amount is needed to carry on the work on the ships authorized during the year 1919–20.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am inclined to doubt that the full amounts proposed can be used within the time. At any rate, I offer the amendment. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have seen the telegram sent by the President of the United States, and I have also seen the telegram sent to the President by the Secretary of the Navy. I think those Members who have asked to see the President's telegram should ask to see the Secretary's telegram. To understand one, it is necessary to see the other. The other day, when the chairman of the Naval Committee and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] were talking the matter over, the chairman asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania to take 10 steps forward and see the telegram personally. I said that I thought if one saw it we all ought to see it. I was invited to see it and did see it, and in my opinion the telegram of the Secretary of the Navy to the President in Paris was a polite invitation to the President to help this doubtful bill across the Congress. That is what I think the Secretary was cabling about, and his words were nicely put. The President's reply, as has been indicated by the chairman, without giving the exact words, was just such a reply as the Secretary of the Navy expected in order to influence Congress.

Unfortunately, in my opinion, the reply of the President is couched in such words that it would not be proper to give it general publicity, although I suppose the interpretation has been printed and well understood. I have introduced this amendment for the purpose of calling attention, whether this is the exact place to bring down the appropriations or not, that this House of Representatives labored all day Saturday on the conference report on a bill to raise $6,000,000,000 at once, and next following resumed consideration of a naval bill appropriating more than enough for all the ships we can build in four or five years, and authorizing a further tremendous program.

We do this when we know that the great nations of the world for 20 years will be low in their exchequers and unable to build naval vessels any faster than we can. Now is the time to get busy with the pruning knife.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Are we to understand that the telegram from the President was simply in response to a suggestive invitation from the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have intimated that.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I had nothing to do with the President going abroad. I think he made a political mistake in going, but the fact is he is there. He represents this country at the peace table in France, and while there is no reason to vote for this large increase other than the telegram and his request I am opposed to embarrassing the President while he is in France. [Applause.]

If we are going to punish him, wait until he returns to America. He is there, perhaps unfortunately. I had nothing to do, as I said, with his going, but I shall do nothing to embarrass him while he sits at the peace table.

Now, we do not know what nation we may get into war with next. Some years ago England and Germany were fighting against France. To-day England and France are fighting against Germany. Wolves hunt in packs, and we do not know what the next alignment may be. I believe not only in military preparedness, but in social preparedness and in industrial preparedness and in educational preparedness. I believe that now is the time for us not to do anything that will hamper the acts of the President while there. He will be punished sufficiently when he returns to this country. The body at the other end of the Capitol is going to force an extra session for no other purpose than to punish him.

There is but one justification for any Member of this House to vote for this large appropriation for the Navy, and that is the request of the President. I confess I can see no reason why we should have this enormous increase; perhaps it is because I am unable to see all things that I should see.

The President has asked for this large amount. I must call your attention to the fact that the President is now in France sitting at the peace table; whether rightfully or wrongfully, he is there representing this country. He is our President, representing the United States of America at an international conference, and it is our duty not to embarrass him while he is there. Whether he was justified or not in going history alone can answer. I had nothing to do with his going; do not think he should have gone; think a very large majority of the people feel as I do about this matter; think he should have remained in this country and taken charge of reconstruction here. I feel he made a political mistake in going; think he will find that he is playing statecraft with some crafty and wise old statesmen; think he will find England and France will dominate at the peace table.

But in spite of all these opinions he is there as the representative of my country, and far be it from any purpose of mine to do anything to embarrass him in this hour.

When you come to think of it, he is our only representative there, for we never hear of the others.

I promised my constituency in all my campaigns that in all international matters I would stand by the President of the United States, and that is what I am going to do now.

I shall vote for this increase because I am informed it may embarrass him, and if he has wrongfully advised this Congress we can hold him responsible and the people of this country will hold him responsible. It is the plain duty of Congress to uphold the hands of the President while he is officially abroad, and if we have any criticizing to do let us reserve that until he returns.

I remember very well that my good father and mother never punished me in the public streets or in the presence of the company at the table, but reserved that for the more quiet and convenient place, when they spoke to me kindly but firmly. I feel that they did right. So if we have spanking to do, let us reserve that for a more opportune time and place. Wait until he returns. I am informed that the body at the other end of the Capitol is going to force an extra session of Congress so that they may do this very thing.

If the President has made a blunder, he will have to answer for it, and the people of this country will hold him strictly to account for what he does while in France.

But let us not humiliate him while he is there.

I believe he has made a personal, political, and national mistake by going, but I wish him well and hope he returns to this country covered with glory, and as a result of his labors these United States of America may take their place among the most powerful and influential nations of the earth.

And besides, we do not know what country we may have to fight next. Wolves hunt in packs, and we do not know what the next alliance may be.

One hundred years ago England and the German States were fighting side by side against France; now England and France are fighting side by side against Germany.

Washington said, "In time of peace prepare for war." We are inclined to construe preparedness to mean cannons, guns and soldiers, battleships and sailors, but that is not necessarily what Washington meant. We should have industrial preparedness, educational preparedness, military preparedness, not necessarily in terms of guns and cannons and battleships.

We should have preparedness by training our young men physically for war, if it becomes necessary; educate them in order to make them good citizens; educate them to have respect for the flag and the Constitution and the laws of the land.

If we did this, we would always be prepared for enemies abroad, for we would have none at home.

Under our laws the people rule, make the laws, elect their officials, so we do not need a Bolsheviki by force.

We can have a revolution peaceably at the ballot box at least every four years and the people can elect whomsoever they choose President, Senators, or Congressmen. They elect their State and local officials, and if our citizens are educated we need have no fear of internal discord.

If we want respect from other nations, we first must have confidence in and respect for ourselves.

I want to see the time when an American citizen walking the streets of London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Petrograd, or any of the streets of any of the cities or towns of any country on the face of this earth it will be said, "Beware, there walks an American citizen; behind him stands the protection of the Stars and Stripes backed up by over a hundred million free people."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a big Navy, and always have been. I am in favor of a Navy large enough to meet the needs of this Government in its relations with all the other Governments on the face of the earth. I think, however, that that Navy should be built upon an intelligent basis and that any program adopted now should be intelligently formed so that it may be intelligently carried out. Who is there among us who knows the needs of the United States Navy now with reference to an increase in ships and armanent? Who is there upon the face of the earth who knows what the possibilities of the future are to be? It strikes me that we are getting the cart before the horse; that our naval program ought to be made to fit the peace program and that any program that we formulate at this time is just as apt to be a misfit and more apt to be a misfit than it is to be a fit. If we are to enter upon a species of internationalism proposed by some gentlemen, we will need one kind of a Navy. If we are to become the guardians of the peace of Europe, we will need quite a different character of Navy. If there is to be a complete disarmament, then we will not need nearly the Navy that we otherwise might need. We do not know what is going to be done over there. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] said that the President of the United States is now at the peace table. The trouble is that he has never gotten to the peace table. If we were given a treaty of peace, so that we would know what the relation of the United States is to be with reference to the belligerent nations, who are entitled to have this peace treaty executed at the earliest possible moment, then with some degree of intelligence we might formulate this program.

While it has been said here that this new program does not anticipate the appropriation of money to carry it out at this time; that it is to be left to the future; that we can repeal it if the necessity arises, then I ask why go to all this trouble? The program that is inserted in this bill to-day for the building of so many ships or the authorization for the building of so many ships may not be the character of program that we want after we know what the peace treaty is. We may need an entirely different character of ship, either more in number or fewer in number, and thus these necessities may require entirely different designs, so that it strikes me that the treaty of peace should be formulated and completed first, and then our naval program made to fit it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is making exactly the argument, as I recall it, that the President himself did prior to the time we went into the war, when he contended we could not foresee what type of ship we might need, and that therefore he was against preparedness then being asked.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is but another demonstration of the fact that our President very often changes his mind. The thing that the people of the United States are interested in now and the thing that all of these belligerent nations are interested in now is the completion of a peace treaty. It strikes me that the greatest service the President of the United States can render his people and can render the people of these other belligerent nations is to get down to brass tacks at the peace table and do the work that this congress is assembled over there to do. We may have different ideas about this league of nations. There are very many different ideas about it.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The people who are interested in this peace treaty are not the only ones interested in this proposed league of nations, and these eggs should not be scrambled together. It will be a splendid thing when the President comes home. Then the real peace commissioners may be heard from occasionally, and they then will have an opportunity at least to commence the work for which they were called together. Every day that the making of a treaty of peace is delayed but adds to the difficulties of agreeing upon the terms of a treaty and adds to the constantly increasing troubles in the business world, which are already growing alarming in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the first word.

Mr. PADGETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail——

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the practice the chairman of the committee would be entitled to preference.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Is the chairman of the Naval Committee entitled to the floor after the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has recognized some one else?

Mr. PADGETT. If some one else has been recognized, I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has moved to strike out the first word, and to be entirely frank about the matter the Chair supposed that the gentleman from Tennessee had risen to make a request.

Mr. PADGETT. I shall make one directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. LITTLE. I would yield any time to the chairman in charge of the bill, but I want to know what I am doing. I do not know why the floor should be taken away from me in that way.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor?

The CHAIRMAN The gentleman from Missouri can not take the gentleman from Kansas off his feet by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LITTLE. Unless there is somebody else who wants to take the floor away from me, I will proceed, but I want only a few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has developed the most important feature of this debate, one that is conclusive on the strongest argument that has been adduced. It now develops that this telegram from the President, which has received great consideration and which should, was in response to a suggestion or an invitation from the Secretary of the Navy. In other words, the Secretary needed help, and, as lawyers say, he asked a leading question and he got an answer according to his suggestion. If the President of the United States, surrounded by great responsibilities, should go to the extent of sending a telegram or suggestion to this House, and I had a chance to see it, I should read it very carefully, and I should consider it carefully. I should depend upon my judgment, because the people who send me here expect me to do that, but I should be very careful before acting. Now, there is nothing to it at all. Mr. Daniels wanted a little help, and he worded a telegram in a manner that brought an answer that would help him, and that is all there is to it. It seems to me that all of this hullabaloo has been about a matter of no real bearing on the subject. I think it is very kind of the President to give him a little boost, and it would be a very unkind President who would not back him up a little.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman any information as to what has caused the Secretary of the Navy to become so bloodthirsty of late?

Mr. LITTLE. I have not. Perhaps the fact that the Navy got through this war not much hurt encouraged him.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Do I understand the gentleman has seen this telegram of the Secretary of the Navy to the President?

Mr. LITTLE. No; I have not; but my friend from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], in whom I have great confidence, has related the facts, I think, sufficiently to make it absolutely certain that we do not have to give so much consideration on that point to that program.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman does not belong to this clique that is in possession of that secret information?

Mr. LITTLE. No; I only know what the gentleman from Washington said, and I have great confidence in him.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman know how many men are in the confidence of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and who have gotten to see this cablegram?

Mr. LITTLE. No; I do not.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have stated to the House several times the substance of the Secretary's telegram, and also that of the President. I did not give the exact words and shall not, for reasons that any gentleman can recognize are entirely proper. The Secretary submitted to the President a statement of the conditions and the opinion prevailing here; that in regard to the league of nations and disarmament question some were thinking we should postpone, others that on account of the delay of the building program and the war condition we should delay the building of big ships, and asked the President whether anything had happened over there to change his recommendation. That is the substance of it—that there was a division in the House on the matter. Now, the President in substance has stated that he still insists and desires the three-year building program carried out, that he has not changed his mind, and requests the Congress to carry out that program.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, quite aside from what was said in Secretary Daniels's cablegram and what the reply of the President was, is it not a fact that the three-year building program is badly delayed, in reference to big ships, owing to the necessity of building smaller vessels?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly; and that is one thing the Secretary stated to the President in his telegram.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So that in ordering these big appropriations now we are simply crowding the horses to no purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. No; we are not crowding them to no purpose.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PADGETT. I do.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to call attention to what I think perhaps is a misunderstanding. As I understand it, these appropriations on pages 51 and 52 are for the purpose of carrying out the existing three-year program. They have nothing whatever to do with the contemplated new three-year program.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is slightly in error. There are $5,000,000 that were included in this appropriation for the new program suggested herein——

Mr. TOWNER. That is a very small part——

Mr. BUTLER. That was not the understanding; that word "herein" is to be stricken out.

Mr. PADGETT. The department first recommended $137,000,000. Then it was reduced to $105,000,000, and that was for the authorization heretofore made. In the discussion with the committee it was understood and was represented by Admiral Taylor that he might be able to use about $5,000,000 on the new program during this coming fiscal year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the way of getting us committed to a brand-new program.

Mr. PADGETT. No. Now, then, we just left the amount at $105,000,000 that had been estimated for the present program, but it was understood that he might be able to use between February and June 30, if the program continued, not exceeding $5,000,000 out of the odds and ends of the program heretofore authorized; but the sum and substance of it is for the 1916 program.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, that is just exactly what I want the committee to understand and what I wanted to understand myself. I think the committee, if I can understand the sentiment of those who are here and who speak about the matter in private conversation—the sentiment of those with whom I have talked is overwhelmingly in favor of supporting the gentleman's committee with reference to every dollar that might be needed to carry out the 1916 program, but they are equally opposed to any part of the appropriation for carrying out or for the adoption of the three-year program that is proposed in subsequent provisions of the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. They need the $105,000,000; they asked for $137,000,000——

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that.

Mr. PADGETT. For the 1916 program.

Mr. TOWNER. I have understood all the time, I will say to the gentleman, that the appropriations on pages 51 and 52, which I want to support if they are limited to the 1916 program, were in fact limited to that program; and now I understand the gentleman to say that that is true with the exception of $5,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. I said it is true they might be able to use that much out of it between February and July. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment, which provides for the reduction of $50,000,000, and I move to make the figures "$100,000,000," striking off the "$5,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which he proposed and offer another amendment. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] offers a further amendment. Which one does the gentleman wish read?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The new amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 51, line 11, strike out "$105,000,000" and insert "$100,000,000."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this item of $105,000,000 for construction and machinery for the increase of the Navy, I desire to say that it was my understanding that this entire sum was to be used for the construction of ships heretofore authorized; that we consented to leave the words "and herein" in this paragraph in line 10 just for the sake of regularity, because that is the way this item is always drawn. But the $5,000,000 which was originally proposed for new construction was eliminated from the bill. We consented to $105,000,000 for this item, but there is no amount included for new authorizations, and if the chairman of the committee insists that that interpretation be placed upon it I shall move to strike out the words "and herein" in line 10, page 51.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In order to keep the camel from getting his nose under the tent.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not think the amount carried under this item should be reduced.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask my colleague a question. If for no reason it is to be used in this program, why can not we reduce it $5,000,000? The gentleman is entirely right. Why not be consistent?

This item was once $109,000,000. It was said we could do without $4,000,000. Consequently—and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] will bear me out—we reduced the item to $105,000,000, some state $104,000,000, the understanding being that no part of it was to be used on what is known as the presidential program.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If there is any question, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], of the construction of this paragraph, it can all be cleared up by striking out the words "and herein"; but I do not think the item of $105,000,000 should be reduced if we intend to go on with one year's construction under the old 1916 program.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree entirely with the gentleman, and I would very much prefer to vote first on his amendment. The trouble with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington would be that, even if we reduced this amount to $100,000,000, you would not be sure that this $5,000,000 would not be expended out of that amount unless you struck out the words "and herein." I think that is the essential thing, and I think that amendment ought to be voted on first.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that amendment.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is it not the intention of the gentleman from Michigan to give this House an opportunity to vote for a Navy and not for a threat?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say that the intention of the committee was that we were willing to authorize this new program recommended by the President, but that all construction be held up, pending such time as might reasonably be required to work out a reduction of armament in conference, and that no expense should be incurred in connection therewith during the time that the President and his commissioners might reasonably require to work out a reduction of armament. I think the policy of the committee was wise. I do not believe the words "and herein" should remain in this paragraph if the chairman insists that any money is provided in this section for the new construction. So I move that these two words be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] to withdraw the last amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have not yet withdrawn it, and I should only like to withdraw it temporarily; but I see no reason why we could not have the reduction and then take care of the "and herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it important whether the amendment of the gentleman from Washington be agreed to or not if we leave the amount at $100,000,000 instead of $105,000,000. I had my bill marked to offer an amendment to strike out the words "and herein" when the gentleman from Michigan gave notice that he would offer that amendment. That is the essential feature of the proposition. We might possibly reduce the amount to $100,000,000, but it probably will not make any great difference, because $105,000,000 and more still will have to be appropriated sooner or later for the vessels heretofore authorized, and it is likely that the $105,000,000 will be extended during the next fiscal year and it will be available until expended. But the important thing is that under the language of the bill we allow $105,000,000, or any part of it, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, to be used for the new ships if he did not make a contract for it, because the only limitation in the bill is that he shall not make a contract prior to a certain date. He might go ahead and order these ships made in the navy yards or elsewhere, and the authority in the bill is to spend any portion that he pleases. I have lived long enough to know that these tacit understandings, which even the Committee on Naval Affairs did not know about, do not amount to that much when it comes to spending the money. Let us declare here what we appropriate the money for.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. MANN. If we are in favor of letting the Secretary of the Navy have this large sum of money to spend on vessels not heretofore authorized, leave in the words "and herein." If we are in favor of making an appropriation here for the purpose of building the vessels already authorized, adopt the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], to strike out "and herein" and leave that as a matter for future development. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, to simplify the matter, I suggest that we agree to striking out the words "and herein."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Strike out the words "and herein," on page 51, line 10.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Page 51, line 10, strike out the words "and herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the Navy, torpedo boats: On account of submarine torpedo boats heretofore authorized, to be available until expended, $17,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to whether the committee considered the policy of curtailing the building of submarines, in view of the contemplated action by the peace council in making that character of warfare illegal?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; and under the provision down here we repeal the mandatory provision of the last act, directing the Secretary to commence the construction of all ships heretofore authorized in the 1916 program. That would leave out the construction of 12 destroyers. As I am informed, they do not wish to build those 12 destroyers. A great many of these others, however, are so far completed that they should go ahead and complete them. But there are 12 that have not yet been begun, and they do not wish to construct them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has substantial construction yet begun on submarines as enumerated in lines 20 to 25, inclusive, on page 52?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the construction of all of those been begun—substantial construction?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know the extent of all of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I go back to my original question and inquire whether the committee has considered the abandonment of the policy of construction of submarines, in view of the prospective action of the peace council to make that character of attack unlawful?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; because I do not think, and I do not think the committee thinks, so far as I am advised, that any condition is going to develop where the United States will not use submarines on our coast defense, covering thousands of miles.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I would state to the gentleman that one reason for inserting later a provision repealing the law that we passed at the last session, requiring the Secretary to let all of these vessels authorized in the 1916 program before July 1, was this, that Admiral Taylor stated to the committee he desired this done in order that he might not be required to build 12 destroyers and 9 fleet submarines authorized by the August, 1916, bill, and the appropriation here asked includes nothing for 9 submarines and 12 destroyers.

Mr. PADGETT. That is of the fleet submarine type?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; and the same applies to a submarine tender and a torpedo-destroyer tender. It is the purpose of the department not to ask for appropriations for these, but to request repeal of the law requiring the contracts to be let before July 1.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to the hearings, page 875, in which it appears that about 100 submarines are now in process of construction, and range between about 30 per cent completed and 97 per cent completed. It is my understanding that the amount carried in this item is for the completion of those, and not for those that are not yet begun.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is unquestionably correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do we understand that all the submarines designated by number on page 52, on lines 20 to 25, have been undertaken and are in actual construction, and that the construction is substantially advanced?

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will yield, I will say I understood the Secretary of the Navy to say that he did not contemplate the construction of any further submarines at this time. Consequently this appropriation is to be used to finish the many submarines that are now under construction, but the others will not be begun.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The press of yesterday contained the information that the allied Governments are going to enter into an agreement to do away with submarines and prohibit the use of submarines in future wars.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have just received information from the members of the committee that the appropriations carried in this section are not for the purpose of providing for building submarines that have not already been launched, but for completing those that have been undertaken and are about 30 per cent or more completed.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, in common with all Members of the House, I have been giving this subject some consideration, and it will take me about 10 or 12 minutes to develop my ideas. I think I can express them in discussing two amendments, and I would ask that when my statements appear in the RECORD they shall be put together without being divided.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. OSBORNE. My request is that when my remarks are finished—I am going to speak again—they can be put together.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can withhold his remarks if he desires.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I have long been in favor of a strong Navy for America. I have never seen the time when I felt that our Navy was as powerful as it ought to be. Capt. Mahan's great work on "Sea Power" awakened our people and the world to the importance of naval strength to national security and influence upon world affairs. The lessons taught in that most interesting book have been marvelously emphasized by the present world war.

The United States should always be guarded by a great, powerful, modern Navy. We are not a military people in the sense that we care to maintain a large standing army. We make a very good showing when we are forced into war, but it is not to our liking, and in the protracted periods of peace we are likely in the future, as in the past, to neglect military preparation and training. I hope for some form of universal military training for our young men; it will be good for them as citizens physically and morally, but whether we get it remains to be seen.

Whether we have an army or not, and especially if we do not, a powerful navy is our first and strongest line of defense. We are constructing an immense merchant marine, to be taken care of and made safe on the seven seas. I have noticed that those countries that carry the cargoes of the world have strong navies, whose great warships appear periodically in the various ports of the world on friendly visits to foreign nations.

We have a vast coast line to guard in troublous times on the Atlantic, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Pacific Ocean. This is a vast responsibility, and heretofore it has been only partly performed. For many years the people of the Pacific coast of America have earnestly called for some portion of the Navy to be ordered to the Pacific to guard against or forestall possible, though happily not probable, dangers. It is a rule of naval tactics, however, that naval power, and especially if limited, should be concentrated. I presume that is a sound rule. Therefore our fleet is and always has been concentrated in the Atlantic. The entire naval strength of the Pacific Fleet, so called, is not equal in efficiency to a single battleship. This has been the condition for several years—always, in fact. There is absolutely no navy or naval defense worthy the name on the Pacific Ocean. This includes the vast shore line from Bering Sea, omitting the Dominion, to the Mexican border at Tia Juana, the Hawaiian Islands, and the Philippines. There are no sufficient dry docks on the Pacific coast for warships of the first class.

A naval commission appointed by direction of Congress, known as the Helm Commission, has reported to the Secretary of the Navy a well-considered plan for the naval defense of the Pacific coast. This plan contemplates the building of a dry dock of sufficient capacity to accommodate any warship of the United States Navy somewhere near San Francisco. It embraces lighter naval works in Puget Sound, the Columbia River, Los Angeles Harbor, and San Diego. This is the first comprehensive plan of defense that has ever been formulated so far as I have learned, and the present war has made it impossible to proceed further than its submission to the Secretary of the Navy.

It is difficult for some to realize that way out there on the Pacific we have a continental coast line nearly as lengthy as that of the Atlantic, and including Alaska and the islands, many hundred miles longer. But it is there. And that coast is inhabited by people who have no superiors anywhere in intelligence, in refinement, and in loyalty to our country. They are entitled to consideration in the way of naval force on the Pacific.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Would not a few mines scattered along the coast in time of war and a few submarines make it quite impossible for any battleship or fleet of battleships to injure any city there?

Mr. OSBORNE. I do not think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman as to the statement he has made about dry docks on the Pacific coast. Do I understand him to say that there is no dry dock on the Pacific coast that will accommodate our largest battleships?

Mr. OSBORNE. There is not a dry dock on the Pacific coast that will do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was given to understand that the enlargement of the dry dock on Puget Sound, at the Bremerton yard, was intended to accommodate our largest battleships.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will yield a moment, the Navy entered into a contract with the Union Iron Works in San Francisco, and they are building a dock to be 1,100 feet long, I think, with over 40 feet of water on the sills. Then there is one at Balboa that is to be 1,100 or 1,200 feet long, and then there is one about 700 feet long at Puget Sound.

Mr. LITTLE. Did not mines and submarines protect the coast of Germany during the recent war?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will ask gentlemen to refrain from further questions, and that the time which has been occupied by the questions which have been asked shall not be counted against me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time as indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSBORNE. I am not anticipating trouble from any particular source. I do not care whether Great Britain has more or less vessels than we have. I am not one of those who fear that we shall ever have war with our neighbor and friend, Japan. That great and progressive country, however, faces our Pacific coast on the opposite side of the Pacific Ocean, with a vastly greater and more powerful fleet than we sustain on the Pacific. I do not believe that it would be thought unfriendly or suspicious that we should maintain a fleet on the Pacific equal to that of our friends the Japanese.

Regarding the organization of a league of nations and an agreement as to disarmament, there will be a league of nations in the sense that the present parties to the peace conference form such a league and prescribe the rules for peace. I hope that it will go far in making future wars as nearly impossible as human foresight may permit. I expressed myself many times during the war before this House to the effect that the war we were waging was "a war against all wars." I believe that if the war had been extended a little longer, until the German armies had been actually surrounded and had surrendered unconditionally, this purpose of preventing future wars would have been better served. However, it may come out all right, and we hope that it will. But I am doubtful as to the nearness of the millennium, and that human nature, greed, and selfishness in nations or in individuals have all been changed by the signing of the armistice. I believe that the path of prudence will be best trod with caution and preparedness, and that the advice of one who has gone, "to speak softly and carry a big stick," is still worthy of following.

As to the manner in which the President has sought to convey his approval of this bill, whatever we may think of its propriety or consistency, it does not seem to me to have much bearing on the merits of the bill itself. I have repeatedly said on this floor that, in my humble judgment, the President made a great mistake when, at the beginning of the war, he failed to constitute a coalition Cabinet, and thus bring the entire country into confidential relations with the Executive. With the same deference, I feel sure the President was in error when he failed to take the coordinate treaty-making power, the Senate, into his confidence as to what he desired to accomplish at the peace conference before he went to Europe and thus assure himself that those objects had their sympathy, as in the end they must have. But whether he has made errors or not, or whether he should have gone to Paris or not, he is there, and, along with the glory, he is having a whole lot of trouble. During the war we in Congress did whatever the President asked of us, always hoping that it was the best that could be done and believing it was our patriotic duty not to quibble about it. I do not feel that the war is altogether over. The peace settlement is fully as important in its results as the fighting. Possibly the President's urgency as to the passage of this bill may have some relation to the peace negotiations which he regards as very important and which might be frustrated by more publicity. If such be the case, it shows that facts and common sense, in the last analysis, have a great advantage over the loftiest and most eloquent abstract declarations, even those which declare for "open covenants, openly arrived at."

In any event, the question under consideration here is not the conduct of the President or the wisdom or unwisdom of his attendance at the peace conference. He is our representative there, and in every way that we conscientiously can we should assist and back him in his extremely difficult work. Every Member must decide for himself, upon his own conscience, what that assistance may require. For myself, I should have supported this bill to sustain and strengthen the American Navy had the President said nothing about it, or given no intimation of his wishes. Now that he has done so, I shall not vote against it for that reason, but, on the contrary, I give it my hearty support and vote, and incidentally hope that it may be of some slight help to him in sustaining American interests in the congress of peace at Paris. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman, but I desire to say that I do not oppose in any regard the statements which he has made. I am in entire accordance with them. I want to see the Pacific Fleet and the Pacific coast so strengthened that American security will be adequate and ample. I want to call the attention of the committee, however, very briefly to the situation.

As I understand it, we have now eliminated all of the items on pages 51 and 52 that might by any possibility apply to any new program which is proposed on pages 53 and 54.

I hope that there will be no opposition to the full carrying out of every single item in the program of 1916. I hope that we will put in operation all of the items of that program, and if more money is required for its completion I hope it will be granted. I am in favor of every increase asked on page 52, because after reading the evidence before the committee and talking with the members of the committee I am quite sure that in order to carry out the program of 1916 these increases will be required.

Gentlemen, there is not any question but that we will have our hands full in carrying out this program. It will require all the facilities that we now have and some that we do not now have, but which are preparing, in order to carry out this program of 1916, and according to the testimony before the committee it can not be completed until 1921. It is true that officers of the Navy say, "But we can increase the facilities in order to build additional vessels other than those that are required to carry out the 1916 program." That is very true, but to increase the facilities means the addition of hundreds of millions of dollars to our expenses. When you talk about increasing the facilities, it is not a very slight thing. The evidence before the committee showed that in order to increase the facilities in one navy yard for the purpose of building two battle cruisers it would require $17,000,000 merely to increase the facilities for building those vessels. So, gentlemen, I am not in favor of entering upon any such extension of the program until we know "where we are at," to use the expression of the gentleman from Texas. We on this side stand for a strong Navy and do not want to be placed in any attitude of opposition to it. We are building a strong Navy. The program of 1916, if carried out by 1921, will give this Nation incomparably the strongest Navy in the world—stronger than any three others—except that of Great Britain alone. So we are entirely justified in giving to the committee and in giving to the Secretary of the Navy every one of these items on pages 51 and 52; and then, being ready and able and willing, I hope to see that this additional program, which is nothing but a threat, will not be carried out until we know whether it is better for the country to adopt it or not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Even if it should be advisable to make any of the increases provided for in the new program, the gentleman, of course, notes that none of the construction is authorized until February 1, 1920, and there will be plenty of time even if this provision is beaten in this bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly there will; and a motion will be made to strike out this program.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The money appropriated in this bill is carried at the bottom of page 52. Pages 53 and 54 do not appropriate any money. In other words, the new program which the gentleman is speaking about and which the President adopts does not cost anything now.

Mr. TOWNER. No; we have all we can do to carry out the program until 1921, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I think I can take less than five minutes by asking permission to insert in the RECORD the copy of an order published at headquarters Coast Defense, Potomac, Fort Washington, Md.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the matter referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. SHOUSE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I stated the other day that I saw a bulletin posted at a camp notifying soldiers that they would be punished by court-martial if they applied to anybody outside of the camp for assistance in matters of discharge. In the time I have I want to call attention to this one which was posted at Fort Washington, within a very few minutes ride of this Capital.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not addressing himself to the amendment, and the amendment is to strike out the last word. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members present, a quorum, and the gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MASON) there were 3 ayes and 40 noes.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the Chair has just counted a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the point of the gentleman from Illinois is dilatory, that the Chair has just counted a quorum. The Chair sustains the point of order and the gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MASON. Does the RECORD show who it was that objected to my request to print in the RECORD the order of the commanding officer threatening court-martial to all boys who asked for outside assistance?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I objected, and I want the RECORD to show it.

Mr. MASON. Does the record show the gentleman's name?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MASON. I have nothing further to offer, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the Navy, armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament for vessels heretofore and herein authorized, to be available until expended, $32,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the committee having stricken out the words in line 10, the words "and herein" should be stricken out of this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Page 51, line 17, strike out the words "and herein."

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee for what purpose the $32,000,000 is to be used, whether any is to be used in the construction of an armor-plate plant that we authorized several years ago?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is for armament to go on the big ships and destroyers. No armor plate goes on the destroyers, but armament does.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is this armor plate to be manufactured, in private establishments or Government plants?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government plant is not yet prepared to manufacture armor plate. This will be done by contract. The armament is manufactured, some of it, in Government navy yards.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do the hearings disclose the price that the Government is paying private establishments for armor plate for battleships and large cruisers?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think we went into that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are the private manufacturers increasing the price for armor plate over what they charged before the Government authorized the establishment of an armor-plate factory?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We have not bought any armor plate lately, because we have not been constructing battleships. The ships we have been constructing during the last year have been destroyers and small craft.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before we got into the war there were battleships that had to be completed and for which armor plate was necessary, and we had to purchase it by contract.

Mr. PADGETT. There was a big increase just prior to the war in the price of armor. It went up very substantially, and for that reason the Government authorized the construction of an armor-plate plant.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, it was not for that reason. The price had not gone up at the time the Government authorized the establishment of a Government-owned armor-plate plant. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] well knows that he led the fight against the demand of the Secretary of the Navy for the establishment of an armor-plate plant, and that the price had not then gone up. That was not the reason for the Government going into the manufacture of armor plate.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, as far as I know I can say to the gentleman that there has been no increase in the price of armor plate on the battleships that are now being completed. If there is I never heard of it.

Mr. BUTLER. Neither did I.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I not only favor the pending amendment, but I favor striking from this bill every other reference to the so-called additional naval construction program. In discussing that proposition I do not think it is necessary to go into the question of the adequacy of the Navy in any manner whatsoever. This proposition goes solely to the question of the propriety now of authorizing an extravagant additional program under which no battleships can be contracted for prior to 1920, a program which can not be completed short of seven years.

The great nations of the world are staggering under a debt that will take a century of peace and prosperity to remove. Our own Nation is bonded to an extent which will require $1,000,000,000 annually for interest alone. Soldiers' insurance and other war liabilities are accumulating daily. At a time like this Congress should at least insist upon good and sufficient reason being shown before authorizing additional fighting ships costing approximately half a billion dollars.

Has anyone advanced a good reason for this additional authorization now? I have listened in vain to hear a single word that would warrant this action. You propose to authorize the President of the United States to undertake, prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the greatest naval program ever suggested in the history of the world. You propose such a scheme when your docks and yards are overcrowded with construction work on battleships ordered by the last Congress. Some of those ships already authorized have not been contracted for, and can not be completed in less than three years.

When half the world was on fire and our own security threatened, the Secretary of the Navy could not then see reason for preparation upon a scale like this. Now, when Germany has been humbled in defeat, crushed, and her navy surrendered to us and our allies, and the peace conference in session, we have the spectacle of our President preaching disarmament to the world and sending a mysterious message back to his own country asking us to authorize him to launch the greatest naval program in the world's history.

No wonder we are beginning to hear that British statesmen doubt his sincerity and ours as well. Is it any wonder that George Bernhard, in the Vossische Zeitung, quotes Secretary Daniels on his naval plan as indicating hostility between England and America? Whom are we getting ready to fight? When Germany had its great navy which threatened the peace of the world the most enthusiastic Navy advocates in this country never asked more than that the United States should have a Navy second only to that of Great Britain. Now it would seem that our President and our Secretary of the Navy are not content unless we have a Navy greater than the English Navy.

Let us apply good "horse sense" to this situation. Why do we need to place such a burden upon the people of this country and provide now for such a navy? Is there some likelihood of our engaging in war with England? I, for one, am absolutely unwilling to believe that such a situation is within the realm of possibility. If conditions have come to pass where such a thing is possible, God pity us and the future. If these English-speaking nations were obliged to engage in such a struggle, testing supremacy, both might fall the victims of anarchistic forces now busy throughout the world.

Why do I speak of England? Because we now have a Navy second only to that of Great Britain, and equal in strength to the combined navies of Japan, France, and Italy. Common sense tells me that there can be no reason for this extravagant program, unless those in authority would prepare us to possibly test strength with the British Navy. If this is not the purpose, then the proposal will go down in the annals of diplomatic history as one of the meanest, crudest bluffs ever recorded. [Applause.] I am satisfied that that is just what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. In the same manner that the contents of the President's mysterious cablegram has leaked out over the world, so the information of where this bluff originated at a Cabinet meeting has leaked out. I have heard upon sufficient authority to satisfy my mind that this idea did not originate with the President, nor with his Secretary of the Navy. It came from the fertile brain of another member of the Cabinet who is accredited with having suggested to the President of the United States the famous appeal to his "fellow countrymen" that the President issued just preceding the November election. Was the President sincere then? Is he sincere now?

I recall, during the debate on this bill, while the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] was speaking, that he was interrogated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who propounded this question:

Does the gentleman recall the secret treaty entered into between Great Britain and Japan, that gave to Japan the islands in the Pacific, some of them surrounding our great naval base, in the last three years?

Can any other inference be drawn from the query than that England might be more friendly to Japan than to the United States? If that were true—but it is not—then it is not only England's Navy that we should prepare to engage but we must have a Navy greater than the combined navies of England and Japan.

My friends, if this is not a bluff, is it not possible then that those who advise this extravagant program at such an inopportune time are the unconscious victims of German propaganda? So subtle is the German influence that during the early years of the war neither the President of the United States nor the Secretary of the Navy was able to distinguish between the wrong of Germany and the right of the allies. To-day Germany's master stroke would be to divide the allies at the peace table. She could accomplish nothing greater than to stir enmity between England and America. If we are to take such a course as is proposed here, we follow in the footsteps of Germany and proclaim our belief that "might makes right," and that brutal force is yet destined to rule the world.

If I remember history correctly, about 12 years ago Germany, all ready with its powerful army, launched forth a great naval program which threatened in time even the supremacy of the British Navy. France and England recognized this menace to their future peace. France requested Germany to agree upon a limitation as to military forces. Germany spurned the suggestion. England appealed for a limitation in naval armament by proclaiming to the world that she proposed that year to diminish by half her naval construction program. Germany's answer was to increase threefold her program for construction of battleships. England again to-day makes this suggestion for limitation in naval armament, and will the United States at a time like this, with the peace conference in session, answer by doubling her naval program?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. We have acquired the habit during the war to make every appropriation that those in executive authority demanded or requested. Now we are beginning to learn of waste, extravagance, and incompetency on every hand; but in spite of it all, while the war was on, handicapped because information was denied us, it was impossible for us to have done differently.

When those in authority asked for six hundred and forty millions for aviation purposes we were admonished in a mysterious manner not to ask questions, but to blindly vote the money, and we did it, and we added millions more for this purpose. We did it with a patriotic spirit, believing that American dollars should be spent lavishly if they would save American lives.

Now we learn that, with a billion dollars spent, not one combat plane from this country reached the front, at least before the very closing days of the war. The time has come when we should ask questions and insist upon information.

When the President appeared before us early in December bidding us farewell, among other things he told us that he had taken over the cables, so that we would be in close communication with abroad.

A few days ago we received a brief cablegram from the President, which we were all proud to have the permission to read, but, of course, giving no information, requesting Congress to vote $100,000,000. We sought information in vain, but at last concluded that, even without information, as the closing act of the great war we should resolve all doubts in favor of the request, and we added another burden of one hundred millions upon the people of this country.

When the President learned that Congress did not yet appreciate the transition from war to peace conditions, and that he could get us to appropriate one hundred millions without his giving any detailed information, he seems to have concluded that he can send another cablegram, which the ordinary Member of Congress is not even permitted to see or read, and get us to authorize him to enter upon a naval-construction program which would cost the people a billion dollars before it could be completed.

Now, to summarize briefly, it is proposed, in addition to the program already authorized, and which can not possibly be completed within three years, to authorize the President of the United States, prior to July 1, 1922, to burden the people of this Nation with a further program, 10 first-class battleships, 10 cruisers, and in addition to ask the Secretary of the Navy to tell Congress next December what additional ships he needs to "complete and round out the Navy of the United States."

None of these additional ships can be contracted for prior to February 1, 1920, so even if developments at the peace conference should indicate the desirability of our preparing to defeat the British Navy or the combined navies of the world, the naval-construction program of the United States will not be expedited one single moment by any action which the present Congress may take.

There is not a Member on the floors of Congress who does not realize that the outcome and decision of the peace conference now in session will be by far the greatest single factor in determining what our future naval program should be. In fact, the Committee on Naval Affairs expressly admits this by the provision at page 54 of this bill. I quote as follows:

If at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for there shall have been established with the cooperation of the United States of America any tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments, then and in that case such naval expenditure as may be inconsistent with the engagements made by the establishments of said tribunal or tribunals, may be suspended when so ordered by the President of the United States, and no contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920.

The peace conference may fail to provide a tribunal making possible the disarmament of nations, and we may disagree as to the application of the conclusions reached by that conference, but there is not a man in Congress who does not realize, and know, that the conclusions reached by the peace conference will at least afford us the best possible information upon which to base our future naval policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the end of three minutes, the gentleman to have those three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to have some time.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, there are lots of other paragraphs.

Mr. LANGLEY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Our Constitution charges Congress with the responsibility of providing for the Navy, and at a time like this, when there is no emergency, I, for one, shall refuse to sublet that authority to anyone, not even to the President of the United States.

When I realize that not one day's time can be gained by action now, I will refuse by my vote in this Congress to sanction the policy that may unnecessarily burden the people of this country with obligations running into countless millions. Nothing, in my judgment, would be so conducive in assuring the English and our other allies of our sincerity and our good faith as to have the American Congress refuse to put itself in a position of offering what might be construed as a hostile challenge to a friendly ally.

The American people do not expect the present Congress, in advance of decision by the peace conference now sitting, to decide our future naval policy. If we act now, we do so without any information. If we wait until the next session of Congress, our Navy will not have been handicapped in the least, not one single day will have been lost; but we will then be able to act intelligently in the light of developments and the result of the peace conference. The sponsors of this program ask us to act now in the darkness preceding the dawn. For one, I shall not do so. I hope this provision will be stricken from the bill. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. CURRIE of Michigan was given leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total increase of the Navy heretofore and herein authorized, $179,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman not offer to strike out those words "and herein"?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the same amendment in reference to that, to strike out the words "and herein" in line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Padgett: Page 51, line 22, after the word "heretofore" strike out the words "and herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to inquire of the Committee on Naval Affairs just what portion of the 1916 three-year naval program has been carried out. And also would like to know how long it will take for the department to complete the 1916 program.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS], I believe, has the statistics with reference to exactly what portion of this program has been completed and how far the department has gone in carrying this out, and I ask if he will be kind enough to state to the committee the exact condition with reference to this program.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Iowa, if he will yield, let me say that, according to the report of Admiral Taylor, the 1916 three-year program, calling for 10 battleships, 6 battle cruisers, and 10 scout cruisers, was, on the 1st day of February, and there has been very little change since then, as follows: None of those 10 battleships have been completed; 6 are zero done. They are being designed, and, while contracts have been let, no construction has been undertaken; four are from 5 to 40 per cent completed on the ways. The six cruisers are not being built. They are being designed, and some contracts for material have been let, but no keel has been laid. The 10 scout cruisers are from zero to 25 per cent finished. According to Admiral Taylor, of the 1916 program the first battleship could be completed in 18 months, and the last of that program, which would be the battle cruiser, the most complicated in design and the most difficult to build, would not be finished until five years from date. The total amount expended on the 1916 three-year program on December 1 was, roughly, $113,000,000. The amount necessary to complete the program from beginning to end is, roughly, estimated at $815,000,000. We have appropriated, including the amount expended of $113,000,000, about $240,000,000, leaving appropriations necessary to carry the program to completion $575,000,000, roughly. On February 1 we had 85 submarines in service, 73 building, and 9 authorized. On that same date we had 112 destroyers in service, 212 building, and 12 authorized. Does that answer the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. DOWELL. I believe it is the judgment of the Members present that we should at present continue to carry out the 1916 program and vote whatever appropriations are necessary to carry it out. The treaty of peace, however, is just now being formulated, and after the treaty of peace has been completed and signed, it would seem to me, we should then proceed to formulate and present a naval program dependent upon the conditions of the treaty of peace. The people of the country will then be able to know exactly the character of navy they want and need and will be able to correctly formulate a future policy.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from New York has made the request that he may hereafter have some time to discuss the program and announced that he would like to have 10 minutes, may I ask him whether it would be satisfactory to him if I can take his name from the list?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 minutes at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill, whether we wish it or not, has a significance much broader than its title indicates. It is not simply a bill to provide for increases in the Navy, but it has become an international bill by reason of the use of the cables. Now, to see whether or not it is wise that we should respond to and obey this cable message, let us look at the situation. We find first that it is totally unnecessary for us to prepare against Germany, because the German Navy is extinct. So the preparation must be as against our own allies, and as to the question of preparation against our allies let us see the state of feeling which existed at the close of the war and the change of feeling to which we are tending in the last few days. Starting with the feeling at the end of the war, the whole allied world gazed to the United States as coming to its rescue at a time when they were in dire extremity, and they were prepared to look upon us with feelings of the utmost friendship. We had millions of boys about to return to the pursuits of peace. We were building ships. We had to the south of us the great South American trade and territory. Looking back to 50 years ago we all believed that those boys, with the great experience of this war, with broadened vision, increased and ripened experience, would come back and man those ships and go to South America and conquer that trade. We believed we would have our vessels floating upon every sea and under every breeze, and we believed, go where they would, they would go to a welcoming people, who would say that the Nation from which these vessels come are the people who came to us when we were in straits, who loaned us money when we could not have borrowed it in the ordinary way and upon credit, they were the people who lined the battle line when it was thin and trembling and in distress, and so we were ready to conquer the commercial world and trade supremacy through the good will of the world that we had helped win the allied victory. What do we find now? We find that we announced at the end of the war that we had nothing to ask, that we asked no indemnities, we wanted no aggrandizement of territory, and yet we find that we have gone abroad and we have alienated those who up to this time were our allies. We find that from distant Australia there comes a cry that we should not interfere with their security by opposing their acquisition of the islands nearest to them.

We find we are in conflict with England to the extent that we want to issue this threat. We find that France is doubtful whether it is going to be isolated and made to stand alone in the future against the German threat. We find in the press of France and of England, instead of there being the acclaim for America which has prevailed to the present time, there is doubt and question; there is unfriendliness; there is something in the future that looms up like a cloud on the horizon. And we are asked now to authorize this increased naval program to carry out such a line of policy as has already alienated the feelings and affection and the attitude of those who up to this moment have been our allies.

Now, let us take the league of nations for a moment; let us take those who favor it and those who oppose it. Can you have any greater indictment of the feasibility and practicability of the league of nations than to say that you shall start it with a threat and accompany that threat by an appropriation of vast amounts to build up a great navy? Why, this league is one to enforce peace. This league is one to make wars impossible. Yet we are to make the basis, we are to make the foundation upon which we are to build this beatific, this peaceful league, armament and naval supremacy and preparation for instant war, and, above all that, the threat of war, the threat of war against those who to-day and through the weary days of the war have been our friends and our allies.

So, speaking entirely aside from the title of the bill, taking the broader purpose which this bill has assumed and in which it stands not alone before this Nation, but before the world, can we afford to begin an era of peace, can we afford to begin the millenium, so far as we are concerned, first, by a threat and, second, by an appropriation intended to enforce that threat? I say not. And then I say, so far as this program is concerned, we can well afford to leave to those who come after us what shall be done after February 1, 1920, because no contract is to be let until February 1, 1920. Are not our successors to be men of as great vision as we are, as patriotic and devoted to the public interest as we, and will not they have the advantage of seeing the situation as it then exists and provide, in the light of what has developed to that time, for the needs of that day? So, both from the standpoint of keeping the good wishes and the kindly thought of the world, keeping the world in harmony and unison with us, keeping the trade of the world, in order to conquer the trade of the world, as we can conquer it—from that standpoint and from the standpoint of waiting to be in possession of all the facts, as we will be when the time comes, I am against this future authorization at this time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The provision in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1918, under the increase of the Navy, which reads as follows: "but not later than June 30, 1919," is hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. That it is a repeal of law; that it changes existing law.

Mr. PADGETT. May I ask the gentleman to reserve that a moment?

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to get along with this bill. It is late in the day.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] say to the point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. It is subject to a point of order. But it is very necessary to have that, in order to go ahead and facilitate the preparation.

Mr. MANN. I think there will be time enough after this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order, the gentleman from Tennessee admits the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Battle cruisers numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 from $19,800,000 to $23,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I understand it, all the vessels for which appropriation is made in these paragraphs have been authorized by preceding law.

Mr. PADGETT. This does not make appropriation. This simply authorizes the increase of the limitation of cost. All were authorized heretofore in the 1916 program.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell offhand how much is to be appropriated, the sum total for all these vessels provided for on page 52?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not separate those. These are only a part of the 1916 program. It has been estimated and has been stated a number of times here that we have appropriated, I think, about $240,000,000 all told, and there is something like $400,000,000 yet to be appropriated to complete the 1916 program.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Upward of 30 vessels are appropriated for on this page?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. There were 56 vessels——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Fifty-six altogether?

Mr. PADGETT (continuing). In the 1916 program.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That includes battleships, battle cruisers, scout cruisers, gunboats, ammunition ships, submarines, and so forth. May I ask the gentleman if he has information as to the capacity of the shipyards of the United States to go on with this program now?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that for all of this that is mentioned here they have capacity and they are expecting to proceed with it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the navy yards as well as in private shipyards?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; both.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have contracts been prepared for this work?

Mr. PADGETT. Contracts have been prepared for all of it, I believe, except two of the battleships, and those are under negotiation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How about the shipyards and navy yards with respect to future work over and above that provided for here?

Mr. PADGETT. It was stated by Admiral Taylor they would be able to take care of the laying down or beginning the construction of two battleships and two of the scout cruisers in the new program during the latter part of the fiscal year 1920. That is, in about April or May they can begin the construction of the two battleships.

Mr. BROWNING. They said that they could lay down the battleships, but the United States would have to pay for the ways.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not so understand.

Mr. BROWNING. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point I am trying to get at is are we prepared for the construction of so many ships of one kind and another in the shipyards and navy yards of the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. At this time; yes. They said they would have opportunity to take on these dimensions in April or May of 1920.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is very important in connection with the discussion that will probably ensue after these paragraphs are passed?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That any additional ships that we may be called upon to construct for defense or for the purposes of the Navy generally could not be commenced, considering the capacity of the shipyards of the United States and of the navy yards, until April or May, 1920?

Mr. PADGETT. That is about the time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My recollection of what he said is that there would be a capacity for two battleships over and above what has been authorized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell how extensive is the program following that which we are just reading—the program that is proposed to run along until 1920?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not quite get what the gentleman means.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The shipyards, according to the statement of the gentleman, and the navy yards, if they are all brought into service, will have all the work they can possibly do to complete the 1916 program.

Mr. PADGETT. Here is the language that Admiral Taylor used in an unpublished hearing. We had an informal hearing before the committee:

If necessary, could lay down this battleship of new program in a few months.
One thousand-foot ways now available at Puget Sound.
Could extend the ways at New York ship for battleship.
Could provide additional ships in private yards if necessary. Also one in Norfolk yard.

"New York ship" refers to the yard at Camden.

He stated that he could provide additional ships in the Norfolk yard, but to provide those additional ones referred to here would require additional ways.

Mr. BUTLER. And the expenditure of a lot of money.

Mr. PADGETT. He said he could lay down two of them in the early part of next year.

Mr. BUTLER. After they finished this next battleship they could begin.

Mr. PADGETT. When it goes off the ways it goes into the water.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On page 54, lines 13, 14, and 15, there is this provision:

And no contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920.

Now, the question arises with some of us—it has arisen with me: Why, if we are building to capacity now; why, if we provide for all the ships which our workmen and our shipyards are capable of producing, should we make provision in this bill for other vessels or for vessels already authorized and say that "No contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920"?

I ask that question because this seems to involve the President's message to the committee, that something should be done covering the period between now and 1920. If we have provided for all the vessels that can be constructed, taking into account the capacity of all the yards we have in the United States and all the labor we can employ, why should we now, in 1919, say that we will provide for something or other but shall not make any contract for it until February 1, 1920?

Mr. PADGETT. The three-year program is the carrying out of a policy which Congress established in 1916. The provision was for the laying down during the first year of two battleships and two of the scout cruisers, and they were prepared to do that during the fiscal year. They can begin the construction and lay down those during the fiscal year.

The time—February 1, 1920—was fixed by the committee as a reasonable time in which to await the development of the establishment of a league of nations, or a society of nations, or a program for disarmament, coupled with the power that the President could suspend this construction if such an arrangement was made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask how the date February 1, 1920, happened to have been hit upon by the committee? Why not December 1, 1920, following November, 1920?

Mr. PADGETT. There were times mentioned, January 1 and February 1, and it was agreed in the committee as February 1, because it will allow from now until then and allow two months after the assembling of the next Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it be embarrassing to the committee if December 1, 1920, had been fixed?

Mr. PADGETT. It would allow additional time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. February 1 might be at the very inception of a campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gunboat No. 21, from $1,032,000 to $1,100,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOWARD. I do so just to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. The gentleman may have given to the House the information desired prior to this, and if he has done so I will not trouble him to answer it. But I want to find out, if I can, why this increase in the contract price of these vessels, ranging between two and three million dollars each. What is the reason for that?

Mr. PADGETT. It is on account of the increased cost of labor and material. We have gone into it very fully.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] awhile ago, in response to some question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], he stated the percentages of completion at which many of these vessels had arrived.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Also there is another complication involved in it. It is the complication of lack of ways on the Pacific coast and in New York.

Mr. PADGETT. This is for the vessels themselves.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand. Do you attribute it to the cost of materials or the increased cost of labor?

Mr. PADGETT. Both.

Mr. HOWARD. And have you made any allowance for a normal condition in this country that will be bound to follow this declaration of peace?

Mr. PADGETT. When war was declared it was impossible in the disturbed conditions then existing to secure any lump-sum contracts. All of them were upon the cost-plus-a-profit basis, and the cost of labor has gone up about 100 per cent. The cost of material has gone up from 100 to 150 per cent, and the Government under these contracts pays the cost of labor and the cost of material. If it goes down in the future, the Government would get the benefit of whatever reduction there was. But this is estimated upon the present basis of the cost of labor and material.

Mr. HOWARD. The question I intended to impress upon the gentleman is this: Will the Government of the United States get any advantage of any decrease in any cost of material, or even any decrease in the cost of labor, if we authorize you now to increase the cost of these superdreadnaughts $3,000,000 if labor or materials should decrease in value?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government would get the benefit of it.

Mr. HOWARD. To what extent—the extent of the decrease?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Is that in the contract?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. The Government has a contract providing that it pays the cost of the labor and the cost of material. If the price of material goes down, the Navy pays only its cost; if the labor goes down, the Government pays only the cost of the labor.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it one of the cost-plus contracts?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; all of them are.

Mr. HOWARD. What percentage on the gross cost of it?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not tell you as to each one, but the Navy Department made a contract providing that the profit was not to exceed a certain total amount. They did not have just an unlimited cost plus. The profit was a certain per cent, but not to exceed so much in the aggregate.

Mr. HOWARD. Was it graduated along the same line as the now famous Council of National Defense contracts, the war contracts, providing that they should get so much percentage on the first $1,000,000 and decreasing as it went up?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and with a limit on the total. When the profit reached, say, $200,000 or $250,000, then there was no further profit.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman be generous enough to answer just one more question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. As chairman of the committee, has the gentleman any objection to extending the limitation of time within which these contracts must be let from February 1, 1920, to June 30, 1920, which is the end of that fiscal year?

Mr. PADGETT. We can discuss that when we come to it, but I think that would be ill-advised.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdraw and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gunboat No. 21 from $1,032,000 to $1,100,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply to ask the chairman of the committee if it is the policy of the department to include what is known as the gunboats in our naval fleet at this time?

Mr. PADGETT. This is a gunboat that is almost completed. It is not intended to begin the construction of the second one, No. 22, and it was for that purpose as to one of the ships that we inserted the provision that went out awhile ago upon a point of order. This gunboat is very largely completed.

Mr. WALSH. I thought it was agreed among naval experts that this type of craft had become obsolete.

Mr. PADGETT. No. This type of gunboat is a valuable ship, and No. 21 is 90 per cent completed.

Mr. WALSH. What is it valuable for?

Mr. PADGETT. It is very valuable. It is used in all shallow waters. It is used on the Asiatic coast, up the rivers, and in South America, and in the West Indies.

Mr. WALSH. Have we 20 other gunboats?

Mr. PADGETT. There have been 20 others that up to that time had been built or authorized. Whether they are all in commission or not I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know how many others there are in the fleet?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not the list here with me. The Navy list would show that. Heretofore we have been very short on gunboats, and the department has been recommending them year after year since I have been on the committee, but the committee heretofore have been emphasizing the large ship construction, depending upon securing the smaller vessels when they should be actually needed.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. How many gunboats will we have in the service when we complete the 60 Eagle boats, known as the Ford boats? They are rated as gunboats. How many will we have in all?

Mr. WALSH. The Eagle boat is not a gunboat.

Mr. BUTLER. We will use them for harbor work and river work.

Mr. WALSH. Where the water is thick enough so that it will not permeate the apertures in the hulls of the Eagle boats, probably they will float, but as I understand it they are not called gunboats, and are not even feeble imitations of gunboats. I was asking how many gunboats we would have in our naval fleet.

Mr. PADGETT. There are 30 gunboats that have been authorized up to the present time, as I understand it. Number 30 is the one numbered 22 that I mentioned awhile ago that has not been begun, and we do not contemplate beginning it.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state why that is?

Mr. PADGETT. Because they thought that in view of the addition of small craft during the war they did not need it. The other one, No. 21, is 90 per cent completed.

Mr. WALSH. If they do not need it, why should we spend $68,000 additional to complete No. 21?

Mr. PADGETT. Because we have already spent over $1,000,000 on it in getting it 90 per cent completed.

Mr. WALSH. Then they are going to need this No. 21?

Mr. PADGETT. If it was an original proposition I do not think they would build it; but having spent over $1,000,000 on it and having it 90 per cent completed there is nothing to do except to go ahead and complete it.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman, further, if that is the theory upon which these increases are asked in these various other items—that we have got them 90 per cent completed?

Mr. PADGETT. Some of them are not as much as 90 per cent completed, but where we have spent a million or two upon a boat we can not scrap it. We have got to complete it and use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee how these Ford boats are classified and what they call them.

Mr. PADGETT. They named them "Eagle boats." They were built for war purposes. They were intended to be used as submarine chasers. There were 112 contracted for altogether, but when the hostilities ceased they canceled the order for 52. Sixty of them had progressed so far that it was stated to the committee that it was economy and good business for the Government to complete them rather than attempt to scrap them. When completed they can use them for such purposes as may be available, or Congress can order them sold. They had reached such a stage that it was good business judgment and economy to complete them.

Mr. DENISON. How long are they and what do they cost?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not tell the cost. The contract was made—one of those cost-plus contracts. It was estimated by the Ford Co. that they could be constructed for $275,000 each, but Admiral Taylor stated that he thought that was an underestimate, and if they could be completed around $400,000 each, that would not be an unreasonable cost for a boat of that character.

Mr. BUTLER. It will take $24,000,000 to complete them and cost $100,000 each year to keep them up—man them with 80 men.

Mr. DENISON. Can the gentleman inform us where they could be disposed of?

Mr. PADGETT. I think they could be disposed of to some of these countries, but we are not ready to dispose of them yet.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise for information. I would like to ask the gentleman who on earth, or on the waters of the earth, would want one of these boats?

Mr. PADGETT. I am told that they are a very good boat. Admiral Taylor has gone into it, and he says that it is a good boat.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. For what purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. For war purposes; they were calling for them and demanding them.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But the war is over.

Mr. PADGETT. I know it; but before the war was over they had begun the construction of 60, and so far completed them that it was thought economy to finish them up.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What can they do with them now the war is over?

Mr. PADGETT. They will be used in harbor work to supplant gunboats as far as they can in the shoal waters and in river service, in the Asiatic service, South America, and the West Indies.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What will they do with them?

Mr. PADGETT. Do the work where you would not want to send a big cruiser or a battleship.

Mr. STAFFORD. They can be used as pleasure yachts; they are suitable for that purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think so.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I do not know any more about it than I did before, but I concede that the gentleman from Tennessee has done his best. [Laughter.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition ship No. 1 from $2,820,000 to $3,250,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee in this connection why the Government increased to such an inordinate extent the appropriation for ammunition for the Navy, carrying, as it does, a threefold increase over the bill in war time?

Mr. PADGETT. The amount carried in the last bill was supplemented by further appropriations. This increase is on account of the large number of ships, the big ships, that they propose to go ahead in the construction of now, that were held up during the war. This is for the ships of the 1916 building program.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it will not violate any naval secret, will the gentleman inform the House as to the condition of the supply of ammunition at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. The admiral stated it in a general way that we were fairly well off for powder, that we had a good big amount of powder, and yet, when you take into consideration the number of ships on the building program that are to be built and that would be authorized, taking the ships into consideration, there were three types of projectiles that we have not a sufficient number of—the large projectiles, and also in the smaller there is a shortage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not the policy some years ago for the department to lay by a large reserve of powder in case of emergency?

Mr. PADGETT. They started on that policy, but before they got it completed the war came on.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the Navy had occasion to use much of this ammunition during the war?

Mr. PADGETT. No; other than they have used it all the time, or a good deal of it, for target practice.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the gentleman intimated that the Navy had been engaged in some conflict where they had used a large amount of ammunition.

Mr. PADGETT. No; but when you take into account this large number of ships there is a great amount needed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How long does this powder last; does it deteriorate in time?

Mr. PADGETT. Years ago it did deteriorate very rapidly, but in later years, with improved processes of manufacture, they have lengthened the life of it very much, and they state now that 15 years or more is the life of the powder. A large amount of powder is required each year for target practice and the development in training purposes. They use the oldest powder each time, and the new powder is added to the supply. In using powder now they take it from the oldest, so that the new powder is added to the reserve.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then it means that 15 years after powder is made it still can be used effectively in battle?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it may begin to deteriorate, but the powder is not wasted. They then put it into the mill and rework it at a cost of about 10 per cent of its original cost.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And that restores its power and vitality?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it puts it back right into its power again.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee give us a little information about those large naval guns that we had on our western battle front, and what has or will become of them?

Mr. PADGETT. They are still over there. They were sent over by the Navy, and they were placed under the command of Gen. Pershing. He sent some of them into the Argonne Forest front, near Verdun, and two of them, I think, were sent down below there into the St. Mihiel sector, and we saw three of them. They had moved out two of them just a few days before we were at St. Nazarre, and they did wonderful work. The committee had a hearing upon that from Admiral Plunkett, who was in charge of that operation under the Navy. If the gentleman will refer to his statement he will find it very interesting. They did very satisfactory work. They were taken right up and some of them were used in the sector there above Nancy, up to the north of Verdun, right in view of Metz. While they did not shell the forts of Metz, because that was not regarded as the proper military thing to do, they shelled the railroads and approaches leading into Metz and created great confusion and disturbance, breaking up lines of communication and their means of getting in and out of Metz.

Mr. DENISON. Were they operated by men from the Army or the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. From the Navy.

Mr. DENISON. Will they be serviceable for naval purposes after this?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes. They were naval guns taken over there, and they were placed on a car built for that purpose. The car ran along the railroad track and the gun operated on that as its base, just as if in a ship. They could fire over 30 miles.

The Clerk read as follows:

Submarines (R) Nos. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 from $700,000 to $840,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I undertook to get the attention of the Chair in order to discuss line 17, which provides money for the completion of a gunboat, not likely to be needed, as a part of the defenses.

Mr. PADGETT. That gunboat No. 21 is 90 per cent completed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; that is it.

Mr. PADGETT. No. 22 has not been started, and they do not want to begin it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All right. I desire to call attention to the fact that there are many merchant ships on the coast of the United States in all stages of completion, and that one arm of the Government, the United States Shipping Corporation, followed in authority by the Shipping Board, proposes to abandon a number of them upon the ground that the war emergency does not exist; that we can cut down the number of these ships and pay damages for contracts let, and let the ships go. I am wondering what the people of the country will think of that when it is proposed in this bill to complete more or less obsolete ships for naval purposes, gunboats, Eagle boats, and the like of that, because they are partially done.

Mr. PADGETT. This gunboat was ordered as of 1916, and is of the latest type, and it is a valuable and useful ship, of its type.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of its type, of course; but at the same time we are trying to increase this appropriation and are in danger of hooking on another great program, so that future Congresses will find themselves in the same predicament as this Congress when it is asked to go on with the work.

Mr. PADGETT. We do not authorize or report any authorization for gunboats.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They have got to be paid for just the same, as we quickly find out, and at increased figures.

Mr. PADGETT. No; just simply the battleships and the scout cruisers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is to say, the authorization proposed is for new battleships and new cruisers—20 of them in all. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] spoke about the cost of labor on these ships now building, and it was stated these increases are necessary largely because of the cost of labor. Can the chairman say how the labor scale in the navy yards runs with the wage scale established by the Government in the merchant shipyards, where we have now a number of strikes on the part of employees who are receiving Government authorized wages?

Mr. PADGETT. The navy yard had a scale of wages adopted and recommended by the labor boards that were established. The last one of them was known as the Macey Board.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the same labor scale, then——

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that fixed the labor for the Shipping Board, for the Army, and for the Navy. It increased wonderfully in amount and wonderfully in frequency.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How does the gentleman account for the fact that the shipbuilders working for the shipping corporation in the construction of merchant ships at the Macey scale of wages strike and those in the yard of the Government working on warships do not strike?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know why men will strike in private concerns and not strike against the Government, unless it is the governmental influence.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Perhaps the fact that the Government selects its navy yard workmen through the civil service, which requires them to be American citizens, has something to do with it. In that connection I would call attention to some of the mistakes in some legislation that we have passed. It seems that out in Seattle the immigration commissioner of the United States for all of that country is also the labor mediator, and he was until recently in charge of the United States Labor Employment Bureau. It strikes me that these positions, or any two of them, are inharmonious and should be in separate hands. In the Northwest the citizens have been trying for a long time to have a lot of revolutionary agitators—foreigners—deported, but for some reason it has not been done. Many of these foreigners, who have not even taken out their first papers, have been taken into the unions and have swamped certain unions. When the time comes for their deportation by the United States immigration commissioner, the step is made hard for that official and is likely to embarrass him in his capacity as Federal labor mediator. I have a telegram here that says there are not less than 500 aliens in Seattle, many of them labor agitators and leaders, who can be deported under the laws we have already on our statutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell from what fund this gentleman who holds these three positions is paid?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. From what fund is he paid?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I assume all of these positions are run by the Department of Labor. The Department of Labor has in it these and other bureaus, and we have made a great appropriation also for Federal employment agencies, and I suppose that is carried from the Department of Labor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they are asking no additional appropriation now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not criticize the bureau or the United States official, but I call attention to the fact that the work of several should not be handled by one agent. I believe that has to do with a lot of our present trouble on Puget Sound. There are 500 unnaturalized Russians and Finns out there, who ought to be started out just as soon as possible. Send them back where the kind of liberty they want can be had.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman think the duties of this official to whom he refers are incompatible and conflict with each other?

Mr. PADGETT. Outside of that, the city has a very good reputation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A splendid reputation and a great shipbuilding reputation and a war shipbuilding reputation. Mr. Chairman, I yield back any time I may have remaining and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, reported in Two hundred and sixteenth United States Supreme Court reports, page 499.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman ought to continue his statement as to what it is.

Mr. GORDON. It is in support of the proposition that executive officers are not authorized to settle claims for unliquidated damages. It is in support of that legal proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not see that that is pertinent to the subject under inquiry.

Mr. GORDON. It is just as pertinent as the preceding remarks. I will say to the gentleman, I have been engaged in committee——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RANDALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on January 25, 1919, approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 3299. An act authorizing the President to reappoint Maj. Chalmers G. Hall, retired, to the active list of the Army;

S. 4924. An act to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries; and

H. J. Res. 372. Joint resolution to amend Senate joint resolution No. 78, approved October 5, 1917, entitled "Joint resolution to suspend requirements of the annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918."

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Submarines (S) No. 1, 2, and 3 from $1,200,000 to $1,500,000.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In line 20 I see the letter "R" is in brackets. Does that describe the type of submarines?

Mr. PADGETT. That describes its class or type, and the letter "S" describes another type.

Mr. KEARNS. I see for three submarines you have increased the amount $300,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARNS. And in lines 24 and 25 you have 37 U-boats of the same type as in line 22, where the increase is only $450,000. What is the explanation?

Mr. PADGETT. The first three were begun earlier, and there was a great deal of material bought at a cheaper price than these later ones that came in of the same type.

Mr. KEARNS. If you had material bought when it was cheap, what is the reason now for the increase?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not begin all of them at the same time.

Mr. KEARNS. There is 1, 2, and 3; are those——

Mr. PADGETT. They are the same class, but they are a little bit different from the others. I think these others are a little later in type; a little larger or different in construction.

Mr. KEARNS. Here is the question I want to ask the chairman: Why is the increase for 3 boats $300,000 and the increase for 37 boats only $450,000?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I stated—those first three are near completion and the larger part of work was done when the labor cost and material cost was not so great.

Mr. KEARNS. That is just the reason why the increase ought not to be so great. You have increased here $300,000 for 3 boats and for 37 boats, which are not as nearly completed, you only increase those $450,000.

Mr. PADGETT. We increase the first ones $300,000 and increase the others $450,000.

Mr. KEARNS. But in the first class there are only 3 boats and in the next class there are 37, and the first class, containing 3 boats, are almost completed?

Mr. PADGETT. Those 37 are not as far advanced as the 3 and they were made later and the latter price is higher than the earlier price.

Mr. KEARNS. Would not one think that is just the reason why increase for the 37 boats ought to be greater, or the discrepancy greater, than that set out?

Mr. PADGETT. From 4 to 41 the increase is $450,000 each, and in the others the increase is only from $1,200,000 to $1,500,000, or $300,000 each.

Mr. KEARNS. Oh, no; you have not gotten that right.

Mr. PADGETT. Submarines Nos. 1, 2, and 3——

Mr. KEARNS. You have got an increase there of $300,000 for those three boats that you say were contracted for when the price of materials was cheap. And you have got an increase of $300,000 for them.

Mr. PADGETT. For each one of them.

Mr. KEARNS. The whole thing.

Mr. PADGETT. It is for each one.

Mr. KEARNS. Your bill does not say so.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the limit of cost. It says:

The limit of cost of vessels heretofore authorized and herein below enumerated are as follows.

The limit of cost on the first 3 was fixed at $1,200,000. Now, then, on the 4 to 41 the limit of cost was fixed at $1,300,000. They could not complete them for that. And this is simply an authorization increasing the limit of cost. It is not an appropriation. It is just simply the limit of cost on each boat from $1,200,000 to $1,500,000 for the 3 and $1,300,000 for the others to $1,750,000 each. It is just the limit of cost. It is not an appropriation, and it is only an authorization to proceed with that cost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Submarines (8) from No. 4 to No. 41, both inclusive, from $1,300,000 to $1,750,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bottom of page 51 to offer as an amendment the provision which was stricken out on a point of order. I will ask the gentleman if he will consent to it?

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, I am willing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to the bottom of page 51 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 51, insert the following:
"The provision in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1918, under the increase in the Navy, which reads as follows: 'but not later than June 30, 1919,' is hereby repealed."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what is the idea of restoring that? It is really legislation.

Mr. PADGETT. The act of July 1, 1918, that was passed the 1st of July, had a mandatory provision directing the Secretary of the Navy to begin the construction of all the ships authorized in the 1916 program before June 30, 1919. This repeals that mandatory provision. There are 12 destroyers which we do not wish to build. Unless that is repealed the Secretary is urged to begin the construction of them. The nine fleet submarines they do not wish to build at this time, for the reason that we are constructing three others that are now nearing completion, and they want to get them completed and tested and carried out before they build these nine. If they had to observe this mandatory direction in the act of July 1 last they will have to begin them on the same plans and designs of the three that they are now building; but they want to wait and get the benefit of the experiments and the testing and trial of these boats before they begin those nine.

Then, there are destroyer tenders Nos. 3 and 4 that they do not want to begin the construction of, and they do not think they want to build them at all. They do not think they need them. The submarine tender No. 3 they have not begun the construction of. They do not want to begin it; they do not think they will need it, and they do not want to build it. But under this provision they are compelled to begin construction before the 30th of June.

Then they do not want to begin the construction of transport No. 2, and they do not want to begin the construction of repair ship No. 1. They do not think they will need it. During the war they converted other ships into repair ships that are serving the purpose very well and very satisfactorily, and they think they can dispense with that.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any difficulty in the disinclination on the part of the experts to begin the construction of these ships based upon the fact that they are not large enough, and that consequently they are going to quit building these small fry and seek to get authorization for 10 first-class battleships and 10 scout cruisers—something that is worthy of their efforts?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. Take the submarines, for instance. I suppose that is what you refer to?

Mr. WALSH. I am referring to the ships you have been enumerating and which the experts do not want to begin.

Mr. PADGETT. As to the 12 destroyers, we have about 330 destroyers besides these 12. They say they think they have enough for the present, and they do not want to build any more of that type. If any others are to be built they would be of a type as the result of future investigation and consideration. The nine fleet submarines I explained about. They are about between 1,100 and 1,200 tons displacement.

Mr. WALSH. Still further reserving the right to object, I suppose the members of the Committee of the Whole are justified in assuming that the message from the Chief Executive expressing the desirability of this bill being passed by the House is predicated upon the fact that this repeal was in the bill, among other things, are they not?

Mr. PADGETT. There is no relation between the two, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I was just wondering whether the President knew that in place of or in addition to authorizing him to construct a vast number of other larger ships he also knew we were going to repeal provisions made for several smaller ships and stop construction on them?

Mr. PADGETT. It only repeals that part of it directing it to be begun at this time. It still leaves it open to be begun hereafter; but, as I stated, they do not want to build any more destroyers of that type. They do not want to build these nine submarines until they have completed the three that are nearing completion, until they have tested them and tried them out, to see whether or not it would be that type or whether they would come to Congress for authorization of a different type.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state, if this repeal is enacted into law, how long will they wait before they decide whether to build these other submarines, and whom they are going to practice on to find out how they work?

Mr. PADGETT. They would test out the three that are being constructed, and then they would have to come to Congress for an appropriation to build the additional ones, if they proceeded to build them, or if they were a different type they would submit the matter to Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, we might just as well overlook this one of the many absurdities in this legislation, and I will not object.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman if there has been any loss incurred by reason of the authorization of the building of these nine fleet submarines.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand not.

Mr. HENSLEY. None whatever?

Mr. PADGETT. That is as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have reached the question of the new program, and I would like to see if we can not——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the first paragraph read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the vessels enumerated below.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is legislation, not an appropriation. It does not purport to be an appropriation. It purports to be an authorization. An authorization is a change of existing law. Rule XXI, paragraph 2, which the Chairman will have before him, provides:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Of course, that paragraph of the rules does not apply to the paragraph under consideration, because the paragraph in the bill to which I made a point of order is not an appropriation. That paragraph in the rules has been construed many times, and the construction given to that paragraph probably led the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to think that an item of authorization in the naval appropriation bill is in order, whereas the rulings are quite the reverse.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole many years ago held—and his ruling has been followed ever since—that an appropriation for a new Navy vessel of a type already in existence was an appropriation in continuation of public works and objects already in progress. The ruling was that the building up of a Navy was a public work and object in progress, and that an item of appropriation for a new ship was in order, provided there was already in the Navy a ship of that type. But it was frequently held that even an appropriation for a new ship in the naval bill—a new ship of a different type from that already in the Navy—was not in order.

However, this is not an appropriation and does not purport to be an appropriation. It appropriates no money. It merely authorizes the construction of certain ships, and the second sentence of the same rule, paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The exception is not claimed to be covered by anything in this bill. There is no pretense that this is a reduction of any of the expenditures of the classes named in the rule, so that the provision in the rule which says "Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order" is an absolute provision as to this paragraph. What is the paragraph?

For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake, prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the vessels enumerated below

Under the existing law the President is not authorized to provide for the construction of these vessels. The existing law gives him no such authority, and it is proposed here to change the existing law by giving him that authority. So that the provision in the bill is purely one of legislation changing existing law, contrary to the provisions of the rule of the House, and hence it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair's recollection is that the original ruling was made by Mr. Chairman McCreary, of Kentucky. The Chair has before him volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, section 3723, page 486, and if the gentleman will permit, the Chair will read:

On February 26, 1887, the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering the naval appropriation bill, when Mr. Joseph D. Sayers, of Texas, offered an amendment authorizing the construction of "two swift double-bottomed steel cruisers" and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point of order that there was no law authorizing the appropriation.

After debate the Chairman cited the rule and exception, and said:

That is to say, if the work be a public work, or if the object is a public object, and it is already in progress, then there need not be any previous legislation authorizing it.

What the Chair wants to ask the gentleman from Illinois is this: Has he before him the exact law that was passed at that time?

Mr. MANN. I have not, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything additional?

Mr. MANN. I have not; but my recollection is—and it has been ruled upon many times since—that that was an appropriation for the construction of vessels theretofore not specifically authorized by law, and the point of order was that it was an appropriation not authorized by law; and the ruling was, in substance—and it has been followed many times since—that an appropriation may be carried in the naval bill providing for the construction of new naval vessels not theretofore specifically authorized by law as a public work in progress, the recent rulings, which extend back many years, specifically holding that such an appropriation was only in order if a vessel of the same type was already in use in the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of the type——

Mr. MANN. That is not involved here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not involved here. Does the Chair understand it to be the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that unless an appropriation is carried along with the authorization it is subject to the point of order?

Mr. MANN. My contention is, and that has been held by the various Chairmen at different times, that you can make an appropriation for a new naval vessel, but that is all you can do. The appropriation is, hence, an authorization for the President or the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of the vessel. The appropriation itself is the authorization. But that does not provide for a change of existing law by making an appropriation. Here, for instance, where no limit of cost is fixed, we can appropriate money for building an addition to the Capitol Building if we choose to, and it is not subject to a point of order. The appropriation is not subject to a point of order because it would be held that that is an appropriation for a public work already in progress. But we could not authorize, even in the appropriation, over a point of order, specific directions as to how that work should be carried on; nor could we in the appropriation bill make an authorization merely for an addition to the Capitol over the point of order. That arises as to all public buildings. We have frequently provided for that. We did it in the case of the insane asylum out here at St. Elizabeths. We appropriated money for the purchase of additional ground adjoining the ground already there, it being held by the Chairman that that was a continuation of a public work already in existence. That is an appropriation. There is no appropriation involved here. It is merely a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may repeat it, the language as contained in the precedent is——

Mr. MANN. The Chair will note that the point of order made was that it was an appropriation not authorized by law. That was the point of order against that item.

The CHAIRMAN. There was coupled with the language that which is in quotation, "two swift double-bottomed steel cruisers," and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. MANN. Yes; that was the language.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the quotation ends with the word "cruisers."

Mr. MANN. That was a mere appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. No; that was an authorization and an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Of course, an appropriation for a specific object is itself an authorization for the expenditure of the money. Any appropriation, anywhere carried, is in itself an authorization for the expenditure of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but the question which is in the mind of the Chair, under the rulings—and they are very numerous—is whether the appropriation must be coupled with the authorization in order to make it in order under the precedents?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there never has been a ruling of the Chair on the naval bill which has held, if my memory serves me right, and I think it does, that even as to these battleships we could give directions as to the character of the battleship, the radius of the battleship, or anything of that kind, because that is an authorization and subject to the point of order. We can make an appropriation for the battleship, and then it is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy under existing law as to the expenditure of the money, the method, and form of its expenditure; but when we attempt to direct his jurisdiction, that is a change of existing law. We have the authority to make the appropriation, but not to give directions, without legislation. Of course, the Committee on Naval Affairs can bring before the House a bill at any time giving specific directions about any of these things; but the authority of an appropriation bill is to make an appropriation. The Committee on Appropriations, in bringing in the sundry civil appropriation bill, for instance, or the fortifications appropriation bill, which will soon be before the House, has no authority to give directions to the executive officers about how the money shall be expended. They may add a limitation that it may not be expended in a certain way. All they can do under the rules, over a point of order, is to make the appropriation in the hands of existing authorities available to be disposed of under existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the fact that this is an extremely important parliamentary question. The Chair will be glad to hear from any gentleman opposed to the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with parliamentary law and do not claim to be, but I have always understood that the rulings were that it was in order on the naval appropriation bill to authorize a continuance of the construction of the ships of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. Without making an appropriation therefor?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so, because the first year that I was upon the Naval Committee we authorized, without any appropriation at all, and it was only after I had been upon the committee for a number of years that we changed the policy and began to carry an appropriation at the time of the authorization. In those days, on account of the fact that they were not ready with their plans and their specifications, we made the authorization one year and voted the initial appropriation the succeeding year. That was the practice for a number of years and was the practice at the time of this decision.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. We always provided for the plans the first year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. It has always been there, and the argument of the gentleman that you can make an appropriation for battleships, but that the House can not authorize battleships, is a logic that I confess I am unable to follow.

Mr. MANN. I made no such argument as that. The House can authorize battleships, but the question is whether it can do it in this way or not.

Mr. PADGETT. This provision here is merely an authorization to build battleships and scout cruisers. The wording of it is nothing else. The substance of it is nothing else except authorization to build 10 battleships and 10 scout cruisers, and the committee prescribes the type, and that is contained in the citation which the Chairman made there. It said "two swift double-bottomed steel cruisers." It does purport to indicate and to direct and to prescribe the characteristics of the ship, and if it was in order to prescribe it to a limited extent, it is in order to prescribe it in a more enlarged sense.

The CHAIRMAN. Here is what is troubling the mind of the Chair at the present moment: Whether you can make an authorization without expressly carrying with it an appropriation to carry out that authorization. In the case in which Mr. Chairman McCreery ruled an authorization was made and there was carried with it an appropriation. The Chair does not now recall any other rulings that have been made when any case was presented in which the authorization was not accompanied at the time by an appropriation.

Mr. PADGETT. As I stated, we did that for years. I do not know whether a point of order was made against it, or whether it was ever passed upon, but it seems to me that Congress can authorize an enlargement of its naval building program in a naval appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the precedents, if the authorization carries an appropriation, there would be no question about it. The precedents are that way, whatever might be the Chair's individual opinion; but where it is an authorization without an appropriation, then it raises a pretty serious question in the mind of the Chair.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I thrust myself into this discussion reluctantly, because I know the Chairman to be an expert parliamentarian and that he has the precedents before him, has given this matter careful consideration, and I have not, because I have just entered the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the point of order came as a surprise to him, and therefore he has not given it his consideration.

Mr. CRISP. I am familiar with decisions, and so is the Chairman, to the effect that it is in order on the naval appropriation bill to appropriate for the construction of new vessels on the ground that it is in continuation of a public object already in existence. It is not necessary for me to cite the Chair to those decisions. They can be found under section 823 of the manual.

The point of order is against certain provisions in the bill which provides a new building program. It provides for the construction of a number of vessels. I understand the point of order of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois to be that the provisions in the bill do not carry any appropriation for the construction of any of these vessels, but simply authorizes their construction. If I am correct in stating the contention, it seems to me that the point is not well founded, because the greater always includes the lesser, and if it is in order to legislate on an appropriation bill by making an appropriation for the construction of vessels for the Navy, it seems to me clearly that it would be in order to also legislate by making an authorization for the construction of vessels.

The latter part of the bill giving the building program is clearly a limitation. The limitation simply provides that this program shall not be put in operation upon the happening of certain contingencies, and I am of the opinion under the precedents that the provision in the bill is in order on the ground that it is providing for the continuation of a public work already authorized, to wit, the Navy of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia is a distinguished parliamentarian, and I think I would take his judgment if he would examine that matter. I would take his judgment if he was the parliamentarian in the chair, but we are controlled by the rules of the House. The rules of the House provide that no appropriation shall be in order unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress. That is what lets in the appropriation for new naval vessels; but the ruling is confined solely to the Navy. It does not let in new lighthouse vessels or new revenue-cutter vessels, because it is a specific work confined to the Navy.

Now, the language of the rule refers only to an appropriation in continuation of a public work. My friend from Georgia says that the greater includes the lesser. While the rule provides that you can make an appropriation, and there you stop, you can not change the law and make an authorization, because making an authorization for a new naval vessel is a change of existing law.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I want to present this thought, and ask the gentleman's opinion. The crux of the whole matter is in the legislation——

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. Obnoxious to the rule, not in order on an appropriation bill unless it comes within the excepted clause.

Mr. MANN. There is no legislation that comes within this excepted clause except making an appropriation. Of course there are a number of excepted clauses, but they are not applicable here.

Mr. CRISP. We are dealing solely with this appropriation. It seemed to me that here was legislation, an exception to the rule in order on an appropriation bill, not confined to an appropriation bill, for the continuation of a public object.

Mr. MANN. I know; but the rule does not say that you let in legislation in continuation of a public work. The rule says you let in an appropriation in continuation of a public work, and the next sentence says, "Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except," and so forth. That is a specific prohibition of legislation changing existing law. It says "an appropriation in continuation of a public work."

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], who evidently has hastily looked at this without stopping to examine the rule, seems to be of the opinion that the authority to make the appropriation would include the authority to make the legislation. Very likely that would be true if it was not for the rule of the House. The rule of the House, in express language, prohibits the legislation. It authorizes an appropriation, and it is in order now, if this goes out on a point of order, for the gentleman from Tennessee to offer an amendment to appropriate the money necessary for the construction of these naval ships as a continuation of a public work already in progress. But, after all, we are supposed to fairly well live up to the rules of the House. There has been no precedent which held that an authorization in a naval bill for the construction of new vessels as a mere authorization was not subject to the point of order; there have been repeated holdings that the items were subject to the point of order. It is true that the mere making of an appropriation itself is an authorization to expend it. It is not a change of existing law, except to the extent that it makes the appropriation; but the rule expressly providing under the construction of prior chairmen that you can make an appropriation for a new naval vessel as a continuation of a public work already in progress, but that you can not change existing law by a provision in the bill or by an amendment, this item is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Is not this language the same as has been used in all of them, to authorize the President to do this? Have we not used it time out of mind?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can recall, without specifically being able to locate the place, where the whole item in a naval bill of this sort went out on a point of order, and then was succeeded by an appropriation which was in order. It is true that as a rule no point of order was made on the increase in the Navy, because there are limitations which everyone desires to have in there if the appropriation is made. That does not affect the right of a Member to enforce the rules of the House. No one can tell what will follow this provision in the bill—

The construction of vessels enumerated below.

One can offer anything under that in the way of an amendment if that language stays in the bill. The Committee on Naval Affairs can not determine what the House or the Committee of the Whole will do, and if that provision stays in the bill they may amend it to include anything which would be germane to a naval appropriation bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Suppose the Committee on Military Affairs should bring in something like this, authorizing the President before a certain time to erect 10 fortifications, to cost $200,000 each, at any place he designated, or suppose the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee should bring in a provision authorizing him to erect 10 post offices at a certain time, at $20,000 each, wherever he should direct, would those be permissible?

The CHAIRMAN. While that is a parliamentary inquiry in a way, that is not before the committee now, and the Chair does not think the gentleman should expect the Chair to answer that question. That which is now engaging the attention of the Chair is a point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman has put this in the form of a question?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear any argument that the gentleman desires to submit.

Mr. LITTLE. I thought perhaps the Chair, with his familiarity with the subject, might be able to put his finger on a decision of that kind, which I can not, but I want to say this: It must be very clear that unless the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee can do that, unless the Committee on Military Affairs can do that, this is certainly new legislation and has no place here.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is with much hesitation, after this question has been discussed by such distinguished parliamentarians as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] that I venture to add a word, and I shall speak very briefly, indeed. It is important to consider this question at its beginning. It is a familiar rule that an appropriation not authorized is subject to a point of order in an appropriation bill. It is equally familiar that a mere authorization in an appropriation bill is subject to a point of order. I do not, therefore, regard it as at all important whether the appropriation and the authorization are joined. To my mind the paragraph would be equally subject to the point of order in either case, because the rule refers to authorizations previously made and not authorizations made in the bill. Here we have this program authorized for the first time. The Naval Committee is practically estopped from saying this is not the first authorization that has ever been made for the purpose of justifying the appropriations. One of two things is certain—either it was authorized before or it is authorized for the first time now. But I assume the Naval Committee will not claim any prior authorization.

If it had been authorized before, it would be admissible to make simply an appropriation. Without that authorization the paragraph is not in order at all and might just as well go out. But the Naval Committee evidently did not take that view of the case. They considered that they must make an authorization here and now, and consequently they have authorized this program for the first time. It has never before been authorized, and, in my judgment, it is subject to the point of order.

I wish to call the attention of the Chair that the ruling made by Chairman McCreary is said by Mr. Hinds to be very exceptional, and in a footnote to his citation of the decision he says in effect that if carried to its logical conclusion it would do away with the salutary provisions of Rule XXI. Other Chairmen in ruling later have invariably declined to broaden the decision of McCreary.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to add a word. The Chair is exactly right in saying that the pivotal point here is whether or not the decisions the Chair has cited holding that an authorization is justified, when coupled with an appropriation, are sufficient to carry an authorization alone. I hardly see how there can be much question in the mind of the Chair for this reason: The language of the rule applies to appropriations. An authorization and an appropriation at the same time are no greater, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has well said, than the appropriation alone. In other words, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] well said, the lesser is swallowed up in the greater. An appropriation which includes an authorization is, therefore, within the rule, and if an authorization is made at the same time as an appropriation it is within the rule; but the Chair must find some authority for holding that the rule which says that an appropriation of this character is justified would include an authorization alone, and that, I think, the Chairman can not find.

I want to call attention just in that connection to this fact: It must be clear to the Chair that this is a change of existing law. We already have adopted as a part of our statutory law a certain naval program which this changes. We adopt a new and distinct law; it is a change, therefore, in existing law, and a serious and fundamental change.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will just pardon me for a moment I will. I want to call attention to the language in connection with the provision on page 54, which, it seems to me, must be considered in connection with this proposed adoption of a program, because it is a limitation of the program and therefore interprets the program. You certainly could not find a point of order which would not lie to this provision. Just let me call your attention to it.

If at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for, there shall have been established with the cooperation of the United States of America any tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments, then and in that case such naval expenditure as may be inconsistent with the engagements made by the establishments of said tribunal or tribunals may be suspended when so ordered by the President of the United States, and no contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920.

Could the Chair find that this was not new legislation? Could the Chair for a moment doubt that that provision would be subject to the point of order when taken in connection—and it must be taken in connection—with the provision we have under consideration, which is the adoption of a new program different from existing law? How can the Chair hold or for a moment entertain the idea that this does not change existing law? I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Let me submit this to the gentleman: If the gentleman contends there is a limit under existing law to the construction of the Navy, then the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that an appropriation would be in order would fall. The basis upon which the Chairmen have heretofore held that an appropriation in the specific instance of two double-bottom steel cruisers upon which the question was raised in 1887, if the gentleman's contention is correct that there is a limit, then the reason for that ruling falls, because that decision was bottomed upon the specific statement of the Chair that there was no limitation of existing law on the construction of the Navy, but that the Navy as a whole must be considered as a continuing project; and for that reason an appropriation added to that construction by adding two double-bottomed steel cruisers was a continuation of the present existing progressive work, so if the contention that the three-year program specifically put a limitation upon the construction of the United States Navy is correct then you could not have an appropriation.

Mr. TOWNER. There is this which the gentleman does not take into consideration. The principle on which that decision was made with regard to the steel cruisers was that it was an appropriation and therefore within the rules.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me to read the statement upon which the Chair predicated——

Mr. TOWNER. I can not take the time to go into that more particularly.

Mr. WINGO. Very well; I will.

Mr. TOWNER. The language as stated here is very clear. In the case referred to it was not only an authorization but an appropriation, and as I tried to explain when an appropriation and authorization is made at the same time it is clear that it is an appropriation and comes under the provisions of the rule. That is not the case in this instance.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to say whether as contended an appropriation, would include an authorization, upon the principle of the greater including the less. The language of the rule says that an appropriation shall not be in order in a general appropriation bill unless in continuation of an appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress. The rulings that have been made allowing appropriations for additional ships in a naval bill carry the implication that the authorization has already been made for a continuing work, and the new ships appropriated for, are therefore really under an existing authorization. But it is not necessary in this connection, it seems to me, to determine the question of authorization.

Mr. Chairman, there is another very material question to be considered and that is whether the whole matter on page 51 of the bill, and part of page 52, is not really one paragraph. The language from line 1 on page 51 down to line 16, page 52, is evidently one proposition, and should be considered as such.

The point of order should be considered as applying to the entire paragraph, and if there is any part of it that is not in order, of course under the rule, with which you are as familiar as anyone, the whole of the paragraph is out of order. If you look to the different sentences you will note that with reference to each one of these appropriations there is found this language at the conclusion of the sentence:

To be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein.

As I have said this proposition is a concrete whole, and to be considered as such. It has been suggested, and I do not know whether that suggestion was intended to apply to the whole, or some part of the paragraph, that the language on page 52 is a limitation. I submit that this language can not possibly be a limitation, for the following reason.

A limitation is a negative inhibition upon the application of money. There are various illustrations of limitations:

A limitation must apply solely to the money of the appropriation under consideration, and may not be made applicable to money appropriated in other acts.

A limitation may not be applied directly to the official functions of executive officers, but may restrict executive discretion so far as this may be done by a simple negative on the use of the appropriation. (House Manual, p. 368.)

There are many familiar illustrations on that line. Then, again, on page 369 of the rules we find these decisions:

The fact that a provision would constitute legislation for only a year does not make it a limitation in order under the rule.

Nor may a proposition to construe a law be admitted.

A limitation may withhold money from part of a designated purpose while appropriating for the remainder of it.

The language of the bill on the second page which is made a part of the propositions on the preceding page, remits the uses of the money to the discretion of an executive official. If an appropriation is made, it is not permitted to say that it shall be applied, or not applied, in his discretion by the executive officer, and undertake to denominate that authority in the officer, a limitation, yet that is precisely what is done here.

If you will look at page 52, you will find the following language:

If at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for there shall have been established with the cooperation of the United States of America any tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments, then and in that case such naval expenditure as may be inconsistent with the engagements made by the establishment of said tribunal or tribunals may be suspended when so ordered by the President of the United States.

Now, that language remits to the determination of the executive officer the interpretation of some complicated arrangements, hereafter to be made, and if in his discretion, he construes those undertakings to carry a certain meaning, then the money which is hereby appropriated is not to be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to insist that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the first paragraph, at the top of page 53, can not be considered except in connection with any point of order that might be made to the paragraph?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How can it be restricted to the following lines?

For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the vessels enumerate below.

Standing alone this authorizes nothing.

At the end of these words is a colon, and then follow the items, each one referring to the limitation. I take it that it must be fairly considered that there is one concrete, comprehensive proposition presented in the language found on the page and a half to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. And even if that point of order was sustained—I mean, when that paragraph is reached—of course, technically the Chair can not look ahead, even when that paragraph is reached, and if the point of order is made and it should be sustained, it would still leave some legislation here which would be entirely intelligent?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. But what I am suggesting in this connection is that the selected words are not in the usual sense a paragraph, because all of this matter is related and lead together into one whole. If you look on page 51, line 9, you will see the language:

To be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein.

It is not a positive direction to proceed, but a limited direction. The sentence has no independent meaning and to understand it, you must look to the conclusion of the paragraph. Therefore I maintain that this page and a half of matter is really a paragraph presenting a single, distinct proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. This point of order came, the Chair will be frank to state, unexpectedly to the Chair, and he regrets that he has not had more opportunity to give closer study of it than he has had. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order upon the first paragraph at the top of page 53, which reads:

For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake, prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the vessels enumerated below.

The point of order, as the Chair understands, is generally that that constitutes legislation upon an appropriation bill, which is not in order under the general rules of the House. Of course, all gentlemen are familiar in a general way with what has been the procedure upon naval appropriation bills with reference to the increases provided. The Chair stated in the beginning of the discussion that his recollection was that the first ruling was one made by Mr. Chairman James B. McCreary, of Kentucky, and, in so far as time has permitted for a hasty examination, the Chair was correct in his recollection.

Now, the Chair reads from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-ninth Congress, second session:

On February 26, 1887, the naval appropriation bill being under consideration, the Clerk read as follows:

"INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

"For expenditure toward the construction and completion (exclusive of armament) of the five double-turreted monitors, the four vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, and the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886. $2,500,000."

Mr. SAYERS. I move, after line 875, to insert the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the construction of two swift double-bottomed steel cruisers, each of about 4,300 tons displacement, of the type of the Newark, except boilers and machinery, four of about 1,700 tons displacement of the type of gunboat No. 1, each, and one swift torpedo boat, said vessels to cost altogether, exclusive of armament, not more than $4,950,000, the sum of $2,470,000 is hereby appropriated."

To that Mr. Holman, of Indiana, made the point of order. It was argued by Mr. Herbert, of Alabama, and by other gentlemen, and at the conclusion of the argument Mr. Chairman McCreary ruled as follows, after citing the rule, which was the same then as it is now—that is, "no appropriation shall be reported on," and so on:

That is to say, if the work be a public work, or if the object is a public object and it is already in progress, then there need not be any previous legislation authorizing it.

The Chair thinks that means to authorize an appropriation. However, I proceed:

The Chair believes that the construction of a navy is a public object or public work, and the language of the bill which we have been considering and the appropriation made at the last session show that the construction of the Navy is in progress. It may be said also that the proposed amendment providing money for the construction of vessels does not change existing law and is not prohibited by law.

It is very agreeable to the present occupant of the chair to be able to refer to a precedent bearing upon the point of order now raised. In the Forty-sixth Congress (Mr. Carlisle in the chair) it was decided "that appropriations for public works and objects" already in progress could be included in general appropriation bills or could be inserted as amendments, and that the word "objects" meant something in addition to the word "works," and must be held to include the public departments of the Government and the civil, military, and naval establishments recognized by law and supported by the Government.

The Government has undertaken to maintain, and is annually maintaining, a naval establishment, and under the rule appropriations may be made for it in a general appropriation bill, and such has always been the practice until last session, when appropriations for the construction of ships for the Navy and armaments for them were made in a separate bill. Before the last session such appropriations were made in the naval appropriation bill under the rule exactly as it now is.

There is no law prescribing the number of ships that shall constitute the Navy or the number of guns they shall carry. Those matters depend entirely on the amount of money appropriated for those purposes, just as the number of clerks and other employees in the departments depend upon the appropriations made. * * * This decision allows an important amendment to be offered, but it gives to the Committee of the Whole the right to pass upon this interesting question and an opportunity to say whether it is in favor of increasing the Navy or not.

Bear in mind that that decision apparently is predicated absolutely upon "appropriations." There is another decision. I read:

On May 17, 1902, the naval appropriation bill being under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, raised the question of order that the following paragraph involved a change of law:

That the appointment of 500 additional cadets at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., under such detailed rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe, is hereby authorized, such appointments to be made as follows:

The debate proceeded, so that the matter did not come to a decision until May 19, 1902, two days later. It was then further debated, and the Chairman, Mr. James S. Sherman, of New York, held:

The Chair does think that it is the duty of the Chairman to decide points of order as they appear and to disregard entirely his individual hopes and desires in reference to the subject matter under consideration. And the present occupant of the chair has always been so guided in deciding points of order. On more than one occasion he has been obliged to rule against his inclinations and desires. The Chair also thinks it is the duty of Members of the committee and the House to sustain the Chair when they believe he is right. The Chair thinks there have been occasions when that has not been followed.

The ruling in reference to the construction of a battleship is one which the present occupant of the chair has heretofore followed, although he did not originally make it, and is frank to say that, although he has great respect and regard for the gentleman who did make it, he doubts, if he had been in the chair when the question arose, if he would have made it. He has never been in sympathy with it. But that was a provision to increase the number of battleships when the number was not specifically defined by statute.

Likewise, so far as the Chair has been able to ascertain from a hurried reading and inspection of the statutes, there was no specific provision as to the number of seamen. Both of these questions, then, were decided upon the broader ground, whether or not it was increasing the general Naval Establishment.

In the case now presented there is a statute, section 1513, which reads:

"There shall be allowed at said academy 1 cadet midshipman for every Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives, 1 for the District of Columbia, and 10 appointed annually at large."

There is a specific, general statutory provision as to the number of cadets at the Naval Academy. The amendment to which the gentleman from Alabama has raised the point of order changes the number of cadets and changes existing law, which is clearly and unequivocally against the provision of the rule, section 2 of Rule XXI, which provides: "Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order on any general appropriation bill." The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

There is a reason for the rule which prevents legislation upon appropriation bills, else that rule would not have been continued through all these long years. The reason is obvious. By attaching legislation to appropriation bills necessary and vital to the existence of the Government—I mean appropriations necessary and vital to the existence of the Government—gentlemen may be compelled to vote against their deliberate judgment. That is to say, they may be compelled to vote for legislation to which they are opposed or else let the Government starve. Therefore the present occupant of the chair feels that from the parliamentary standpoint it would be unwise to broaden the rule beyond the point to which it has already been broadened. In the case which was ruled upon by Mr. Chairman McCreary the authorization and appropriation went hand in hand. That which was proposed in the amendment offered by Mr. Sayers was a proposition to make the ships provided for in that amendment an immediate and tangible part of the Naval Establishment, being appropriated for in that particular bill, and hence it was held to be a continuing public work.

The proposition involved in this bill, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has made his point of order, is to authorize a program for the future, not connected with any immediate program and not making any appropriations therefor. It seems to the Chair that that is making an extension of the rule that ought not to be made, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in lieu of the paragraph stricken out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the paragraph stricken out insert the following:

"For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake, prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of 10 first-class battleships, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of their class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action; two of these at a cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $21,000,000 each, to be begun as soon as practicable, and 10 scout cruisers, carrying suitable protection and armament suited to their size and type, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action; two to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $8,000,000 each, to be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein; and the sum of $5,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the construction thereof."

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order against that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I make the point of order against that. It has been covered by the principles just announced by the Chair.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think so. I think it complies with the principles announced by the Chair. It makes an appropriation and continues the type of ship we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that falls within the ruling just made.

Mr. PADGETT. In what respect?

The CHAIRMAN. It provides for further construction.

Mr. PADGETT. This has always been held in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It provides for construction that is not carried in any other part of the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. The new construction on the naval bill has always been something that was not authorized theretofore, and the amendment held in order by Mr. McCreary was for ships not authorized. It has always been held in order to include new ships.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee is confused a little, I think, by the fact that the point of order has not been made heretofore upon a good many paragraphs in naval bills.

Mr. PADGETT. But points of order have been made and ruled on a number of times.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and wherever they have been made and ruled on, on a proposition like this, the point of order has been sustained. I think there is no exception to that. Now, the gentleman proposes to try to evade the ruling of the Chair by adding an appropriation of $5,000,000, but the provision of the amendment is legislation just as much now as it was before. It is to authorize the President to construct these ships. The gentleman can offer an amendment appropriating $5,000,000 for the construction of these ships, and it will not be subject to a point of order. He can offer an amendment appropriating $250,000,000 for the construction of these ships and it will not be subject to the point of order. But he does not want to do that. He does not want to make the appropriation, which is in order. He wants to make the authorization, which is a change of law and is not in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word in connection with the point of order. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] failed to catch the basic principle running through the ruling just made by the Chair, which was that where there was an existing authorization, and with respect to that the House chose to make appropriations for ships that could be regarded as a part of a continuing program, such appropriations would be in order. But this is a case in which there is an additional, supplementary authorization having reference to the future, and merely by offering an appropriation in connection with the appropriation the gentleman from Tennessee seems to think that he can overcome the ruling against a new authorization. The fact that the authorization is coupled with an appropriation, does not render the former any the less an authorization. If rules forbid you to begin with an authorization, and then follow the same with an appropriation, that difficulty can not be overcome by coupling the authorization and the appropriation in one paragraph. The real difficulty is in the authorization, which is new legislation. There would be no difficulty, if the amendment proposed a simple appropriation, but the gentleman has tied up an authorization with an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would be inconsistent with the prior ruling—which ruling may have been wrong—if he did not now sustain the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ten first-class battleships, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessels of their class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action; two of these at a cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $21,000,000 each, to be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in lieu of the matter stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Before line 11, on page 53, insert:

"Toward the construction of 10 first-class battleships carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessels of their class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, $2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] desire recognition?

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask for recognition later.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides for the construction of 10 battleships, 2 of which are to cost $21,000,000 each. There is no indication what the other 8 are to cost, and we propose now to appropriate $2,000,000 toward a construction program involving the expenditure of $210,000,000. Does anyone believe that the gentleman from Tennessee is in earnest; that he is sincere; that he believes that we should enter upon a program involving the expenditure of $210,000,000 with an appropriation of only $2,000,000? It looks as if the gentleman was seeming to throw sand in the gasoline, to hoodwink the public, to pretend to increase the Navy when there is no such attempt being made. Let us be on the square with the people and take them into our confidence, and let them understand what we mean, and tell them whether we are for an increase of the Navy or whether we are not; tell them whether the proposition that we have before us is intended to influence action at another place; tell them whether we need more battleships to care for the interests of America, and if we do, let us appropriate the money to build the ships.

It looks to me as if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee was intended to deceive the public. This Congress, above all things, should not undertake to do that at this period of American history. There is no need for the construction of additional battleships. The committee has said so in its report. They did not propose to build any battleships until 1922, and now, when the House under the rule has decided that the proposal brought in by the committee was not in order, the gentleman seeks to befog the issue further by pretending to increase the size of the Navy while it only offers to appropriate $2,000,000 to carry out the $210,000,000 program. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will not prevail.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, it always fills me with a great deal of pleasure to hear the war horses of the Republican side of the House ask us to take the American public into our confidence. If the Republicans, who so recently went through a bitter campaign, had taken the American people into their confidence, the American people would have looked for the kind of tactics that have been adopted here to-day. Every man on that side of the House knows that the Republican Party has for more than a generation fought and clamored for an increase of the American Navy, and every man on that side of the House——

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. I am answering the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. I know it is rather disquieting to the gentleman from Illinois, with his warm Republican proclivities, to have anyone tell the American people how they feel about this.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say that it is very embarrassing to this side of the House to have the gentleman from New York reflect on the Republican Party the way he is doing. Every Republican feels chastened by what the gentleman says. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Under those circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I will say nothing more. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia has rightly stated that none of this so-called appropriation should be considered without considering the paragraph on page 54, which has been read. That paragraph says, practically, that this sum is appropriated for an increase of the Navy unless England agrees to reduce her Navy, and it can not be read in any other way. It says that if, before the construction has been contracted for, there has been established a tribunal to secure peaceful determination of international disputes which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armament, then the construction of these vessels may be suspended. This means nothing else than that we tell our friends, the allies, whose navy has been our protection during this war, which has aided in protecting our soldiers as they went abroad, and our people at home and at sea—it says that unless our allies agree to go into a league, which, I believe, the United States has no power to do and which, at any rate, would be a matter of treaty with which this House has nothing to do—that unless this be done, we will build ships. If this appropriation had been made in a different form, I should have supported it. If it had said that we will build these ships if England is unable to build them and that we will help her out, I might stand for it; but to say to our allies that we will build ships unless she agrees to reduce her armament is in itself a threat in which the Congress of the United States should not join, and I therefore shall support any motion to strike out that sort of an appropriation. If we had the means and it was an appropriation to build any amount of naval vessels, I would favor it. We may not be able to build them or feel ourselves able to do so absolutely, but in its present form I will never insult our allies by voting for any such appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am not a jingo, and I am sure my colleagues would acquit me of the charge of being a militarist. I have no desire to involve my country in a war with Great Britain or France or Italy or Japan. And yet, Mr. Chairman, from what little reading I have done of the history of the world I know there is no such thing as permanent friendships between nations.

France furnished us with the power that enabled us to win the Revolution, and yet within a few years we were at swords' points with the land of Lafayette. We are an English-speaking people, and yet Great Britain has threatened our interests oftener and more seriously than all the other nations of the earth combined. That is merely a matter of history with which every Member of the House is familiar.

I have not had the honor of being permitted to read the President's telegram to the Secretary of the Navy. I am not in the President's confidence, but, Mr. Chairman, I have some well-defined views concerning the attitude that I believe my country should take at this time.

I believe that this war will have been fought in vain unless we secure an agreement between the great powers that have won the war, looking to military and naval disarmament. [Applause.] I believe that our representatives at the Paris conference should say to the representatives of the allies there assembled that the American people do not desire to enter into a race with the nations of the earth to see which one can construct the most powerful navy, but that the American people are determined that never again shall it be said by friend or foe that America's interest and honor must be defended by the navy of another nation. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to vote for the proposition that the United States will enter into an understanding with our friends on the other side, either through a league of nations or in some other way, by which the armaments of the earth may be reduced, and I am prepared now to frankly and fairly say to our friends that unless some such agreement can be made the United States proposes to build a Navy which will be so strong in every particular that no nation on the face of God's earth can with safety invade the waters of the Western Hemisphere with hostile intent. [Applause.]

I do not know, as I said before, what was in the President's mind when he sent the telegram to Secretary Daniels, but I hope that there was something of that kind in his mind.

The statesmen of Europe are taking care of the interests of their own people. We have in Paris to-day a delegation from Great Britain safeguarding British interests. We have a delegation from France safeguarding French interests. We have a delegation from America, and I believe that delegation is safeguarding American interests.

That delegation is headed by the President of the United States—not the Democratic President of the United States, not the Republican President of the United States. To-day Woodrow Wilson represents all of the people of the United States; and without meaning to question any man's patriotism, I firmly believe that posterity will view with surprise the spectacle of American statesmen heckling and seeking to embarrass the President of the United States, who has carried democracy's message to Europe. [Applause.]

I believe that in all the essentials which he has laid down in Paris, Mr. Wilson speaks for 90 per cent of the American citizens. I believe that he speaks for Republicans as well as for Democrats. I believe that the people of this country, without regard to party, want Mr. Wilson to bring about a state of affairs which will enable us to do away with militarism for all time; and I believe that the American people want us, as their representatives here, to strengthen his hands. I hope that on both sides of the aisle we will get votes for this amendment and thus notify the world that we have wholeheartedly responded to the appeal that the President has sent to this country asking us to sustain him in the negotiations which he is carrying on on the other side. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the figures "$2,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$210,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the figures "$2,000,000" in the Padgett amendment and insert "$210,000,000."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that a few gentlemen exhibit smiles upon their countenances as this amendment is read from the Clerk's desk. I want to say to you that I have offered it in all seriousness. I am not bluffing. I mean business. I remember years ago, when the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Hobson, and myself were the only two Members of the House who voted for six battleships, the only two who voted for five battleships, and for four, and on down. We used to get a few more for three and a majority usually voted for two. We have not been carrying the program of two battleships per year for the last eight years. We have fallen materially behind in that program. If we build the 10 battleships here authorized, we would just about make up for the deficiencies in these last eight years. We will just about have the Navy that we would have had had we kept to the two-battleship program throughout that time. As a strong believer, therefore, in a big Navy, I believe in making this appropriation outright, and to build the 10 battleships.

If some one suggests that perhaps in the near future an agreement at the peace table may result in disarmament, let me answer that by the statement that that agreement will certainly come early enough so that this appropriation can be repealed if necessary before a dollar of it is expended. We are doing one of two things, either we are bluffing or we mean business. It seems to me that it is not compatible with the dignity of the Congress or the American people to bluff. If, however, it is the consensus of opinion in the hearts of mankind, as reflected at the peace table in Paris, that the nations of the world should disarm, and that sentiment receives my cordial approval, then we can stop our program, but let us say now to the world that the American people to-day mean business, that we are going to build this Navy and have started to do it, and will carry the program out unless the other nations of the world agree with us to disarm.

There is no nation in this world to-day that needs a great navy like the United States, and I have in mind the great need of the British Empire and the great need of Japan. No other nation in the world has so great a coast line. No other nation in the world has thousands of miles on both the Atlantic and the Pacific, and even touching equatorial waters. Everybody conversant with the military condition of the United States knows that with the present Navy we can not defend the Panama Canal. The one problem that remains unsolved by our military authorities up to this very hour is, with our Military and Naval Establishments how to defend the Panama Canal, and this even though the attack be from a secondary power. If we have not learned a lesson during the past four years, then we never can learn. I have no faith that general disarmament will occur. I do not believe it will take place, and I doubt that there is a Member of this House who really believes it will come now, although it undoubtedly will some day. While we are in the condition that the world now finds itself in, let us go about building a United States Navy just as Theodore Roosevelt said it should be built 20 years ago. Let us build it so that it will be a great arm for America's defense the world over. Our interests extend into the Pacific to a great distance, they extend into equatorial waters, and they extend into the Arctic area to Alaska.

If we are to reap anything like our proper share of the world's commerce our ships will sail the seven seas of the world. If they are to receive the protection which is their due and which they must have we must have a great Navy. I confess to you that $2,000,000 does not mean business. Two million dollars is playing with a great, great principle. Let us make an appropriation adequate and commensurate with the purpose of building these 10 great battleships. I believe they will be needed in America's defense, and if perchance disarmament is agreed upon within the next six months or a year, then we can withdraw the appropriation; but until the nations of the world do that, let us keep our faces set forward and build these ships, and build them fast. We know not the hour when an adversary will appear. We know not who that adversary will be. It behooves us to be prepared for any adversary, and this requires sea power, covering both the Atlantic and Pacific. I believe the needs of our country require a large naval construction program and that every earnest and thoughtful American can support it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota. The gentleman says that he offers his amendment in good faith, in sincerity and not as a bluff, yet the gentleman says that if arrangements are effected by the peace conference providing for a less armament than we would need otherwise, that we can then repeal this provision that he would introduce. Gentlemen, the peace conference is in session now. We will know within a reasonable time what they accomplish in regard to these great matters, and to pass this now, in view of what has come before this House, would, in my judgment, be considered by all the delegates at the peace conference as a pure, gigantic bluff, and nothing more. The whole trouble with this proposition of offering an increase in the Navy provided by this amendment and as provided in the portion of the bill that was declared out of order has been due to the fact that the Committee on Naval Affairs have come into this House advocating this proposition not with facts and figures that justify it, not with the arguments that ought to appeal to the Members of Congress in appropriating or authorizing large appropriations of money, but they have come in here and said they are doing it for one reason, and that was because the President at the peace table had cabled here to the Secretary of the Navy, in effect, that he would be greatly embarrassed in his negotiations if we did not pass this portion of the bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, we ought not to legislate in that fashion. We ought to provide money to start the building of these battleships. We ought to authorize it if it is to the best interest of the country, regardless of any other thing. We ought not to vote here like a mere lot of puppets because the President says it will aid him in the negotiations at the peace table.

It may not mean anything else or it may mean that he wants to use it as a weapon, but I do not believe that we ought to resort to that kind of legislation. This proposition has been presented and, upon a point of order made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the able Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union said it was not in order upon this bill. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, no doubt angry at the fact it has gone out, is now trying to embarrass all of us in putting it in here in piecemeal in a slipshod fashion. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota because I do not believe it was offered in sincerity, and I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee because I do not believe that that has been offered in sincerity.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I will.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the gentleman vote for a rule making the provision which was ruled out on the point of order in order so as to give the House an opportunity to vote upon this question?

Mr. DYER. I am perfectly willing myself; yes, ready and willing, to go on record now on this proposition, and if I had the opportunity I would vote against it, because, in my judgment, it has not been brought into this House with sincerity and honesty of purpose. I believe it has been offered in here for one purpose only, and that was because the President cabled in answer to the Secretary of the Navy that he would need it. No facts or figures were presented here showing the necessity of it, and while I followed the President during the war and voted for a lot of things I did not think we ought to vote for, yet I did it because he was the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and I wanted to follow him as such, but now that the war is over I propose, as best I can, to use my own judgment and not be dictated to by the executive departments of the Government saying we must or should follow him without facts or figures.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel so much concerned about seeing this bill defeated, now that the distinguished chairman of the Committee of the Whole has sustained the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], provided, of course, that the provisions which were just knocked out of the bill will be kept out. I pause here to say that I desire to congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, the present occupant of the Chair, upon the clearness and soundness of his ruling. It does him great credit, in view of the difficulties with which he was confronted, not only in a parliamentary sense, but otherwise.

I am against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee [Mr. PADGETT], and it follows, of course, that I am also against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], although I apprehend that his amendment will not be taken seriously.

Now, with regard to that famous cablegram from the President, I have not been taken into the confidence of the chairman of the committee and have been groping around as best I could to find out just what it all means and how it originated. My first understanding was that the President volunteered to cable Congress that they must approve this huge naval program that is proposed by the committee. After a good many of us had expressed our indignation on that assumption, lo, and behold, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] announced to the House to-day that it originated with the Secretary of the Navy, who asked the President to send the cable that he did send. A little later in the session to-day the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CURRIE], who made such an admirable speech against the bill, announced, much to my surprise, that he had direct information, which thoroughly satisfied him, that the movement did not even originate with the Secretary of the Navy, but that it had its origin in the fertile brain of some other member of the President's Cabinet. I expect before we get through with the consideration of the bill to hear most anything else regarding it.

There have been so many witnesses introduced on the question that it brings to my mind a story. There was a young lawyer in a small town who made a specialty of personal-injury cases. He won two or three cases and got a snug contingent fee in each, and he concluded that he would go after a larger clientage than he could get in the small town where he lived, so he moved down to the "blue grass" and opened up a rather pretentious office in the city of Lexington. After he had been there a month or so a friend of his met him on the street and asked him how he was getting along. "Well," he said, "business is not as good down here as I expected to find it. I am going to try it a little while longer, and if business does not pick up pretty soon I'll be d—— if I don't intend to take my witnesses and move to Chicago." [Laughter and applause.] The only difference between this lawyer's witnesses and those that have been introduced on this cablegram question is that he had his witnesses thoroughly trained, while there is a marked lack of consistency between my colleagues who have been witnesses on this very important question. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, I don't want my attitude on this bill to be misunderstood. I would vote for a large Navy now if we needed it and had the money to pay for it, but I do not think we need it bad enough, as I have said before, to put all this additional burden upon the people. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] began his remarks by saying that he was not bluffing at all; that he meant business in offering his amendment to strike out $2,000,000 and insert $221,000,000, and yet a moment or two later he made the statement that if we find out later on that the peace conference is going to agree to disarmament, or reduction of armament, then we can repeal the law providing for this big naval program, which is, in effect, a confession by him that his proposition is a bluff after all; and, of course, the representatives of the other Governments at the peace table will unquestionably construe it that way in view of what he said.

I can not for the life of me see the necessity or the good sense of enacting this legislation now and alarming the taxpayers of the country still more, when we can just as well enact it when it is entirely manifest that the necessity for it exists. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand why the administration is preaching disarmament in Europe and insisting upon an increase of armament in the United States. [Applause.] It is a species of acrobatic diplomacy that passeth my comprehension. [Laughter.] Neither do I see any necessity for all of this secrecy and concealment from Congress, the body that must appropriate the money; what the real purpose behind it all is.

What has become of the open diplomacy that formed a part of the sacred 14 points?

Surely it can not be possible that the President intended this to mean that he would play an open hand with foreign countries and hide the cards from his own country. I remember we were told that there was some hidden reason why we should repeal the Panama Canal tolls act, for which repeal I am glad to say I did not vote, and that we would be enlightened a little later on; and yet we know as much now as we did then and no more, which is nothing. Now, they tell us that there is a secret reason for this big naval program, and the inference is left that it will all be made plain to us after a while. Judging the future by the past, I doubt it. At any rate, I am not going to take any chances by voting for this program until I know absolutely we have got to have it. I think we ought to give a little more consideration to the harrassed and overburdened taxpayers of the country. If you are bound to make some more appropriations, then let us put the money into public buildings [laughter], which are so much needed and in the construction of which employment could be given to much of the idle labor of the country. If you feel bound to appropriate a few more hundred million dollars, let us put it into good roads. [Applause.]

Let us do something more for our soldier boys than is provided in the revenue bill which passed the House Saturday. Let us scatter the money over the country so that it will get into the hands of the masses, where it is really needed, instead of putting huge sums into vessels which, according to what the President said before we got into this war, will probably become obsolete types before they are ready for use. Let us stop creating so many additional places for these gold-braided gentlemen which the expenditure of all this money for naval construction would create and use it so it will do the common people some good. Let us stop the expenditure of so much money in creating engines of war, after the war is over, and devote whatever funds we can spare to the development and aid of peaceful pursuits and help to get the country back on a normal peace basis.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; not now; wait until I finish on this point, and then I will yield, if I have the time left.

Let me repeat that we ought to consider the people's side of this question a little more than some of you seem inclined to do. We ought to be as generous toward them, at least, as was the Jew waiter toward the hen who, when his customer refused to take a fried egg after he had ordered it because the waiter charged him 10 cents for it, which he said was too much. In characteristic fasion the Jew waiter replied, "But, my dear sir, you must be reasonable and look at the other side of it. You must remember that an egg represents a whole day's work for a hen." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, a billion dollars—and some of you gentlemen are proposing to expend a good many of them—represents a great many days, yes, a great many years' work for a great many people in this country. Mr. Chairman, I will not vote for any such bill now. Of course, I am in favor of carrying out what has already been provided for and I am in favor of carrying it out in a manner which will make it as easy as possible on the taxpayers, but that is as far as I intend to go until it is made perfectly clear to me that the honor and preservation of our country demand more. That is the way I feel about it and the way I am going to vote, and if anybody does not like my attitude, it does not matter to me. While I have the opportunity I want to add, that if a rule is brought in to make in order the provision which the chair's decision ruled out of order, I am against that, too. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish the members of the committee to conclude that because I have a large volume in my hand, I intend to use it on any extensive scale.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman excuse me if I ask the chairman of the committee one question before he begins his argument?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he proposes to press the vote on this amendment which he has offered?

Mr. PADGETT. Not to-night.

Mr. BUTLER. Some other night?

Mr. PADGETT. Not to-night.

Mr. BUTLER. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] for yielding to me.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to put into the RECORD of to-day certain extracts from the naval hearings of 1915 that will abundantly sustain one or two statements which I made in the course of my oral argument a few days ago.

I stated on last Thursday that the Secretary of the Navy, and the admirals, who have heretofore testified before the Committee on Naval Affairs, had stated in the most positive fashion that this country in the determination of our naval program, had no reason to be concerned about the size of England's fleet.

In the naval hearings of 1915, Secretary Daniels testified as follows:

As Admiral Fletcher said yesterday, I do not think that there is any occasion for us to have as large a Navy as England, because, to cite one reason alone, we are so many miles away from any enemy. (See hearings 1915 testimony Secretary Daniels.)

Again in the same hearing in response to a question by Mr. BUTLER, Secretary Daniels stated:

I have clear views as to the Navy. I do not think we ought to try to have a Navy bigger than that of England, but I think we ought to have a powerful Navy.

In this connection I will state that our present Navy is a powerful one, decisively the second navy in the world, without the addition of a single ship.

Further the Secretary said:

I think the war in Europe is going to exhaust the resources of the countries engaged in it, and I think there is less likelihood of our country in the future having any trouble with those nations. We are not going to have in times of peace, what would be called a perfect war defense. So large a force would be contrary to American policies.

Again Secretary Daniels said in response to a question by Mr. GRAY:

I do not think it is necessary for us to keep up with England, but to have a regular, steady strength in our Navy.

If that was a sound statement of policy three years ago, I would like to know whether to-day we confront any more likely enemies, or greater dangers than at that time? I would like to know whether if the Secretary of the Navy was correct in thinking three years ago that there was no occasion for this country to have a Navy as large as that of England, and that after the war there would be less danger than formerly of a collision with the countries of Europe, whether the elimination of Germany increases our danger, enhances the likelihood of war with some European country, and renders necessary the construction of a Navy as large as that of Great Britain? Will some one answer these questions?

Secretary Daniels states that we ought to have a powerful Navy. I agree that we ought to have a powerful Navy. But what is a powerful Navy? In the same testimony from which I have been quoting, Secretary Daniels referring to our Navy said:

We are ahead of all the nations now, except England. Perhaps Germany is slightly ahead of us.

A little later Secretary Daniels stated:

We have a powerful Navy, but it should be kept powerful.

If this statement was true in 1915, by how much the more is it true now? Many ships large, and small have been built in the intervening years. Moreover we adopted the program of 1916, which has been referred to as the greatest building program in all the history of naval construction. I am fully justified therefore in saying that we have a powerful Navy, an immensely powerful Navy at this time. This being so, do world conditions, and particularly the situation confronting us, justify colossal additions to our building program, in the name of national security? The yearly maintenance cost of the standing Army proposed of a strength of 500,000 men will be about $800,000,000. The yearly maintenance cost of a Navy greater than that of Great Britain will be not less than $800,000,000, and more likely to be nearer $1,000,000,000. These are great sums to be laid upou the taxpayers, unless some imperious urgency requires their imposition. Whence are these prodigious amounts to be derived?

Even Capt. Hobson, who was a protagonist of a great navy always excluded England as a factor in the determination of our naval policy. In the hearings of 1915, at a time when Capt. Hobson was a member of the Naval Committee, I find this statement by him:

My suggestion is that we always have Canada here as a hostage: second England has no great standing army behind her fleet, and a fleet that has no great standing army behind it can not be a real menace to the life of a nation. England has none, and ours has none. I put England out of the category of military nations.

Mr. GRAY asked Admiral Fletcher this question:

Are any of our naval experts advocating that we increase our Navy to make it equal to that of England?

Admiral FLETCHER. No; and I do not think that anybody has advocated that.

All of this was in 1915, and, as I have stated, we have added very greatly to our fighting ships since that time. The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, has absolutely reversed his attitude of 1915, and without assigning any reason for his change of attitude, or for his present attitude, he now insists that this country should build, and maintain a navy greater than that of Great Britain. His new attitude I will proceed to give from his testimony in the recent hearings on the pending naval bill:

Mr. KELLEY. What we really did three years ago was to establish a new policy, which you probably did not state in full at the time, but which you now have in mind, namely, that we should pass from third place to first place substantially as fast as shipbuilding facilities could do it.

Secretary DANIELS. As fast as it could be built. It is utterly indefensible that we should have any navy at all, unless we have a navy at least equal to any other navy in the world, if old conditions continue.

Mr. KELLEY. And yet you recommend to this committee on the eve of the consummation of your hopes (of naval disarmament) a program looking to the greatest navy in the world?

Secretary DANIELS. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. That is to say, Mr. Secretary, you want the most powerful navy in the world?

Secretary DANIELS. Absolutely, unless there is an international agreement such as we hope to get; because if you have a navy at all you want one powerful enough to defend the country against any power.

I stated a few days ago that we now possess the second navy in the world, and that our present dreadnaught strength was equal to that of France, Japan, and Italy. The first statement I will establish by Secretary Daniels; the second was established by the Scientific American and has not been denied. In the same hearings already cited we find the following:

Mr. KELLEY. We are easily the second naval power to-day, are we not, with Germany wiped out?

Secretary DANIELS. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these citations amply support the statements that I made, in my speech of a few days ago, that an absolutely new policy is being promulgated, one that treats Great Britain, our ally in the present war, and our peaceful neighbor since the War of 1812, over a century ago, as our next likely adversary in Europe, now that Germany has been overthrown. Surely it is a remarkable contention, that although three years ago, when Germany was at the height of her power, England was disregarded in the determination of our naval policy, the overthrow of Germany has apparently increased our dangers on the high seas, and so far from affording an argument for the reduction of our naval construction, really supplies a new reason for the multiplication of our national burdens.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think that if we embark on this ambitious plan it will cause competition among the nations to speed up their own navies?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I believe that there could not be a more inauspicious time than the present to start upon a policy of competitive naval construction. Every other nation in the world is weary of war, and yearning for relief. Nowhere, save in this country, do we note the construction of new navies in progress. The nations are turning away from war, and the preparations for war. No new ships are being laid, or ordered under any new program, either in Great Britain, France, Italy or any other country. [Applause.]

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FARR. The Japanese have voted the largest credit in the history of Japan for shipbuilding.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Battleships?

Mr. FARR. Battleships.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have not heard of anything of the sort. It is not in your hearings.

Mr. FARR. I got that from naval circles in Washington.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, the naval circles in Washington, ought to have made that statement to the Naval Committee, when it was preparing the pending bill. These myserious and unsupported intimations of suggested activity by Japan do not excite me and ought not to excite anyone. But even if they were true, Japan will have to go a long way to overtake our present strength. We can take an extended naval holiday, then begin building, and easily keep ahead of Japan, or for that matter of any other country in the world save England.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman did not vote for the August, 1916, bill, did he?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; I did not.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman did not vote for the bill passed in July, 1918?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think not, though I am not certain that I have in mind what that bill was.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Is the gentleman in favor of the appropriations carried in this bill for the upkeep and maintenance of the Navy?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. I am willing to go that far, if the supplemental program is stricken out.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And the only part of the bill as reported that the gentleman is opposed to is the new construction program?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to some further extracts from the recent testimony of Secretary Daniels showing the real extent of the naval policy involved in our action, should we adopt the supplementary program. I gathered from the report of the committee that the pending bill contained the substance of what Secretary Daniels styles the second three-year program. Such is not the case. The bill provides for only 10 first-class battleships, and 10 scout cruisers, all new construction. This is by no means all of the supplementary program.

I asked the chairman of the committee a few days ago this question: "Should we vote the supplemental program of big ships in the bill, will there be hereafter an additional number of small ships necessary to be constructed as the complement of the big ships, in order to make what the naval people call a well-rounded Navy?"

The chairman indicated that we had a disproportionate number of small ships at this time, and that the naval experts differed among themselves as to whether many more of those smaller ships would be required to round out the new construction. Looking to the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy I find that the full program of the Secretary, and that is what will be ultimately carried out, should we adopt the program of the bill, calls for 10 dreadnaughts, 6 battle cruisers, 10 scout cruisers, and a complement of 130 other ships of various types to give us a well rounded Navy. The program in the bill is merely the head of the camel in the tent. The goal is a navy greater than Great Britain's, whatever may be the building activities of that country in the future. I wish some one speaking for the committee would give the country an approximate idea, first of the cost of construction, in billions, of a navy greater than that of England, second, when that navy is finally secured, the cost of its annual maintenance. At present though we are far short of our goal, the totals for the Naval Establishment for the years 1919 and 1920 are as follows: For the years 1919, $1,685,379,553; for the year 1920, $746,457,440.33.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. How can we dovetail this naval program in with our desire for disarmament?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I discussed that proposition a few days ago. It can not be done. It occurs to me that in no way could the United States inject a more alarming feature into the present situation abroad, or give greater offense to the nations, than by ordering a vast program of naval construction at this time. We are in less danger from any quarter than any other nation in the world, and therefore in a better position to wait on the outcome of the peace conference, and the action taken there, and then establish an appropriate policy. We can match building against building with any other country, or countries, should that course become necessary. For the present we can be quiescent without risk, and by a policy of repose steady the other nations.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Supposing that the President has said that it is necessary for his negotiations in Paris that we must pass this bill, what does the gentleman think about that?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman a question, before giving him an answer. Is the determination of our naval policy, in the judgment of the gentleman from Ohio, an executive, or a legislative function?

Mr. EMERSON. It is both.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. How can that be? We determine this policy. The legislative body should be ready and willing to receive suggestions from the Executive, from the Secretary, from the naval heads, from the experts, and from any other quarter. But when the legislative body has received these suggestions, whose duty is it thereafter under the Constitution to establish a naval policy? Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. EMERSON. Both. The President is there, sitting at the peace table, representing this country.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Suppose he is. He is negotiating a treaty, not exercising legislative functions.

Mr. EMERSON. Are we to embarrass him and humiliate him?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. Not at all. That is the reason I do not wish to agree to the supplementary program. To vote this program at this time would be to project the most embarrassing element that could be devised, into the peace conference now sitting in Paris. [Applause.] This action on our part would be in hopeless and inescapable conflict with the declarations that have been made on our behalf that the President, speaking for this country, is seeking to replace the jealous, and selfish contentions of the Old World with the ideals of peace and justice. It is a little incongruous for the President to be the spokesman of the idealists in Paris, and for the United States in effect to flourish a great horse pistol at home by tumultuously ordering a vast program of unnecessary naval construction. [Applause.]

Permit me to read you what the Secretary of the Navy had to say heretofore with respect to the appropriate determination of a naval policy. I read:

> Mr. DANIELS. I think, in the first place, the policy of national defense is not determined by the Secretaries: It is determined by the Congress, and it is a very good thing for Congress to have the varying and fluctuating views, so that they may have all the light it can get, and then for it to fix the policy.

Well if it is an aid to this body to have varying, and fluctuating views, we have been abundantly supplied in this respect during the last five years, by the Secretary of the Navy and the naval experts, as shown by the extracts which I have read from their testimony. In full possession of a generous supply of "varying and fluctuating views," this body is assuredly well equipped to reach a wise conclusion, that is if wisdom comes that way. Further on this same line that it is the function and duty of Congress to establish a naval policy, Secretary Daniels makes this statement:

> You want recommendations from the executive department, and we have given them to you. You must then determine whether you will take them up, or improve them, or otherwise.

I agree fully with these declarations of Secretary Daniels. It is our duty to establish a naval policy, after we have secured the facts, and received the suggestions of our advisers. Once in the possession of the facts, it is our solemn duty to the American people to determine under our oaths whether at this time when our country is palpably and absolutely safe, we shall take an unnecessary step, and establish a program that may be fairly treated as a threat and a menace to the rest of the world. Bear in mind that this program is not inspired by the urgency of war, and does not provide for present construction. It belongs well to the future. We are doing what no other nation is doing. Apparently we repudiate the suggestion that the overthrow of Germany has in any wise made the world a safer and a better place for the peace-loving nations of the earth. Does our safety require this step? Let Secretary Daniels answer. Two years ago the Secretary declared that we had a fleet which was sufficient to defend either the Atlantic, or the Pacific coast. Since then we have adopted the program of 1916, and in addition have materially strengthened our fighting fleet by new construction. We have not only affirmatively strengthened ourselves, by our own activities, but our position has been made materially more secure by the overthrow of the one nation that was a menace to the rights and the liberties of the world. I repeat the statement heretofore made, that we have not merely crippled, weakened, or impaired the naval power of Germany, we have absolutely eliminated that Empire from present contemplation. If that be true, this is the time to reduce, not increase the burdens of the public. [Applause.] That, at least, Mr. Chairman, is the conclusion that I draw from a survey of present world conditions.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, H. R. 15539, had come to no resolution thereon.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 1048), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 13308), and to disagree to all the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to disagree to the amendments of the Senate and to agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether it will be possible, if necessary in order to maintain the amount appropriated in the House bill for motor-truck routes, that before the conferees agree to the Senate amendment reducing that amount he will bring it back to the House for consideration by the House.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not put the conferees in that sort of a position. It may be best to do that, or it may not be best. I will say this about every provision in the bill, that if there is any desire on the part of the House to vote upon any of the questions in the bill, the conference committee, of course, desire to carry out the wishes of the House; but we ought to have a full and free conference with the Senate, and I think it is not advisable to commit ourselves on any one proposition in this bill. There are seventy-odd amendments, and it would put the House conferees at a very great disadvantage not to have a full and free conference on all of the questions in the bill, or to be committed to any particular action on any one amendment of the Senate. I think it is the part of wisdom to let the bill go to conference and have a full and free conference, and I want to assure the House that if it manifests a desire to vote upon any question the conferees certainly will have no desire to foreclose the vote on any amendment to the bill.

Mr. DYER. Does that apply to the aero mail increased appropriation also?

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes; it applies to everything. The House has the right to control the bill. The conferees are the servants of the House. We are willing to bring anything here that you want to vote upon, but we do not want to be pledged in advance as to any of these questions, because that would cripple the conferees in conference, and in getting the measure through, as far as possible, as desired by the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I want to take advantage of this opportunity to express the hope to the gentleman from Tennessee and his fellow conferees that they will insist to the very last point possible on retaining the provision in the bill for motor-truck service, which was included in the bill when it passed the House. I hope that when it comes back it will retain that provision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the conferees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in order not to create a precedent, I think the present occupant of the chair ought to ask that by unanimous consent he may name the conferees. I do not think a Member temporarily occupying the chair as Speaker pro tempore is authorized under the rules to name the conferees without the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the present occupant of the chair will name the conferees.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MOON, Mr. BELL, Mr. ROUSE, Mr. STEENERSON, and Mr. MADDEN.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a decision of the Supreme Court, and also certain correspondence which I have had with my constituents on matters pending before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an opinion of the Supreme Court and certain correspondence that he has had with his constituents. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes to place in the RECORD a copy of an order published in Fort Washington in regard to the punishment that will be given the soldier who asks for political or civilian influence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I stated the other day that in certain camps and cantonments they had posted notices that any soldier who applies for any assistance in the matter of his discharge will be court-martialed and punished. I now print as a part of my remarks, to save time, the copy of the order posted on the bulletin board at the headquarters of the coast defense of the Potomac, Fort Washington, Md., which states in substance:

First. Orders of the War Department direct that no person in the military service shall seek directly or indirectly to secure action affecting his military status by political or civilian influences.

Second. The discharge of soldiers under existing orders and instructions is being carried out by the commanding officer as impartially as possible and with due interest to the welfare of each soldier concerned. The commanding officer, and no doubt unit commanders, are receiving applications from civilian and political sources that are a source of annoyance to those who receive letters besides wasting valuable time.

Third. Every soldier of this command is forbidden to write any person whosoever outside of the military service asking directly or indirectly for assistance affecting the soldier's status. Every case where there is reasonable ground for believing that the soldier has disobeyed these orders and instructions he will be brought to trial by court-martial for disobedience of orders.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I have only three minutes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman understand that by "political influence" is meant the efforts of Members of Congress to have the case of the soldier considered?

Mr. MASON. Some of us think we are politicians and some of us think we are statesmen. I have ranked myself as a politician because Speaker Reed once said that a statesman is a dead politician. [Laughter.]

I called attention to this the other day and I offer it again as a reason for the passage of a resolution I have introduced. This whole act of demobilization is being dillydallied with. We have had two colleagues come from France in the last 10 days or 2 weeks, one telling of the dreadful condition of our boys there and the fact that they are not comfortable and not sheltered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to the gentleman incorporating that which he desires in the RECORD, but this has already been gone over many times, and I object.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, what was the objection to my proceeding?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objected to the two additional minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague be allowed to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that his colleague [Mr. MASON] be allowed to speak for five minutes.

Mr. LOBECK. I move to amend by making it 10 minutes.

Mr. MASON. I can finish in five minutes and perhaps in three.

Mr. LOBECK. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

Mr. MANN. It is in order; there is nothing else before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not sure that it is in order, but he will put the question.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in the five minutes you have been kind enough to give me I am calling attention to the resolution I offered, which I have submitted to the Committee on Rules and which I hope the committee will report. The resolution simply appoints a nonpartisan committee of four Democrats and four Republicans—and I think you gentlemen on the other side ought to be willing to agree to it, for it is your last chance to get an even show on committees—to take evidence to assist the military arm of the Government in giving our boys their rights. As a matter of fact the officers, as a general rule, are fine men, but there is another fact that there is a certain class of them that want to maintain their units in order to maintain their own commissions. One of our colleagues who came back from France—and I am not using his name, for I do not see him present—said that on the vessel he came back on there was room for a thousand more soldiers; that there were staterooms in which there were three berths and only occupied by one person.

Mr. Speaker, there ought to be some way to arrange this matter. There is no disposition to find fault. The only thing to do is to help, and if you can have a committee here in Washington with power to do that, we will reach the point where we can say to the little man with big shoulder straps, "Give these boys a chance to be heard." Under this rule, if a man wrote to his father and told him that he had to have two affidavits, he would be subject to court-martial and to punishment. If he wrote to his own mother and told her that under the rules of the War Department he had to have two affidavits showing why he was needed at home, he would violate the rule laid down here and would be subject to court-martial. The question is whether you are willing to have this committee, whether you are willing to speed taking these boys home. If they are needed, keep them; but if you intend to demobilize them, give them a chance. I say to you that some of them are being abused, and if you will give the committee, while I can not call these boys here and use their names now and have them court-martialed, I shall call them before the committee which will protect them. One Iowa Congressman told me of a case where a boy had made application because his brother had broken his leg and he wanted to go home and help his father with his spring farming, and the officer called this boy the vilest name ever applied to a human being. He called him a coward, and said that he was trying to avoid his duty.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman know of any specific case where a soldier now in a cantonment has been placed on trial, at court-martial, because he wrote to his father or mother for these affidavits or because his case has been presented to friends or to the Representative of his district, and the commander of the cantonment had been asked to give the boy's case consideration?

Mr. MASON. I will say to the gentleman that three of my colleagues have told me of cases where they took up the case on the suggestion of the father and mother, where the boys were court-martialed.

Mr. RAKER. For this?

Mr. MASON. For the offense of asking for outside influence in presenting matters in respect to their discharge. I have another case of my own, where I simply wrote a recommendation certifying to the man's good name, to his officer, and the boy was threatened with court-martial; and it was all returned to me with an indication that I should keep off the grass. I told the Secretary of War that being a Member of Congress ought not to deprive me of my citizenship, nor should it estop me from suggesting in a respectful way anything that I could suggest for the good of the service.

Mr. Speaker, at the proper time, under the strict rules applying here in this deliberative body, I am going to ask for the discharge of the Committee on Rules, so that I may have a vote upon this question. I want to know who are willing to let these boys have some civil place to which to appeal for defense. The man who copied this for me would be court-martialed to-morrow if they knew that he had copied it; and yet he did it at my request. Here is an order printed which says to every man who dares, in time of peace, to write to anyone is subject to court-martial, and it is accompanied with an insulting remark that it is an annoyance to these distinguished officers to get letters from politicians and civilians and it is a waste of time. They have to read them to see whether it is a politician who writes them, and take some time to deposit them in the wastebasket. [Applause.]

VOTE ON REVENUE BILL—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday evening, understanding there would be no record vote upon the adoption of the conference report upon the revenue bill, I absented myself from the Capitol on other business. I desire simply to state that had I been present I would have voted in favor of the adoption of the conference report.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CALDWELL of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that reference with the bill (H. R. 15742) to regulate the collection and expenditure of money, other than by the Government of the United States or by its authority, for the use and benefit of the armed forces of the United States and of its allies, and especially of France, Great Britain, Italy, Belgium, Serbia, Greece, and Montenegro, or for any auxiliary organizations of said Governments maintained and operated for the use and benefit of such armed forces, be changed from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Military Affairs, where it properly belongs. A similar bill in the Senate has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object. This is no time to do that.

RELEASE OF CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, recently there were discharged from the Leavenworth Penitentiary several hundred so-called conscientious objectors, who refused to either fight or work. The manner of their discharge has become a matter of considerable interest out there. The Legislature of Nebraska has passed some emphatic resolutions, which I desire to present here and made a part of the RECORD. I may at a later date have something to say concerning these resolutions, but just now, as the Secretary of War is called upon for an explanation, and it may be given, I shall at this time withhold further comment. I desire to print these resolutions as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] asks unanimous consent that he may print certain indicated resolutions as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman indicate what the resolutions are?

Mr. SLOAN. The Legislature of Nebraska has seen fit to condemn the action of the Secretary of War in releasing several hundred men in a great body from the Leavenworth Penitentiary. They say these inmates refused to either fight or work during the whole period of the war. It is alleged that they were paid in full for the time they were imprisoned, given a new suit of clothes, a sum of money, $10 or $25 in cash, honorably discharged, and sent home.

Mr. LITTLE. Honorably discharged?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. This has given rise to indignation on the part of the people out in our country.

Mr. GARD. This has already been expressed in the State of Nebraska in the newspapers, has it not?

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, yes; but I am inclined to think it is of such general nation-wide interest that it ought to go into the RECORD. If I can not get it in the RECORD upon this request, I think I will try to impose myself on the House for time to read and comment thereon. I do not like to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF NEBRASKA.

I, Darius M. Amsberry, secretary of state of the State of Nebraska, do hereby certify that the resolutions hereunto attached and herewith pertaining are a true, correct, complete, and verified copy of the resolutions adopted by the senate, Legislature of Nebraska, thirty-seventh session, February 5, 1919.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Nebraska. Done at Lincoln this 7th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1919 and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-third, and of this State the fifty-second.

[SEAL.] DARIUS M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State.

LINCOLN, NEBR., February 5, 1919.

Hon. D. M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State, Lincoln, Nebr.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was adopted by the State senate under this date and is hereby transmitted to you:

[Legislature of Nebraska, thirty-seventh session. Senate file No. —. A resolution introduced by Senators Reed and Hall, Johnson, Hammond, Neal, and Cronin.]

"Whereas press reports state that several hundred men who were drafted for service in the war and refused to bear arms or work or obey orders of their superior officers, or in any manner assist in the defense of their country, or support thereof, are to be given, and are being given, honorable discharge from the Army, fitted out with a complete outfit of civilian clothing and paid the full wages, and in some instances $15 to $25 more than that which they would have received had they been loyal to their country and served in the trenches and borne the hardships incident thereto; and

"Whereas there are several hundred thousand loyal American soldiers still in France who have willingly offered their lives in defense of their country and who are anxious to be discharged and return to private life, loyal and unselfish men who will some day return to find their positions filled by the unpatriotic slackers and conscientious objectors wearing the clothing furnished them by the Government and with no provision made for rewarding and honoring those who have saved the country and who by their glorious achievements have preserved to posterity the honor of the Nation: Now, therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Nebraska, That we earnestly protest against the action of Secretary of War Baker in rewarding the slacker and the traitor, which we stamp as a direct insult to the brave soldiers who so valiently went forth to defend democracy and freedom against the awful blight of Kaiserism at the sacrifice of their lives, and to the Red Cross nurses who risked their lives to administer to the wounded and bleeding upon the battle fields of Europe, and every other worker who participated in the support of the war, and we call upon the Congress of the United States to condemn the said action of Secretary Baker, as it is not consistent with the principles of true Americanism, and we further call upon Congress to honor and reward the loyal and faithful men of our Army and Navy in a manner befitting their glorious deeds; be it further

"Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to Secretary of War Baker and to the Members of Congress and the Senators from this State."

I, Clyde H. Barnard, secretary of the Senate of Nebraska, hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true, complete, and verified copy of resolution adopted by the senate February 5, 1919.

CLYDE H. BARNARD,
Secretary of the Senate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF NEBRASKA.

I, Darius M. Amsberry, secretary of state of the State of Nebraska, do hereby certify that the resolutions hereunto attached and herewith pertaining are a true, correct, complete, and verified copy of the resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives, Legislature of Nebraska, thirty-seventh session, February 5, 1919.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Nebraska. Done at Lincoln, this 7th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1919, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-third, and of this State the fifty-second.

[SEAL.]

Secretary of State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF CHIEF CLERK,
Lincoln, Nebr., February 6, 1919.

[Legislature of Nebraska, thirty-seventh session. A resolution, introduced by Representatives Miller, Mears, Sandquist, Foster, Gerhart, Fries, Birdsall, and Purdy.]

Whereas press reports state that several hundred men, known as conscientious objectors, who were drafted for service in the war and refused to bear arms or work or obey orders of their superior officers, or in any manner assist in the defense of their country or support thereof, are to be given and are being given honorable discharge from the disciplinary barracks, fitted out with a complete outfit of civilian clothing, and paid the full wage, and, in some instances, $15 to $25 more than that which they would have received had they been loyal to their country and served in the trenches and borne the hardships incident thereto; and

Whereas there are several hundred thousand loyal American soldiers still in France who have willingly offered their lives in defense of their country and who are anxious to be discharged and return to private life—loyal and unselfish men, who will some day return to find their positions filled by the unpatriotic slackers and conscientious objectors wearing the clothing furnished them by the Government—and with no provision made for rewarding and honoring those who have saved the country and who, by their glorious achievements, have preserved to posterity the honor of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, That we earnestly protest against the action of Secretary of War Baker in rewarding the slacker and the traitor, which we stamp as a direct insult to the brave soldiers who so valiantly went forth to defend democracy and freedom against the awful blight of Kaiserism at the sacrifice of their lives, and to the Red Cross nurses who risked their lives to administer to the wounded and bleeding upon the battle fields of Europe, and every other worker who participated in the support of the war; and we call upon the Congress of the United States to condemn the said action of Secretary Baker, as it is not consistent with the principles of true Americanism; and we further call upon Congress to honor and reward the loyal and faithful men of our Army and Navy in a manner befitting their glorious deeds; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of State to Secretary of War Baker and to the Members of the Congress and the Senators from this State.

D. S. DALBEY, Speaker.
WILL F. HITCHCOCK,
Chief Clerk of the House.
DARIUS M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold for a moment? I wish to renew my request for unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to give notice that as soon as the gentleman from Michigan gets through I am going to move to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if the naval bill gets through before time to adjourn to-morrow what is to be taken up then?

Mr. KITCHIN. The military appropriation bill, which is reported.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it so happens that a large number of the American troops who are in Russia came from the State of Michigan and a large part of them from the congressional district which I have the honor to represent. As expressive of the sentiment of the people of my district as to their continuance in Russia I desire to have read in my time a letter from the mayor of the city of Grand Rapids giving a resolution which was adopted at a mass meeting of the citizens of that city.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

CITY OF GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.,
February 6, 1919.

Hon. CARL E. MAPES, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At a meeting of the citizens of this city held Wednesday evening, February 5, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas the United States Government is now maintaining an armed force in northern Russia, among whom are a number of soldiers from this city and vicinity; and

"Whereas it appears that the force there maintained is wholly inadequate to cope with the forces sent against them, and there is grave danger that their maintenance as at present will result in many if not all of the soldiers being overcome by the forces opposed to them; and

"Whereas it appears that their maintenance in northern Russia at this time is not necessary for the safety and welfare of the country, or necessary as a military measure: Therefore

"Resolved, That we, the citizens of the city of Grand Rapids, most earnestly protest against the retention of our boys in Russia; and further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, requested to withdraw said force at as early a date as practicable, to the end that their lives may not needlessly be sacrificed in maintaining an unnecessary military venture; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the Secretary of War, to the Congressman from this district, and to the Members of the Senate from this State, and ask the Congressman and Senators to cable the President to this effect."

Respectfully,

CHRISTIAN GALLMEYER, Mayor.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 11, 1919, at 11 a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations to enable the institution to heat and equip for exhibition purposes the metal structure erected by the War Department in the Smithsonian Grounds, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 1780); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of State submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Pan American Union for printing and binding, fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1781); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a substitute estimate of appropriation required by the Interior Department for administration of the National Park Service in lieu of estimate heretofore submitted (H. Doc. No. 1782); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Assistant Secretary of Labor submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Labor for increased cost of envelopes, fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1783); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Postmaster General submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Post Office Department and Postal Service (H. Doc. No. 1784); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15608) to incorporate the War Mothers of America, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1047), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COOPER of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 15815) donating a captured German cannon or field gun and carriage to the town of Bramwell, W. Va., for decorative purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15816) donating a captured German cannon or field gun and carriage to the town of Mullens, W. Va.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BESHLIN: A bill (H. R. 15817) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Greenville, Pa., four German cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 15818) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Elsberry, Mo., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WICKERSHAM: A bill (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 11, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast charted the paths of peace and prosperity in Thy holy word. Thou dost deign to touch the lives of those whom Thou dost call into places of leadership with Thy holy spirit, that they may discern the path, that they may achieve the divine purpose, that they may follow the divine will. We pray that grace may be given to us this day in this high and holy office, that we may discharge the duties that are upon us with the favor and with the wisdom which God alone can give. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM OKLAHOMA.

Mr. GORE. I present the credentials of my colleague, Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Oklahoma a Senator for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919, which I ask to have read and placed on the files.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE OF THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1918, ROBERT L. OWEN was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Oklahoma a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

Witness, his excellency, our governor, J. B. A. Robertson, and our seal hereto affixed at Oklahoma City, this the 4th day of February, A. D. 1919.

J. B. A. ROBERTSON, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]
JOE S. MORRIS,
Secretary of State.

ABROGATION OF TREATIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Assistant Secretary of State in response to a Senate resolution, which will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 8, 1919.

The Hon. JAMES M. BAKER,
Secretary of the Senate of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the following resolution adopted by the Senate of the United States December 5, 1918:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

"1. What countries, if any, have notified the United States of their intention to abrogate any treaties with the United States; and what treaties are to be abrogated and the reasons therefor if any are given.

"2. The countries with which the United States has treaties which prevent us from giving preference to Americans or American ships in the carrying of imports or exports, and what is necessary to be done to abrogate such treaties, and what, if any, steps our Government has taken to secure the abrogation of the same.

"Attest:

"JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary."

I also have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the following resolution adopted by the Senate February 3, 1919:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the information called for by the Senate resolution of December 5, 1918, or inform the Senate why it can not be furnished.

"Attest:

"JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary."

In reply I beg leave to advise you, for the information of the Senate, that a compilation of the data called for in the resolution of December 5, 1918, is being prepared. The work of preparation involves a considerable amount of research, but the data will be furnished at the earliest practicable moment.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

WILLIAM PHILLIPS,
Assistant Secretary.

For the Acting Secretary of State.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT (H. DOC. NO. 1785).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to the rents received from properties located on sites of proposed public buildings purchased by the United States Government in the city of Washington, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

WHEAT GUARANTY.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to present a memorial adopted on the 20th day of January by the Legislature of Oklahoma in respect to the guaranteed price of wheat for the year 1919. I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit a few observations upon this subject.

The memorial requests early action by Congress to make good the guaranteed price of wheat for the harvest of 1919. I am in perfect sympathy with the purpose and object of this memorial. Anxiety has been felt and doubts have been expressed in certain quarters as to the disposition of the Government with respect to the carrying out of its guarantee. There is no foundation in fact for such anxiety or for such doubt.

On September 2, 1918, the President of the United States issued a proclamation guaranteeing the price of wheat for the season and harvest of 1919, a guaranteed price of $2.26 a bushel for the basic grades in the city of Chicago. This proclamation was issued in pursuance of law. It was issued in pursuance of section 14 of the so-called food-control act.

This proclamation creates a valid and binding obligation upon the Government of the United States, an obligation which is as sacred and which will be held as inviolate as the obligation of the thrift stamps or the liberty bonds. This covenant will be kept both in letter and in spirit. The Government of the United States will keep faith with the American farmer to the uttermost farthing. This is not an open question. Upon this point, at least, all minds have met.

But, Mr. President, the amount which may be required to carry out this guaranty, while it in no wise affects either the character or the sanctity of the obligation, yet is a question of vital concern to the people of the United States. It is not possible at this time to ascertain the amount which will be required to redeem this obligation. The amount is contingent upon factors both present and future which are not certain at this time and which can not be made certain at this time. The amount depends primarily upon the world's harvest of wheat for the season of 1919. In the second place, it depends upon the exportable surplus carried over from the harvest of 1918 in other wheat-producing countries.

In the third place, it depends upon the purchasing power of the peoples of Europe. Their purchasing power has, of course, been materially reduced. The amount of wheat which they can purchase at our hands will not be limited so much by their needs as by their capacity to buy and pay for the required supplies. It is still true, however, that bread is the staff of life. It satisfies the elemental need, the need that is first to be supplied, and the need that is last to be denied. Others can estimate as well as I to what extent their purchasing power has been impaired.

As to the wheat harvest for 1919, considering the world at large, I may say that in ordinary times the world's production and consumption of wheat aggregates about 3,700,000,000 bushels. The United States and Russia each produce about one-fifth of this entire amount, the United States sometimes producing as much as one-fourth.

I have no means of ascertaining the acreage sown to winter wheat in other wheat-producing countries. I have no means of ascertaining the acreage which will be sown in other countries to spring wheat. It is reasonable to assume, however, that the acreage will be above rather than below the average. I say this because various countries have like ourselves held out guaranties for the coming harvest. In several countries this guaranty has been most generous. It will be interesting to state a few of them. The guaranteed price in Australia is 95 cents for the coming harvest. Its remoteness from the world's markets accounts for this small guaranty. The guaranty in Roumania is $1.61. The guaranty in Great Britain is $1.64. This, I may say, is a minimum price. It is not a fixed or an absolute price. The farmers, as I understand it, will receive whatever price above the guaranty that the market will justify.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Without expressing any opinion, I should like to ask the Senator if, in his opinion, by reason of the vast amount of wheat that will be produced and the large amount which is now on hand, the world's price of wheat will not be considerably under $1 per bushel for the coming year or for this year?

Mr. GORE. I do not think so.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we can not hear the Senators on this side. I hope they will speak so that they can be heard.

Mr. KING. I inquired of the Senator from Oklahoma if it was not his opinion, in view of the accumulations of wheat and in view of the large production the year 1919 will realize, that the price of wheat in the world's market will be less than $1 per bushel for this year?

Mr. GORE. I do not think so, and I will state my reason for it in a moment, as soon as I have completed this enumeration.

When interrupted I was enumerating the guaranteed price for wheat in various countries. The guaranteed price in Brazil for the present year is $2.16 per bushel; in Switzerland it is $3.18; in Holland it is $3.30; in France it is $3.84; in Norway it is $4.09; in Italy it is $4.44 for hard wheat and $3.96 for soft wheat. It is reasonable to assume that these generous prices will tempt a considerable acreage in the several countries mentioned.

So far as the acreage in the United States is concerned we have more material for an estimate. The winter wheat sown for the current season is 49,000,000 acres. The winter wheat sown last year was 42,000,000 acres. This is an increase of 16 per cent. It is reasonable to assume that there will be as large an increase, possibly a larger increase, in the spring wheat acreage, but with an equal increase our total acreage for both spring and winter wheat would rise to 75,000,000 acres. This is 11,000,000 acres more than the spring and winter wheat acreage for the last season. With the same average yield per acre for the current year as for last year we would produce some 1,114,000,000 bushels. It is not usual for two large crops to come in succession. Of course the weather is a proverb of uncertainty. Nobody can tell at this time what the yield will be for the current year.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to inquire of the Senator what was the average yield per acre of the crop of 1918.

Mr. GORE. I should say it was about 14 bushels per acre. The total yield was 917,000,000 bushels and the total acreage was 64,000,000 acres.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would be a bushel per acre more than the average yield. So the Senator I think could safely cut out at least one bushel per acre as the probable yield of 1919.

Mr. GORE. It would be exceptional if two abundant harvests came in succession. The law of averages and probabilities is against it. Of course there is nothing definite in that prediction.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question propounded by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. It has been blazoned abroad that there was an enormous exportable surplus in various wheat-producing countries of the earth. This surplus has been stated by high authorities as aggregating between 700,000,000 and 800,000,000 bushels. I believe this estimate is above the mark. I believe it is an exaggerated estimate. It is, so far as my investigations have gone.

This estimate to which I have just referred credits India with a present exportable surplus of 150,000,000 bushels. To ascertain the facts, I cabled the United States consul general in Calcutta early in the month of January, inquiring as to the available surplus for exports and as to the prospects of the coming crop. On January 11 I received a cablegram from the United States consul general advising me that there was no available surplus of wheat in India at this time, and advising me, further, that India is this day importing wheat from Australia for domestic consumption. This surplus of 150,000,000 bushels therefore vanishes into thin air and reveals in India a present demand for a portion of the available surplus in Australia.

The estimate to which I have referred credits Australia with an available surplus of 200,000,000 bushels. I also cabled the United States consul general in Australia, and under date of January 9 I received a cablegram advising me that the available surplus in Australia was only 120,000,000 bushels, as against a reported 200,000,000 bushels. This amount, I may say in passing, has been seriously damaged by lack of storage facilities, by exposure to the weather, and by the ravages of rodents. The present crop now being harvested in Australia is far below the average, according to this cablegram. It is only 68,000,000 bushels, which is about 50 per cent of the largest crop which Australia has shown herself capable of producing.

Argentina has also been credited with a vast exportable surplus. I am also in receipt of a cablegram from the consul general in Argentina, under date of January 9, which sets down the available surplus of wheat in that country as being only 44,000,000 bushels, as against an estimated surplus of 175,000,000 to 200,000,000. The report, however, indicates that a good crop is now being harvested in that country.

Canada has also been credited with a large surplus of wheat; but the United States consul general in Canada wires me, under date of January 9, that the available surplus of wheat in Canada is only 75,000,000 bushels.

The available surplus of wheat, therefore, in Australia, Argentina, and Canada aggregates 240,000,000 instead of, as suggested in some quarters, more than 700,000,000 bushels.

Mr. President, this greatly relieves the pressure and greatly relieves the draft likely to come upon the people and on the Treasury of the United States with respect to the wheat guaranty for the current harvest.

I may say, Mr. President, that this estimate, noised abroad, of 700,000,000 or 800,000,000 bushels of wheat available in foreign countries has had a depressing effect upon the price of corn, rye, barley, and oats in the United States. I do not say that such was the intention of this report, but it has undoubtedly been the effect of the report. It has occasioned a serious loss to the farmers of the United States.

But, Mr. President, whatever may be the amount of this indemnity, the question arises as to who shall bear this loss. We have our choice between these alternatives. I may say in the first instance that the Government can pay the farmer the guaranteed price and can then sell the wheat and the wheat products to the consumers of this country on the basis of the guaranteed price. This would devolve the loss upon the consumers of this country. On the other hand, the Government can pay the guaranteed price to the farmer and can then sell wheat to the millers and see to it that flour is sold to the consumers of the country not on the basis of the guaranteed price, but on the basis of the world price for wheat—the price for wheat prevailing in the markets of the world.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not also true that, with the exception of the countries named by the Senator from Oklahoma, other countries, such as Italy, France, the Netherlands, and all the Scandinavian countries fixed a much higher price for wheat than the price fixed in the United States?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I have recited those guaranties. I may also say that so far as I have been able to ascertain the world production last year, the year 1918, was far below the average production for ordinary times and was far below the world's requirements; but I have not been able to obtain complete reports from all countries. Therefore an accurate analysis or comparison can not be made.

Mr. President, I have suggested two plans with respect to the payment of the indemnity. My own judgment is that the Government ought to assume the difference between the guaranteed price and the world price; it ought to assume this difference as a charge against the Treasury of the United States; it ought to devolve this loss upon the taxpayers of this country and not upon the consumers of this country. It is a disagreeable dilemma in which we find ourselves. We must take the choice of one or the other of the horns. I am taking the choice of the one which I think will entail the least economic loss upon the people of this country. If the Government absorbs the loss as a charge against the Treasury, it will not throw wages and prices and costs in this country out of alignment in comparison with other industrial and commercial countries.

But, Mr. President, if the people of this country are compelled to purchase flour and wheat products upon the basis of the guaranteed price this artificially high price for bread must be registered in an artificially high rate of wages. If the rate of wages be artificially high in this country that must register itself in artificially high cost of production. If the cost of production in this country is made artificially high by the Government that will send our products into the markets of the world loaded with this artificially high cost of production. That load would be serious enough in our domestic market, but it might be unbearable in foreign markets. It might be impossible for our goods, shotted with this high cost of production, to meet the competition of goods from other countries in the various markets of the world. That would result either in the loss or the curtailment of those markets; and, in addition to that, the surplus might be thrown back upon the domestic market, thus reacting unfavorably upon wages, prices, and prosperity here at home.

Not only that, but if the people of this country are required to purchase the by-products of wheat and to buy feedstuffs at an artificially high price, that fact must reflect itself in an artificially high cost of producing live stock, of producing dairy products, and of producing poultry and poultry products. It will reflect itself in an artificially high cost of living upon the tables of our people.

Mr. President, that would bring about a state of unstable economic equilibrium which Congress should not assume the responsibility of creating. That can be averted by permitting consumers to buy bread upon the basis of the world's price, and requiring the taxpayers of the country to assume and to absorb the difference. This plan, I understand, is that adopted in foreign countries resorting to this scheme of guaranteeing the price of wheat.

Mr. President, another reason why the consumer should not be penalized by a high price for his bread is the fact that the consumer is not responsible for this situation. This situation was not of his seeking. The Government, acting in its organized capacity, fixed a price upon wheat. It acted not for the consumers, but for the taxpayers of this country. It held a commission to speak for and to bind the taxpayers.

I need not remind the Senate that I was opposed to this whole scheme of price fixing. On March 21, last, I said here in the Senate: "In my judgment such an effort is foreordained to fail. Perhaps the oldest blunder known to the sons of men is the attempt at price fixing. The history of the effort is one dreary tale of uniform and unvarying failure, of disappointment, and ofttimes of disaster. Whenever the attempt is made to regulate prices the effort must inevitably work more or less mischief."

Mr. President, I regarded the scheme as uneconomic; I regarded the scheme as inevitably unjust. Human wisdom and foresight are not equal to the task. If the Government should fix the price of wheat at the point where the law of supply and demand would fix it, then you would have your labor for your pains, and the whole process would be vain and unavailing. If the Government should fix the price of wheat lower than the law of supply and demand would fix it, that would be both an injury and an injustice to the producer. If the Government should fix the price at a point higher than the law of supply and demand would fix it, that would be an injury and an injustice to the consumer.

The fixing of the price upon wheat for the harvest of 1917—and it was fixed not for the purpose of stimulating production, for the price was fixed in August, and the crop had been harvested in June, July, and August—occasioned a loss to the American farmers aggregating $400,000,000. The fixing of the price upon wheat in 1918 occasioned a loss to the farmers of this country of hardly less than $400,000,000. For the two years the direct loss to the farmers of the United States due to the action of this Government approximated $800,000,000.

I resisted the plan largely because I feared that the loss would ultimately fall upon the farmer and would be borne by the farmer. He was unorganized, and, therefore, largely defenseless; but it seems that even-handed justice, it seems that some guardian angel has come to the rescue of the farmer in connection with this scheme. The farmers will receive for the current harvest, perhaps, several hundred million dollars more than they would otherwise have received but for the fixing of the price. I take it that the farmers will come out just about even. Of course, there will be farmers enjoying the benefits of this guaranty for the current year who did not produce wheat in the two preceding years. There were farmers who produced wheat during 1917 and 1918 who, perhaps, will not produce wheat during the current year. There will be some discrepancy; but, taking it by and large as a class, the account will just about be equalized. The farmers will come out just about even. I thought when this price-fixing scheme was launched, and I think now, that it would be better to permit the farmer to receive the market price for his wheat and require the consumer to pay the market price for the wheat. This would have added less than $15 to the bread budget of the average American family—about two or three days' wages. That system would have been self-liquidating. The account would have been squared when the purchase was made. The party that ate the bread would have paid the bill. There would have been no aftermath of trouble, no reaping of whirlwinds.

So, Mr. President, I think that $1,250,000,000 is a larger amount than will be required to meet this obligation. We must be prepared, however, and we must prepare to carry a loss of several hundred million dollars. An ample appropriation should be made. If the money is not needed, it will not be used. If it is needed, it ought to be available in whatever amount may be found necessary. I hope I may be pardoned for saying that if this $1,250,000,000 estimated by the Department of Agriculture serves to protect us against like economic nostrums in the future, if this $1,250,000,000 serves to teach the engineer, the fireman, and the conductor as they crawl out from under the wreckage that they who display a red signal as a warning of danger may be friends rather than enemies, then, sir, this one and a quarter billion will have been well, if not wisely, expended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question before he leaves this point?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I have received several letters in the past two weeks from a number of sections of the United States in which it was stated that a great many persons were plowing up alfalfa and beet and other lands that had never produced wheat and upon which there had been no contemplation of planting wheat until after the armistice, with a view of growing wheat and getting the $2.26 per bushel for it, and that this guaranty was inducing the production of a large amount of wheat which otherwise would not have been produced. I have been urged to suggest some amendment to any bill that might be offered that would protect the Government against those who have gone into the wheat business merely for the purpose of securing this guaranty. Does the Senator think that any legislation could be drawn which, while just and fair, would meet the situation to which those who have written me call attention?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have not heard of a concrete instance such as the Senator describes, but I anticipated that the principles of human nature would result in just such consequences. It shows the difficulty of trying to administer a natural law by human agencies. I heard it suggested that no one should receive this guaranty who plants wheat for the current season who did not plant wheat for the last season, referring particularly to the spring sowing, and that no one should be entitled to the benefit of this guaranty who sowed a larger spring acreage than he sowed for the harvest of 1918; but, Mr. President, my own judgment is that we are now reaping what we have sown, a considerable acreage of (economic) wild oats. I think that Uncle Sam has simply got to exhibit as much nerve and endurance as the Spartan boy when he permitted the fox to gnaw at his vitals without wincing. I think that we have got to go through with it.

I wish to say in this connection that the guaranteed price of wheat in the United States never did have any relation to the securing of an ample wheat supply for the people of the United States nor for the armies and military forces of the United States. There never has been a year in our history that we did not produce all the wheat required for domestic consumption; there has never been a year in our history that we did not produce more wheat in the United States than was required for the people of the United States and for the military forces of the United States; there was never any doubt in anybody's mind that the supply of wheat in the United States would not equal all our domestic requirements of whatever description. Whatever the real reason was, it was not the guaranty of an ample supply of wheat for domestic consumption.

Mr. President, there is only one other question which I will raise and will not attempt to settle. Who should administer this loss? We have two choices in this connection. The Government can purchase the wheat of the farmer, paying him, of course, the full price in cash at all times, and can license the millers and all dealers, placing under governmental license and control all the prices and profits from the producer to the consumer, a plan patterned somewhat upon the existing system. On the other hand, the Government can purchase wheat, paying the guaranteed price, and can then sell the wheat to the trade—to the millers or to the dealers—on the basis of the world price, and allow the processes and the profits to go forward as nearly as may be under ordinary circumstances.

My own desire is to speed a return to normal conditions as rapidly as possible. I am not certain, however, that we can make this return overnight. We can not have both a market that is open and a market that is not open. With a guaranteed maximum so far as the trade is concerned, as this will be, for the present year, and with a guaranteed minimum corresponding with the world price so far as the consumers are concerned, the trade would be limited on both hands. I am not certain that it could operate within these limitations. Indeed, I fear that it might entail upon them criticisms for which they are in nowise responsible, as they did not have the power to control the situation.

There are so many legislative facts, there are so many artificial factors in this situation that the world market can not be entirely free. A number of countries have fixed the price of wheat, and will undoubtedly administer the marketing of this wheat in order to hedge against loss as far as practicable. While I do not believe that the consumer should be penalized by paying a higher price for bread than other peoples pay, on the other hand I do not believe that the consumer should be subsidized by being enabled to purchase his bread at a lower price than the world's market would warrant.

Mr. President, I keep alluding to the world's market. I may say that in a strict sense there will not be a world's market upon wheat for the harvest of 1919. Too many countries are controlling the marketing of wheat. The wheat from Argentina and Canada, however, will move with more or less freedom in the markets of the world. It will be an indication as to the ratio between the world's supply and the world's demand.

There is another standard that would enable the Government of the United States to approximate justice. There is a pretty well-defined historic ratio between the price of wheat in this country and the price of corn, rye, barley, and oats. For instance, during a number of years corn averaged a little less than 62 per cent of the price of wheat. The Government could consider the supply both of corn and of wheat, and could approximate a just price. At any rate, there will be factors which will enable the Government to arrive at a reasonably just standard.

Mr. President, it has been suggested—it has been suggested in a bill which has been prepared in a certain quarter—that the Grain Corporation should not only be allowed to control the wheat harvest and the wheat market for 1919 but that the Grain Corporation should be allowed to control corn, rye, barley, oats, rice, beans, peas, potatoes, apples, butter, milk, cheese, chickens, and eggs; that the Grain Corporation should be allowed to control and administer the marketing of every food and every feed which can be eaten by man or bird or beast.

Mr. President, I am unqualifiedly opposed to extending the range of this artificial administration. It may be a matter of inevitable necessity to permit the control of the wheat harvest for the current year, but I would not extend this control into domains where it does not now prevail. I believe that we have got to come down toward the sea level, and we ought to come down on the lock-and-dam system, and not rush down with the violence of the cataract. I for one am not willing to precipitate universal confusion merely for the sake of trying our hand in bringing order out of this confusion which we have precipitated and which we have confounded.

There are three tasks devolving upon us to-day: First, to keep faith with the American farmer in the payment of the guaranty; second, to keep faith with the consumer and see that he purchases bread upon a parity with the other peoples of the earth; and third, to keep faith with the taxpayers of this country and to keep their inevitable loss down to an irreducible minimum.

Mr. President, I wish to have printed in the RECORD this memorial and several tables in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXHIBIT 1.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Colorado have suggested one observation that I wish to make. I need not say to the Senate that I do not believe in any scheme of price fixing. In my judgment, such an effort is foreordained to fail. Perhaps the oldest blunder known to the sons of men is the attempt at price fixing. The history of the effort is one dreary tale of uniform and unvarying failure, of disappointment, and ofttimes of disaster.

Whenever the attempt is made to regulate prices the effort must inevitably work more or less mischief. I have offered the pending amendment in order to bring about a situation where we will work less rather than more mischief. I seek to minimize the mischief which must come; I seek to keep the mischief down to the irreducible minimum. That is the object of the proposed amendment.

We have been told on every hand that food is the key to the situation, and that wheat is the pivotal food grain. Mr. Hoover assured us that there was a psychology about a wheaten loaf that was indispensable. There is no sufficient substitute for wheat; we have been appealed to to produce wheat in abundance on the assurance that wheat might win the war.

There is but one excuse or plea which renders the attempt at price fixing even rational. If there be some article like wheat which is of preeminent and of indispensable necessity, then fix a price upon that one article higher than the law of supply and demand would award. That will stimulate its production, and that will do all that human foresight can do to meet a crisis and to avert the possibility of disaster. Even that attempt will be attended with more or less mischief, because it throws other relations out of their proper proportion; but we ought like men to make up our minds to take those consequences whenever the necessity is overpowering.

Mr. President, what have we done? We have fixed a price on wheat. We have fixed a price on wheat, which may be needed to win this war, at a lower point than the law of supply and demand would award. Now, you can not encourage production by reducing prices. You can increase and stimulate production by increasing prices, but the reduction of prices must inevitably discourage production. Ought we to discourage the production of a grain which may be indispensable to our success in this war and to the guaranty of our destiny?

Mr. President, the fixing of a price on an article of indispensable necessity at a lower point than the law of supply and demand would award, with the hope of stimulating its production, is a transaction which, as a perfected specimen of human folly, has absolutely no competitor.

EXHIBIT 2.

[Remarks on the food-control act July, 1917. Interruption by Senator GORE during remarks by Senator LODGE.]

THE LAMP OF EXPERIENCE VS. MUDDLING THROUGH.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say that not long since I received a letter from a friend requesting me to send him a relic of some sort or other, and I sent him a copy of the Constitution of the United States. [Laughter.] What I wish to do, however, is to give a few instances that illustrate and reenforce the point which the Senator is making with respect to economic laws.

The food minister of Great Britain issued an order fixing the price of dairy products. The dairymen were not satisfied with the price; they butchered their milch cows. There was a distinct national, social, and economic loss that could not be repaired within two or three years. Great Britain issued an order instituting a three-course dinner. They kept account of the results, and it was found that the increased consumption of meat and bread under the three-course dinner order more than offset the economy. The people cut out the side dishes and limited themselves to the more substantial foods. That order was revoked. Great Britain instituted one meatless day a week. They kept account of the results, and it was found that the increased consumption of bread on the meatless day more than offset the diminished consumption of meat. They revoked that order. Those orders were issued with the best possible intention, and, it must be admitted, with as much wisdom as man can concentrate upon the most serious concerns of either private or national life.

Germany fixed a price of 8 cents a quart on milk. The dairymen found that they could feed the milk to their pigs and receive a higher price for milk in the form of pork than by selling the milk outright. Germany fixed a price on wheat, rye, barley, and oats, based on their relative value for human food. It so happens that the relative value of those four cereals for human food does not correspond with their relative value as stock feed. The result was that the farmers fed their wheat and their rye to the live stock and sold the oats and the barley. Those efforts were made by the Government which has attained the highest degree of efficiency of any Government in all the times of time.

The Swiss Government determined what would be a reasonable price of meats sold in the butcher shops. They called the butchers together to ascertain what would be their view of the price proposed to be fixed. The butchers in a patriotic spirit, answered, "Of course, if the Government fixes those prices on meats, we will sell at the prices fixed by the Government—if we sell," but they declared that they would not undertake to carry on their business at those prices.

I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon this interruption, but it demonstrates the futility of any effort to repeal economic laws. In my own judgment, we might as well say, "Be it enacted that the law of gravitation is hereby repealed," as to undertake to enact a law repealing the law of supply and demand or any other fundamental law of economics. I mention these instances, all of which were born of the greatest possible human wisdom, and I merely suggest as a moral that we ought to profit by experience. We have no other lamp so infallible as that

We ought not to set at naught the whole experience of the whole human race.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States.

Whereas the President of the United States issued a proclamation during the month of August, 1918, urging the farmers of the United States, as a war measure, to plant and cultivate an increased acreage of wheat, and fixing the price of such wheat crop for the year 1919 at a minimum of $2.20 per bushel; and

Whereas the President of the United States set apart the sum of $5,000,000 to be loaned to the farmers in the drought-stricken parts of the country for the purpose of buying seed wheat, and for the purpose of enabling such farmers to fully comply with the proclamation of the President; and

Whereas the cost of seed wheat has greatly increased and the expense of planting and cultivating the same has increased materially, and the farmers in general and especially those in the western part of Oklahoma have nobly responded to the call of the President by reason of such proclamation, and by planting an increased acreage of wheat under the belief that the price heretofore mentioned would be maintained and such guaranty would insure them not less than $2.20 as a minimum per bushel; and

Whereas there is some feeling of doubt among the farmers as to whether such price will be maintained, and especially is this true since the war has closed, and without an act of the Congress of the United States through appropriate legislation carrying into effect the proclamation of the President; and

Whereas the wheat growers of the country would suffer serious and permanent loss if the provisions of the President's proclamation are not made effective through proper legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby earnestly and urgently memorialized and petitioned to immediately take steps to carry into effect by adequate legislation the provisions of the President's proclamation heretofore referred to and to make secure for the farmers of the country a guaranty of a minimum price of $2.20 per bushel of the wheat grown in 1919: Be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house of representatives be instructed to mail or cause to be mailed copies of this memorial to the Members of Congress from the State of Oklahoma and to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.

Passed this the 20th day of January, 1919.

(Signed) TOM C. WALDREP,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

EXHIBIT 4.

In order to determine the probable effect of price upon production it is necessary to take into consideration the element of rate of yield per acre. The price element and the yield is combined in the following showing of the value of production per acre for the prewar and the postwar periods:

Value of production per acre.

	Oats.		Wheat.		Corn.
	1909-13	1914-16	1909-13	1914-16	1909-13	1914-16
United States	$11.35	$14.15	$12.52	$17.14	$14.66	$18.18

Again, taking corn as the standard of measurement, it appears that the percentage of value of production per acre of oats and wheat compares with corn as follows:

	1909-13	1914-16
Oats	77	78
Wheat	85	94

As in the similar calculation, based upon farm price alone, it appears that there was no disturbance of normal relationship between the prewar and the postwar period sufficient to materially affect the relative production of each crop.

Making the comparison, however, between the prewar period and December 1, 1917, a different situation is presented:

Value of production per acre.

	1909-13	1917
Oats	$11.35	$24.35
Wheat	12.52	28.53
Corn	14.66	33.87

Again taking corn as the standard of measurement, the percentage of value per acre of production for oats and wheat compares with corn as follows:

	1909-13	1917
Oats	77	72
Wheat	85	84

FIXING GUARANTEED PRICES FOR 1919 WHEAT CROP.

(Sept. 2, 1918.)

Whereas under and by virtue of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved by the President on the 10th day of August, 1917, it is provided among other things as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act approved August eleventh, nineteen hundred and sixteen. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment, and differences in price for the several standard grades in the principal primary markets of the United States adopting number one northern spring or its equivalent at the principal interior primary markets as the basis. Thereupon, the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guarantee within the period, not exceeding eighteen months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty."

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers conferred upon me by said act of Congress, and especially by section 14 thereof, do hereby find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guarantee provided for in said section; and, in order to make effective the guarantee by Congress for the crop of nineteen hundred and nineteen and to assure such producers a reasonable profit, I do hereby determine and fix, and give public notice of reasonable guaranteed prices for No. 1 northern spring wheat and its equivalents at the respective principal primary markets, as follows, to wit:

New York, New York, two dollars and thirty-nine and a half cents ($2.39½) per bushel.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, two dollars and thirty-nine cents ($2.39) per bushel.

Baltimore, Maryland, two dollars and thirty-eight and three-quarter cents ($2.38¾) per bushel.

Newport News, Virginia, two dollars and thirty-eight and three-quarter cents ($2.38¾) per bushel.

Duluth, Minnesota, two dollars and twenty-two and one-half cents ($2.22½) per bushel.

Minneapolis, Minnesota, two dollars and twenty-one and one-half cents ($2.21½) per bushel.

Chicago, Illinois, two dollars and twenty-six cents ($2.26) per bushel.

St. Louis, Missouri, two dollars and twenty-four cents ($2.24) per bushel.

Kansas City, Missouri, two dollars and eighteen cents ($2.18) per bushel.

Omaha, Nebraska, two dollars and eighteen cents ($2.18) per bushel.

New Orleans, Louisiana, two dollars and twenty-eight cents ($2.28) per bushel.

Galveston, Texas, two dollars and twenty-eight cents ($2.28) per bushel.

Tacoma, Washington, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel.

Seattle, Washington, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel.

Portland, Oregon, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel.

Astoria, Oregon, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel.

San Francisco, California, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel.

Los Angeles, California, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel.

Salt Lake City, Utah, $2 per bushel.

Great Falls, Mont., $2 per bushel.

Pocatello, Idaho, $2 per bushel.

Spokane, Wash., $2 per bushel.

and that the guaranteed price for the other grades established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916, based on said price for No. 1 northern spring wheat at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, will assure the producers of wheat produced within the United States a reasonable profit; the guaranteed prices in the principal primary markets above mentioned being fixed by adopting No. 1 northern spring wheat or its equivalent at the principal interior markets as the basis.

For the purposes of such guaranty only, I hereby fix the guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets above mentioned for the following grades of wheat, to wit: No. 1 northern spring, No. 1 hard winter, No. 1 red winter, No. 1 durum, No. 1 hard white. The guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets aforesaid of all other grades of wheat established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916, shall be based on the above guaranteed prices and bear just relation thereto.

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919 and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920, to such agent or employee of the United States, or other person as may be hereafter designated, at any one of the above-mentioned cities, which are hereby declared to be the principal primary markets of the United States, and provided that such producer complies with all regulations which may be hereafter promulgated in regard to said guaranty by the President of the United States. * * *

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota upon the same subject that the Senator from Oklahoma has been discussing, and I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state for the State of North Dakota, do hereby set forth and certify, that the following is the full text and the whole thereof of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota.

Dated at the capitol in Bismarck, N. Dak., this 3d day of February.

[SEAL.] THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

Resolution.

Concurrent resolution relating to the fixing of the price for all wheat grown in the United States during the year 1919 that is delivered prior to June 1, 1920, at $2.26 at Chicago.

Whereas the President of the United States, by his proclamation of September 2, 1918, fixed the price for all wheat grown in the United States during the year 1919 that is delivered prior to June 1, 1920, at $2.26 at Chicago; and

Whereas upon the faith of said proclamation the farmers of North Dakota and generally throughout the Northwest have gone to an enormous expense in the increase of acreage for wheat and for the purchase of horses, machinery, and other equipment for an increased wheat production and have incurred great obligations on that account; and

Whereas it appears that up to this time no agency of the United States has been created and charged with the duty of making effective the guaranteed price under the President's proclamation; and

Whereas the farmers of North Dakota as well as all other wheat-raising districts of the United States have acted in good faith upon the said proclamation of the President, and in case Congress fails to make the said proclamation of the President effective, such failure will cause an enormous financial loss to the farmers of the State of North Dakota and other wheat-raising districts of the United States as well as a great disappointment, and will tend to lessen the confidence of the people in the Federal Government: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That we earnestly urge Congress to pass such measure as will make the said proclamation of the President effective; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in both Houses of Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is the chairman. I want to give him notice that at some time in the near future I shall present the other side of this proposition. I do not think it is necessary for the Government to raise one billion seven hundred million or two hundred and fifty million dollars, but that we can easily handle the matter under the present system with an expense not exceeding $300,000,000; and I wish to state that while we have just passed a bill appropriating $400,000,000—or that which will be equivalent to $400,000,000, because there is $200,000,000 to come from the States—to keep up the price of labor, and necessarily with the price of labor the price of everything else that the farmer must purchase, we are not extending any favor to him, we are not placing the price of his products above that of any of the other commodities in this country by maintaining the price of $2.26 a bushel for wheat. As we are bound to have the higher cost of labor throughout the United States during 1919, we ought to maintain the higher price of the thing that the farmer must sell, in order that he may purchase the things that are produced by that labor; and that is all the farmer is contending for. Let the Government take its hands off the farmers' products and off labor wages at the same time and let the law of supply and demand take care of themselves and he will be satisfied; but the Government is not following that course——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. McCUMBER. And therefore we ought not to assume that we are conferring a favor upon the farmer by maintaining the price of his product to meet other prices which we maintain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for.

Mr. McCUMBER. Senators have listened to the other side of this proposition for three-quarters of an hour. I think they can take one minute outside of the regular order, in order to look at the farmers' side of the question.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present the resolution, which I send to the desk, from the State of North Dakota and ask that it be read as a legislative resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from North Dakota had finished when I interposed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have concluded.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not intend to interfere with the Senator's remarks at all.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the memorial presented by the Senator from North Dakota.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas it has been brought to the knowledge of the House of Representatives of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota:

That it is proposed in the Congress of the United States to reduce the appropriation now available or to become available for agricultural-extension work in the various States in the Union to the extent of 50 per cent: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the house of representatives does hereby protest against any reduction in the funds now by law available or to become available for such purposes:

As any such reduction would seriously hamper and embarrass the carrying on of agricultural-extension work and work through county agents now planned and arranged for by the various agricultural States and their several counties: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be engrossed and mailed to each of our Senators and Representatives in Washington.

L. L. STARR, Speaker.
GEO. A. COTTEN, Jr.,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say just one word in respect to what the Senator from North Dakota has said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been a call for the regular order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPENCER. I present a memorial from citizens of Missouri, protesting against the so-called luxury tax. I ask that the body of the memorial be printed in the RECORD; and in the case of the signatures, aggregating many thousands, I ask that they be filed.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To our Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned citizens and consumers of St. Louis, do respectfully protest against the so-called luxury taxes in the revenue bill now pending, and earnestly urge that they be eliminated altogether from said bill.

We make this protest upon the ground that any such tax is unnecessary, unwise, unjust, and a species of class legislation. This tax is impracticable of administration, will become a nuisance to the dealer, and a grievous burden to the consuming public.

Mr. STERLING. I present a resolution passed by the Rotary Club of the city of Mitchell, S. Dak., relative to changing the name of the Panama Canal to the Roosevelt Canal. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution to change the name of the Panama Canal to the Roosevelt Canal.

Whereas the sturdiest and most valiant exponent of Americanism the age has produced has gone from us and his mighty soul, ever militant and unafraid, no longer remains to champion the battles of liberty and justice, and equality of opportunity, and every American feels his passing as a personal loss; and

Whereas his greatest material achievement was the crystallizing of the dream of years into reality in making possible the construction of the canal across the Isthmus of Panama: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Rotary Club of Mitchell, S. Dak., That Congress be petitioned officially to designate that American-made waterway "The Roosevelt Canal," so that the same shall stand in name, as well as in historical fact, an enduring monument to his greatness, a constant reminder that the canal is, like the great President who started it, unqualifiedly American; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the following: Our Representatives and Senators in Congress, our representatives in the South Dakota State Legislature, with the petition that a memorial to Congress in support of the foregoing be prepared and forwarded by our State legislature.

Adopted at the regular weekly meeting January 30, 1919.

MITCHELL ROTARY CLUB,
By F. J. HERRICK, President.

Attest:

WM. R. RONALD, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, relating to the improvement of good roads. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state for the State of North Dakota, do hereby set forth and certify, that the following is the full text and the whole thereof of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota.

Dated at the capitol in Bismarck, N. Dak., this 3d day of February, 1919.

[SEAL.]

THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

Resolution.

Concurrent resolution relating to the value and importance of an adequate system of highways.

Whereas the value and importance of an adequate system of highways throughout the Nation and among the various States and their minor governmental units are no less important in the present reconstruction era than in the successful prosecution of a war; and

Whereas North Dakota as one of the most important food-producing States of the Union is in great need of improved highways intelligently conceived and constructed and properly maintained; and

Whereas the present Federal aid law and the State highway law have made it possible for the State to initiate a program of progressive and systematic road improvement within the State; and

Whereas a bill, namely, Senate bill No. 5088, as introduced in Congress by United States Senator BANKHEAD, eliminates the post route requirement on Federal aid projects, which requirement is contrary to the intent and spirit of the Federal aid law and has hampered the work of the State highway commission in securing such aid to the State, and provides further for increased Federal aid to the extent of $200,000,000 in addition to $75,000,000 already specified in the present law, and whereby the allotment of Federal aid to North Dakota will be increased from approximately $1,142,000 to $4,000,000 or more; and

Whereas said Senate bill No. 5088 is about to be given immediate consideration in connection with the Post Office appropriation bill: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That we, the members of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, respectfully petition our Senators and Representatives of North Dakota in Congress to support Senate bill No. 5088 which is a proposed amendment to improve the present Federal aid law and grant increased aid to the States in the construction of State highways and endeavor to secure its passage; and

Whereas there has been proposed at a conference of certain western States held in Salt Lake City on January 3, 1919, a further amendment to the Federal aid law, whereby the larger and relatively less rich States of the West may receive Federal aid on Federal aid projects to an extent greater than 50 per cent of the cost of such projects: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be hereby respectfully requested also to support and endeavor to secure the passage of such an amendment; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and that, because of the urgency of the matter, the committee on highways be instructed to send to each of our Senators in Congress a night letter or message respectfully soliciting their support of the aforesaid amendments or measures.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for the proposed extension of Federal control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Augusta, Me., praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the petition of Hon. Lee Beaty, of Lockhart, Tex., praying for the construction of military roads as a measure of preparedness, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of sundry employees of the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., praying that the Government manufacture their own equipment to be used for military, naval, marine, etc., purposes, instead of letting out large contracts to private concerns and corporations, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1765. An act to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 (Rept. No. 705);

S. 2902. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer (Rept. No. 704);

S. 3123. An act for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett (Rept. No. 703); and

H. R. 2012. An act for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford (Rept. No. 706).

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4263. An act for the relief of Capt. Frederick B. Shaw (Rept. No. 708); and

S. 4864. An act to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy (Rept. No. 707).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 5567) for the purchase of a post-office site at Mount Pleasant, Utah;

A bill (S. 5568) for the purchase of a post-office site at Tremonton, Utah;

A bill (S. 5569) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at St. George, Utah; and

A bill (S. 5570) for the purchase of a post-office site at Cedar City, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 5571) granting a pension to Jeannette A. Harrington (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARDWICK:

A bill (S. 5572) to prohibit immigration for a period of four years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 5573) providing a method for the retirement of men in the military service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5574) granting an increase of pension to William H. Merritt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 5575) for the relief of the H. W. Davis Co., of St. Augustine, Fla.; and

A bill (S. 5576) for the relief of the Estes Shoe Co., of St. Augustine, Fla.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5577) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the cities of Mission, Mount Vernon, and Tulia, all in Texas; and

A bill (S. 5578) relating to the pay of retired enlisted men serving as field clerks; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MOSES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment relative to the limitation in the agricultural appropriation bill as to the cost of farm buildings, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the investigation and improvement of fruits and the methods of fruit growing, harvesting, etc., from $83,200 to $88,200, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

LONGEVITY PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S.

83) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims, the passage of which the committee recommends. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the bill, it being a bill which was introduced by him, and with which he is very familiar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for immediate action on this bill. It was passed by the last Congress. The question involved is the longevity pay of certain officers of the United States Army. All but a few of them have been paid. The reason why those few were not paid was because they filed their claims with the auditor, and were turned down; subsequently the Supreme Court held that the claims were good; but they now hold that these particular claims, having been turned down, can not be reinstated in the Court of Claims.

This is merely a bill to put a few men on the same basis with several hundred others who have already been paid. The Senate has already passed on the matter once, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up and passed at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will say that the bill was before the Judiciary Committee at the last Congress, and was reported favorably and was passed by the Senate, I think.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; it was.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And it is again reported favorably, without a dissenting vote. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that these officers are entitled to the money.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 15, on page 2, and to insert:

That the Court of Claims shall certify to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury the findings of fact heretofore made for claimants in claims of officers of the United States Army for longevity pay under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, in United States v. Morton (vol. 112, U. S. Repts., p. 1) and United States v. Watson (vol. 130, U. S. Repts., p. 80) and of the Court of Claims in Stewart v. United States (vol. 34, Ct. Cls. Repts, p. 553).

And that the accounting officers of the Treasury shall proceed to settle the claims so certified and all other claims for longevity pay and allowances on account of services of officers in the Regular Army arising under section 15 of an act approved July 5, 1838, entitled "An act to increase the present Military Establishment of the United States, and for other purposes," and subsequent acts affecting longevity pay and allowances, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, in all cases in which heretofore, namely, between 1890 and 1908, such claims were disallowed by any accounting officer of the Treasury, and no decision of a comptroller heretofore made against a claimant under said section 15 shall prevent a settlement under the terms of this act of any such disallowed claim. Every such claim shall be payable to the claimant or to his widow or to his legal representative: Provided, That no claim hereunder shall be allowed if made by any person who is an assignee of such claim, nor to a legal representative without proof of the existence of blood relations to whom the fund would be distributed: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any agent or attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act to charge or receive more than 20 per cent of any amount appropriated in satisfaction of the claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes."

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the Senator yield for just an instant?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. There is a resolution, introduced by me yesterday, respecting Russia. It was to come up to-day. I have been asked by some Members to postpone the resolution for one day in order that they might consult concerning it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that without prejudice it may go over until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I hope that will be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution goes over.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Let me add that if to-morrow we shall be in recess it shall come up in the first morning hour.

Mr. KING. That course will be agreeable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would so construe it. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to take up the conference report.

Mr. LEWIS. The morning business has not closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair has announced a great many times, after 1 o'clock a motion can be made to proceed to the consideration of a measure, and the Chair understands that that is what the Senator from Texas is doing.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I ask the Senator to allow me to introduce a resolution.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It seems that there is quite an amount of morning business pressing for consideration, and I will withdraw the motion for the present.

WORK IN SHIPYARDS AT SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution:

The resolution (S. Res. 448) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board is requested to inform the Senate whether or not workmen who are willing to work in shipyards at Seattle, Wash., having Government contracts are allowed to do so, or given the opportunity to do so; whether such workmen belong to a labor union or not; and if those who belong to a labor union or those who do not belong to a labor union and who are willing to work at the wages established by the so-called Macy award are not allowed to work in said yards upon said Government contracts, the Shipping Board is requested to inform the Senate why and upon what grounds they are not allowed to so work, and by whom they are prevented from so doing.

PROTECTION OF LIFE AND PROPERTY OF AMERICANS IN MEXICO.

Mr. LEWIS. I send a resolution to the desk and ask to have it read and then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 449) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas American citizens residing in the United States, particularly of the State of Illinois, make complaint in writing, charging that the Government in Mexico, under the administration known as Carranza, has permitted the property of citizens of the United States to be destroyed or confiscated under the guise of a constitutional provision devised and adopted long years after the Americans had legally obtained and fully paid for their property; and

Whereas the complaining Americans assert that the said Government agents of the Carranza administration have conspired to permit, and have allowed, the innocent laborers upon the American operations to be driven off or assaulted, and in designated instances murdered; and

Whereas it is complained that such conduct continues, all under the purpose to confiscate and appropriate the property of Americans under an alleged constitutional privilege: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee of the Senate on Foreign Relations ascertain through the Department of State and such other sources as it deems advisable the truth of the said charges; and if true, to recommend to the Senate such course as would be appropriate for the United States Government to take that will make secure in Mexico under the present Government the lives and property of Americans.

GOVERNMENT OF POLAND.

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution to be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 450) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the people of Poland have recovered their ancient national liberties and rights, and have erected for themselves a free national Republic for the maintenance of public order, the preservation of private liberties and rights, and to incorporate the culture, traditions, and liberties of Poland in a stable and permanent Government; and

Whereas the Chief Executive of the United States has, by the Secretary of State, recognized the new republican Government of Poland and has sent his felicitations to Ignace Jan Paderewski, premier and minister of foreign affairs, in the new Government of Poland: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate extend its congratulations to the new republican Government of Poland upon its admission into the society of free nations, and express welcome and good will to the people of Poland upon the achievement of their national independence.

COMMANDEERED SHIPS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a concurrent resolution, which I desire to have read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Whereas the Government on the declaration of war commandeered the merchant ships of private owners in the United States and thereby canceled all pending contracts with shippers; and

Whereas the resumption of private business requiring the use of the facilities furnished by such shippers is dependent upon obtaining rates that will permit such business to be conducted without loss, and such resumption will give employment in many lines; and

Whereas the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation having authority in such matters have not returned such private ships so commandeered to their owners so that contracts may be resumed or entered into between the private owners of such ships and various industrial enterprises: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation be, and are hereby, directed to report to Congress why such private ships should not now be returned to their respective owners to be used in the various industrial undertakings of the country.

DEPORTATION OF ANARCHISTS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present petitions which I have received from the minutemen division of the American Protective League, of Seattle, Wash. These petitions are signed by over 1,800 citizens of the State of Washington. They urge the deportation of those aliens who have taken out their first papers looking toward naturalization, but who, when the war came on, in order to escape military service renounced this declaration. They particularly call attention to the fact that of 205 persons who renounced their citizenship 54, or nearly 27 per cent, had I. W. W. cards in their pockets.

Mr. President, there is a very strong sentiment in our State for the deportation of those people who acted as these persons did. They do not consider them as desirable citizens there from any standpoint.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an interruption apropos of what he is stating?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I have taken up the matter with the Department of Labor, and I can assure the Senator that as soon as shipping can be provided and arrangements made some of these alien anarchists and Bolshevists who are seeking the destruction of our Government will be deported.

Mr. PENROSE. May I make an inquiry for my own information? I should like to inquire how these anarchists are to be sent back to the country whence they came. Will those countries be willing to take them? I make the inquiry for my own information. It occurred to me that we might ship them over there and the foreign country might refuse to let them get off the vessel.

Mr. KING. I confess I have not given attention to the modus operandi by which that would be effectuated, but the law which we passed in October of last year provides that the Department of Labor shall deport certain classes of people, and I am sure the Department of Labor is going to act up to the letter and the spirit of that act.

Mr. PENROSE. I can see how the anarchists might spend their lives going from one shore to the other.

Mr. KING. He is a man without a country, anyway.

Mr. PENROSE. Can the Senator from Washington inform me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad to have the statement of the Senator from Utah. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I introduced a bill a short time ago providing for the deportation of these various individuals. The Department of State seems to take a different attitude from the Department of Labor. They wrote me a letter expressing the earnest hope that this measure would not be pressed, stating that some protests had come to it from one Government, whose citizens were in this class. It seems that that Government does not want these citizens returned to its shores, and so it protested against our taking any action of that kind. I think we could find a way of getting the people out of this country, anyhow; I do not care where they go, so they get out of here.

Mr. PENROSE. Where would they go?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We would take them and land them on somebody else's shores.

Mr. PENROSE. Send them up to the North Pole?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would be a good place. I would not worry anything about that. What I want to do and what our people want to do is to get this class of persons out of our country.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the proposition a very meritorious one, but it simply occurred to me as a matter of curiosity how this as a practical problem was going to be solved. There still seems to be some doubt about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not any doubt but what we can put them on board ship and start them away from our shores and not let them come back.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no doubt about that; but where shall they be sent?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not worrying as to where the ship will land or where these people will land after they get away from our shores so that they can not come back. That will not worry me a particle.

I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD without the names.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Petition for legislation to deport certain aliens.

To the Congress of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of Washington, petition your honorable body that you enact legislation during the present session which will make possible the deportation from the United States of those who renounced their citizenship in order to escape the obligation of military service and who signed affidavits that they would voluntarily return to the lands from whence they came.

We deem that persons who think so lightly of the privileges of American citizenship that they are unwilling to fight for them when called to the colors are not desirable as residents of the United States, and that the act of renouncing their citizenship in order to escape military service is sufficient proof of their undesirability.

In further proof of the undesirability of these persons as a class, we submit the fact that of 205 persons who renounced their citizenship before the draft boards of Seattle to escape military service, 54, or nearly 27 per cent, were shown to be members of the I. W. W. by a check of the membership list of that organization in the hands of the police.

We therefore petition for the passage of whatever legislation is necessary to provide for the deportation of those who refuse to live up to their promise to leave the United States.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to call up Senate concurrent resolution No. 30, which authorizes Hon. KEY PITTMAN, as one of the managers at the conference on Senate bill 2812, to affix the name of JAMES D. PHELAN as one of the Senate managers to the conference report on the bill (S. 2812) entitled "An act to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain," under oral authority and by telegram requesting such action.

I desire to present a telegram from Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN which is addressed to Hon. KEY PITTMAN, United States Senate, Washington, D. C., and is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 10, 1919.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Have read mineral leasing bill and conference report, and I hereby authorize you to sign my name to the bill as reported by the conference committee.

JAMES D. PHELAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution?

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Hon. KEY PITTMAN, as one of the Senate managers, is hereby authorized to affix the name of JAMES D. PHELAN, as one of the Senate managers, to the conference report on bill (S. 2812) entitled "An act to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain," under oral authority and by telegram requesting such action.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that last night the Senate passed the bill (S. 3992) to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians. I have just had called to my attention by a member of the tribe a claim that was passed, without consideration by the committee, where there was an application to be heard on the part of the Indians before the passage of the bill. Personally I do not know anything about it. I was unable to find any member of the committee in the Chamber, and, as I have to leave the Chamber for committee work, I should like to enter a formal motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed last night. It may be that it will be adjusted properly when I am able to see members of the committee who know about the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

AGENTS OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that Senate resolution 446, submitted yesterday by me, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair lays the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to amend the resolution by inserting before the word "Michigan" the words "in connection with the senatorial primary and election held in that State in August and November, 1918."

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas it is known that a large number, to wit, more than 25 men, have been in the State of Michigan for a great portion of the time since August, 1918, representing themselves to be agents of the United States Department of Justice, and many are there now; and

Whereas said men are accused of indulging in unlawful and unwarranted practices: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether he has sent any special agents into Michigan in connection with the senatorial primary and election held in that State in August and November, 1918, and, if he has, how many have been sent, together with their names, how many are there now, the purpose for which they were sent and are now retained there, and what instructions, if any, were given these men by him.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing Hon. KEY PITTMAN, as one of the Senate managers, to affix the name of JAMES D. PHELAN as one of the Senate managers to the conference report on the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain, under oral authority and by telegram requesting such action.

THE REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. A number of Senators desired to be here at the time the report was taken up, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will first lay before the Senate the conference report on the revenue bill. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons
Beckham	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smoot
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Spencer
Curtis	King	Penrose	Sterling
Fletcher	Kirby	Pittman	Sutherland
France	Lenroot	Poindexter	Swanson
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Pollock	Thompson
Gay	Lodge	Pomerene	Trammell
Gore	McCumber	Ransdell	Underwood
Gronna	McKellar	Saulsbury	Walsh
Harding	McLean	Shafroth	Warren
Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Watson
Henderson	Moses	Sherman	Weeks

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are detained by illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], on account of illness.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report of the committee of conference may be dispensed with.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I object to that. I think the report ought to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Secretary will read the report of the committee of conference.

The Secretary read as follows:

"The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

"That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 5, 10"—

And sundry other amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Secretary has been directed to read this report, and I ask that it be read. I want the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to read the report as requested.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

"That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 5, 10, 35, 37, 38, 50, 54, 55, 58, 59, 112, 120, 121, 122, 123, 127, 131, 140, 186, 187, 189, 208, 211, 218, 222, 223, 235, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 329, 330, 332, 333, 352, 362, 377, 378, 379, 381, 394, 405, 407, 410, 444, 445, 488, 490, 491, 493, 498, 499, 500, 509, 516, 518, 519, 539, 540, 541, 553, 559, 587, 588, and 594.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 7, 8, 9, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 56, 57, 60, 61, 62, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, 79, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 119, 124, 126, 128, 130, 132, 133, 134, 136, 137, 138, 139, 141, 142, 143, 145, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 170, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 181, 182, 183, 184, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 209, 210, 212, 213, 217, 219, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 255, 256, 258, 260, 262, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 271, 278, 279, 280, 281, 283, 284, 286, 287, 288, 290, 291, 293, 294, 295, 296, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 326, 327, 328, 331, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 342, 343, 344, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 353, 354, 355, 356, 358, 359, 360, 361, 363, 364, 365, 366, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 380, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 388, 389, 390, 392, 396, 398, 400, 401, 402, 403, 406, 408, 409, 411, 412, 413, 415, 416, 419, 422, 423, 427, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 468, 470, 471, 472, 473, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 481, 482, 483, 486, 487, 489, 494, 496, 497, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 517, 520, 521, 522, 524, 525, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 536, 537, 538, 543, 545, 546, 547, 549, 551, 552, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 560, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 579, 580, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 589, 590, 591, 592, and 593; and agree to the same."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the recital of these numbers will impress the Senate, if attention is called to it, with the very large number of amendments adopted by the Senate from which the House receded from its disagreement; and it bears out the thought that the greater part of very many of the excellent provisions in the measure inserted by the Senate have been retained in the pending bill. I only desire to call attention to that phase of it as shown by a comparison of the two paragraphs, the first containing the amendments from which the Senate receded and the second those from which the House receded.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the conference report, and read as follows:

"Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 1, line 5, of the bill strike out the comma after the word 'partnerships'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'The term "personal service corporation" means a corporation whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the principal owners or stockholders who are themselves regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and in which capital (whether invested or borrowed) is not a material income-producing factor; but does not include any foreign corporation, nor any corporation 50 per cent or more of whose gross income consists either (1) of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal, or (2) of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive,' and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'The term "paid," for the purposes of the deductions and credits under this title, means "paid or accrued" or "paid or incurred," and the terms "paid or incurred" and "paid or accrued" shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed under section 212.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"'DIVIDENDS.

"'SEC. 201. (a) That the term "dividend" when used in this title (except in paragraph (10) of subdivision (a) of section 234) means (1) any distribution made by a corporation, other than a personal-service corporation, to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property or in stock of the corporation, out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or (2) any such distribution made by a personal-service corporation out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, and prior to January 1, 1918.

"'(b) Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or any year thereafter shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or, in the case of a personal-service corporation, from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits; but any earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed.

"'(c) A dividend paid in stock of the corporation shall be considered income to the amount of the earnings or profits distributed. Amounts distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

"'(d) If any stock dividend (1) is received by a taxpayer between January 1 and November 1, 1918, both dates inclusive, or (2) is during such period bona fide authorized or declared, and entered on the books of the corporation, and is received by a taxpayer after November 1, 1918, and before the expiration of 30 days after the passage of this act, then such dividend shall, in the manner provided in section 206, be taxed to the recipient at the rates prescribed by law for the years in which the corporation accumulated the earnings or profits from which such dividend was paid, but the dividend shall be deemed to have been paid from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits.

"'(e) Any distribution made during the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years; but any distribution made during the remainder of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated between the close of the preceding taxable year and the date of distribution, to the extent of such earnings or profits, and if the books of the corporation do not show the amount of such earnings or profits, the earnings or profits for the accounting period within which the distribution was made shall be deemed to have been accumulated ratably during such period.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"'(b) When property is exchanged for other property, the property received in exchange shall for the purpose of determining gain or loss be treated as the equivalent of cash to the amount of its fair market value, if any; but when in connection with the reorganization, merger, or consolidation of a corporation a person receives in place of stock or securities owned by him new stock or securities of no greater aggregate par or face value, no gain or loss shall be deemed to occur from the exchange, and the new stock or securities received shall be treated as taking the place of the stock, securities, or property exchanged.

"'When in the case of any such reorganization, merger or consolidation the aggregate par or face value of the new stock or securities received is in excess of the aggregate par or face value of the stock or securities exchanged, a like amount in par or face value of the new stock or securities received shall be treated as taking the place of the stock or securities exchanged, and the amount of the excess in par or face value shall be treated as a gain to the extent that the fair market value of the new stock or securities is greater than the cost (or if acquired prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date) of the stock or securities exchanged.'

"And the Senate agree to the same."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to have the RECORD note the fact that the Senator who moved the reading of this long and cumbrous report, and the Senator who also insisted that the reading include the figures, have both of them deserted the Chamber; also that there are now four Republicans and three Democrats, exclusive of the occupant of the chair, present to listen to this wasteful and filibustering procedure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in justice to the Senator who asked that the report be read, I will state that I understand he has gone to lunch. Of course, the Senator from Colorado knows that it is lunch time, and I suppose almost all the Senators are there.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and I know also that the only possible effect of going through this procedure, which can not be stopped, is to consume very valuable time. If this bill is to be beaten—and I personally do not care whether it is or not—I think it should be beaten by direct offensive attack, rather than by undermining.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, and read as follows:

"Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'NET LOSSES.

"'SEC. 204. (a) That as used in this section the term "net loss" refers only to net loss resulting from either (1) the operation of any business regularly carried on by the taxpayer, or (2) the bona fide sale by the taxpayer of plant, buildings, machinery, equipment, or other facilities, constructed, installed, or acquired by the taxpayer on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war; and when so resulting means the excess of the deductions allowed by law (excluding in the case of corporations amounts allowed as a deduction under paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234) over the sum of the gross income plus any interest received free from taxation both under this title and under Title III.

"'(b) If for any taxable year beginning after October 31, 1918, and ending prior to January 1, 1920, it appears upon the production of evidence satisfactory to the commissioner that any taxpayer has sustained a net loss, the amount of such net loss shall under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary be deducted from the net income of the taxpayer for the preceding taxable year; and the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for such preceding taxable year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252. If such net loss is in excess of the net income for such preceding taxable year, the amount of such excess shall under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary be allowed as a deduction in computing the net income for the succeeding taxable year.

"'(c) The benefit of this section shall be allowed to the members of a partnership and the beneficiaries of an estate or trust under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'FISCAL YEAR WITH DIFFERENT RATES.

"'SEC. 205. (a) That if a taxpayer makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, his tax under this title for the first taxable year shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917 and under Title I of the revenue act of 1917, which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates for the calendar year 1918 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period: Provided, That in the case of a personal service corporation the amount to be paid shall be only that specified in clause (1).

"'Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917, and by Title I of the revenue act of 1917, shall be credited towards the payment of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by this act, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of such tax imposed by this act, or, in the case of a personal service corporation, the amount specified in clause (1), the excess shall be credited or refunded in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

"'(b) If a taxpayer makes a return for a fiscal year beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the tax under this title for such fiscal year shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified for the calendar year 1918 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified for the calendar year 1919 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the entire period.

"'(c) If a fiscal year of a partnership begins in 1917 and ends in 1918 or begins in 1918 and ends in 1919, then notwithstanding the provisions of subdivision (b) of section 218, (1) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year begins shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership net income (determined under the law applicable to such year) equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year, and (2) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year ends shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership net income (determined under the law applicable to such calendar year) equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year: Provided, That in the case of a personal service corporation with respect to a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the amount specified in clause (1) shall not be subject to normal tax.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'PARTS OF INCOME SUBJECT TO RATES FOR DIFFERENT YEARS.

"'SEC. 206. That whenever parts of a taxpayer's income are subject to rates for different calendar years, the part subject to the rates for the most recent calendar year shall be placed in the lower brackets of the rate schedule provided in this title, the part subject to the rates for the next preceding calendar year shall be placed in the next higher brackets of the rate schedule applicable to that year, and so on until the entire net income has been accounted for. In determining the income, any deductions, exemptions, or credits of a kind not plainly and properly chargeable against the income taxable at rates for a preceding year shall first be applied against the income subject to rates for the most recent calendar year; but any balance thereof shall be applied against the income subject to the rates of the next preceding year or years until fully allowed.'

"And the Senate agree to the same."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sterling
Beckham	Kellogg	Overman	Sutherland
Colt	Kenyon	Page	Swanson
Culberson	King	Penrose	Thomas
Curtis	La Follette	Poindexter	Thompson
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pollock	Townsend
France	Lewis	Pomerene	Trammell
Gay	McCumber	Sheppard	Vardaman
Gerry	McKellar	Sherman	Wadsworth
Hale	McNary	Simmons	Warren
Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, S. C.	Wolcott
Henderson	New	Smoot
Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Spencer

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] if he will not agree to temporarily lay aside the river and harbor bill that we may consider the conference report on the revenue bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I realize the importance of action upon the conference report. Can the Senator give me any idea as to how long it would possibly take?

Mr. SIMMONS. I had very much hoped that we would get through with it this afternoon, but I can not give any assurance of that. I think we will get through with it to-morrow, if not to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Let us hold a night session.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would be in favor of holding a night session if necessary.

Mr. PENROSE. I would not favor that. I think the conference report on the revenue bill ought to be proceeded with with decorum and formality. It is a very important measure.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think by holding a night session we would dispense with any decorum or any formality.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to be rather a steam-roller proceeding.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not a steam-roller proceeding.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, we have 18 working days, including to-day, in which to transact the business that is now upon the calendar. It will take four or five hours to read this report, and it is read to empty seats. If that is going to be done, I think we can hold a night session and stay here all night, if necessary, in order that we may transact some of the business now on the calendar, or at least make an effort to do it.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest that we take up the question of a night session when the time arrives to take it up.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that the Senator is wise in that regard; but I say if this report is unduly delayed I shall undoubtedly, not to-night, but to-morrow night, if it goes over to-morrow, ask for a night session.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the circumstances I feel disposed to lay the unfinished business aside temporarily with the understanding that it shall not lose its place and that it will be resumed immediately after action on the conference report on the revenue bill. If it is apparent that there is an unnecessary delay in disposing of the conference report, I shall ask the Senate to take up the unfinished business. I think I have that right when I ask to have it temporarily laid aside.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think the chairman of the Finance Committee will impute any intention or effort to delay this conference report to the minority. Every effort has been made to expedite its passage, and we intend now, as far as I know, to expedite its passage, but it certainly ought to be proceeded with with deliberation and not——

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no purpose to proceed with the conference report except in the usual way. I have not imputed any purpose to the other side of the Chamber to delay the matter, and I do not know of any such purpose.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to say that I thought the reading of the numbers of the amendments had considerable significance. Comparing the amendments on which the Senate conferees receded with those on which the House conferees receded, it showed a very striking preponderance of Senate amendments accepted and agreed to, and I think it is fraught with instructions to the Senate to be impressed with that fact, because those amendment are for the relief of the taxpayers and the correction of inequalities, and are the chief merit of the bill, in my opinion.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. The instruction was very edifying to six Senators, three on this side of the Chamber and three upon the other, and as soon as the Senator from Pennsylvania called attention to its educational effect he also retired from the Chamber.

Mr. PENROSE. I labored for a month over those amendments. I did not require that instruction. If Senators do not choose to listen, the opportunity is afforded to the occupants of the press gallery to be impressed with the full significance of the reading, and they can spread broadcast throughout the country the impression they have derived.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, to be resumed immediately on the completion of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will resume the reading of the conference report.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, and read as follows:

"Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following inclosed in parentheses: 'including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 14, line 19, of the bill, after 'business,' insert a comma and the following: 'including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 20, line 3, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out '12 months' and insert '30 days'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"'(12) (a) At the time of filing return for the taxable year 1918 a taxpayer may file a claim in abatement based on the fact that he has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition) resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for such taxable year, or from the actual payment after the close of such taxable year of rebates in pursuance of contracts entered into during such year upon sales made during such year. In such case payment of the amount of the tax covered by such claim shall not be required until the claim is decided, but the taxpayer shall accompany his claim with a bond in double the amount of the tax covered by the claim, with sureties satisfactory to the commissioner, conditioned for the payment of any part of such tax found to be due, with interest. If any part of such claim is disallowed then the remainder of the tax due shall on notice and demand by the collector be paid by the taxpayer with interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month from the time the tax would have been due had no such claim been filed. If it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such substantial loss has been sustained, then in computing the tax imposed by this title the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income. (b) If no such claim is filed, but it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable year 1919 the taxpayer has sustained a substantial loss of the character above described then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for the taxable year 1918 and the tax imposed by this title for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'(e) Personal service corporations shall not be subject to taxation under this title, but the individual stockholders thereof shall be taxed in the same manner as the members of partnerships. All the provisions of this title relating to partnerships and the members thereof shall so far as practicable apply to personal service corporations and the stockholders thereof: Provided, That for the purpose of this subdivision amounts distributed by a personal service corporation during its taxable year shall be accounted for by the distributees; and any portion of the net income remaining undistributed at the close of its taxable year shall be accounted for by the stockholders of such corporation at the close of its taxable year in proportion to their respective shares.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 95:"——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to raise a point of order. The reading by the Secretary seems to interfere very seriously with the conversation going on between the very few who still remain in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to overrule the point of order, but he supposes that that is the fact.

Mr. THOMAS. Possibly I may have mistaken the conversation in the galleries for conversation on the floor. I suggest that the Chair indulge in the usual highly perfunctory but utterly useless admonition to the occupants of the galleries.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No one is giving any attention to the reading of the report, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report.

Mr. LODGE. I think the report ought to be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is raised. The report will be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not suggest the absence of a quorum that anyone will hear, because I am sure no one is going to hear it.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

"Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 23, line 10, of the Senate engrossed amendments after 'administration' insert 'or settlement'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 23, line 14, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out 'or' and insert 'of'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'distributed, such corporation shall not be subject to the tax imposed by section 230, but the stockholders or members thereof shall be subject to taxation under this title in the same manner as provided in subdivision (e) of section 218 in the case of stockholders of a personal-service corporation, except that the tax imposed by Title III shall be deducted from the net income of the corporation before the computation of the proportionate share of each stockholder or member'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 118: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'CREDIT FOR TAXES.

"'SEC. 222. (a) That the tax imposed under Part II of this title shall be credited with:

"'(1) In the case of a citizen of the United States, the amount of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid during the taxable year to any foreign country, upon income derived from sources therein, or to any possession of the United States; and

"'(2) In the case of a resident of the United States, the amount of any such taxes paid during the taxable year to any possession of the United States; and

"'(3) In the case of an alien resident of the United States who is a citizen or subject of a foreign country, the amount of any such taxes paid during the taxable year to such country, upon income derived from sources therein, if such country, in imposing such taxes, allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States residing in such country; and

"'(4) In the case of any such individual who is a member of a partnership or a beneficiary of an estate or trust, his proportionate share of such taxes of the partnership or the estate or trust paid during the taxable year to a foreign country or to any possession of the United States, as the case may be.

"'(b) If accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits by the taxpayer, or if any tax paid is refunded in whole or in part, the taxpayer shall notify the commissioner who shall redetermine the amount of the tax due under Part II of this title for the year or years affected, and the amount of tax due upon such redetermination, if any, shall be paid by the taxpayer upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252. In the case of such a tax accrued but not paid, the commissioner as a condition precedent to the allowance of this credit may require the taxpayer to give a bond with sureties satisfactory to and to be approved by the commissioner in such penal sum as the commissioner may require, conditioned for the payment by the taxpayer of any amount of tax found due upon any such redetermination; and the bond herein prescribed shall contain such further conditions as the commissioner may require.

"'(c) These credits shall be allowed only if the taxpayer furnishes evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the amount of income derived from sources within such foreign country or such possession of the United States, and all other information necessary for the computation of such credits.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 125: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: 'Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than six months'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'(1) for the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236; and

"'(2) For each calendar year thereafter, 10 per cent of such excess amount.

"'(b) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," five-sixths of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) and four-fifths of the tax imposed by paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I of the revenue act of 1917.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert a comma and the following: 'except that:

"'(1) In the case of life insurance companies there shall not be included in gross income such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as is paid back or credited to or treated as an abatement of premium of such policyholder within the taxable year.

"'(2) Mutual marine insurance companies shall include in gross income the gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: '238; or (e) in the case of a foreign corporation, by the authority of any foreign country (except income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes, and taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed), upon the property or business'; and on page 40 of the bill, lines 22 and 23, strike out 'paragraphs (2) and (3)' and insert 'paragraph (2) and in clauses (a), (b), and (c) of paragraph (3)'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 37, line 24, of the bill, after 'business' insert a comma and the following: 'including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 159: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 159, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33, line 9, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out '12 months' and insert '30 days'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 160: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 160, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"'(10) In the case of insurance companies, in addition to the above: (a) The net addition required by law to be made within the taxable year to reserve funds (including in the case of assessment insurance companies the actual deposit of sums with State or Territorial officers pursuant to law as additions to guarantee or reserve funds); and (b) the sums other than dividends paid within the taxable year on policy and annuity contracts;

"'(11) In the case of corporations issuing policies covering life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan continuing for life and not subject to cancellation, in addition to the above, such portion of the net addition (not required by law) made within the taxable year to reserve funds as the commissioner finds to be required for the protection of the holders of such policies only;

"'(12) In the case of mutual marine insurance companies there shall be allowed, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them, and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment and the repayment thereof;

"'(13) In the case of mutual insurance companies (other than mutual life or mutual marine insurance companies) requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses, there shall be allowed, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive (unless otherwise allowed under such paragraphs) the amount of premium deposits returned to their policyholders and the amount of premium deposits retained for the payment of losses, expenses, and reinsurance reserves, and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 161: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 161, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"'(14) (a) At the time of filing return for the taxable year 1918 a taxpayer may file a claim in abatement based on the fact that he has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition) resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for such taxable year, or from the actual payment after the close of such taxable year of rebates in pursuance of contracts entered into during such year upon sales made during such year. In such case payment of the amount of the tax covered by such claim shall not be required until the claim is decided, but the taxpayer shall accompany his claim with a bond in double the amount of the tax covered by the claim, with sureties satisfactory to the commissioner, conditioned for the payment of any part of such tax found to be due, with interest. If any part of such claim is disallowed, then the remainder of the tax due shall on notice and demand by the collector be paid by the taxpayer with interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month from the time the tax would have been due had no such claim been filed. If it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such substantial loss has been sustained, then in computing the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income. (b) If no such claim is filed, but it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable year 1919 the taxpayer has sustained a substantial loss of the character above described, then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for the taxable year 1918, and the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 169: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 169, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'in computing the tax as provided in subdivision (a) of section 205, the tax computed for the entire period under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited against the net income computed for the entire period under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917 and under Title I of the revenue act of 1917, and the tax computed for the entire period under Title III of this act at the rates prescribed for the calendar year 1918 shall be credited against the net income computed for the entire period under this title; and'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 171: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 171, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure '8' inserted by said amendment insert the figures '10'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"'(c) If a domestic corporation makes a return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, only that proportion of this credit shall be allowed which the part of such period within the calendar year 1918 bears to the entire period.'

"And on page 42 of the bill, after line 20, insert the following new paragraph:

"'If accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits by the corporation, or if any tax paid is refunded in whole or in part, the corporation shall at once notify the commissioner who shall redetermine the amount of the taxes due under this title and under Title III for the year or years affected, and the amount of taxes due upon such redetermination, if any, shall be paid by the corporation upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of taxes overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 252. In the case of such a tax accrued but not paid, the commissioner as a condition precedent to the allowance of this credit may require the corporation to give a bond with sureties satisfactory to and to be approved by him in such penal sum as he may require, conditioned for the payment by the taxpayer of any amount of taxes found due upon any such redetermination; and the bond herein prescribed shall contain such further conditions as the commissioner may require.'

"And on page 42 of the bill, line 21, at the beginning of the line, insert the letter 'b' in parentheses.

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'CONSOLIDATED RETURNS.

"'SEC. 240. (a) That corporations which are affiliated within the meaning of this section shall, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, make a consolidated return of net income and invested capital for the purposes of this title and Title III, and the taxes thereunder shall be computed and determined upon the basis of such return: Provided, That there shall be taken out of such consolidated net income and invested capital, the net income and invested capital of any such affiliated corporation organized after August 1, 1914, and not successor to a then existing business, 50 per cent or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive. In such case the corporation so taken out shall be separately assessed on the basis of its own invested capital and net income and the remainder of such affiliated group shall be assessed on the basis of the remaining consolidated invested capital and net income.

"'In any case in which a tax is assessed upon the basis of a consolidated return, the total tax shall be computed in the first instance as a unit and shall then be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them, or, in the absence of any such agreement, then on the basis of the net income properly assignable to each. There shall be allowed in computing the income tax only one specific credit of $2,000 (as provided in sec. 236); in computing the war-profits credit (as provided in sec. 311) only one specific exemption of $3,000; and in computing the excess-profits credit (as provided in sec. 312) only one specific exemption of $3,000.

"'(b) For the purpose of this section two or more domestic corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated (1) if one corporation owns directly or controls through closely affiliated interests or by a nominee or nominees substantially all the stock of the other or others, or (2) if substantially all the stock of two or more corporations is owned or controlled by the same interests.

"'(c) For the purposes of section 238 a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid (but not including taxes accrued) by such foreign corporation during the taxable year to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States upon income derived from sources without the United States, which the amount of any dividends (not deductible under sec. 234) received by such domestic corporation for such foreign corporation during the taxable year bears to the total taxable income of such foreign corporation upon or with respect to which such taxes were paid: Provided, That in no such case shall the amount of the credit for such taxes exceed the amount of such dividends (not deductible under sec. 234) received by such domestic corporation during the taxable year.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 188: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 188, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'SEC. 250. (a) That except as otherwise provided in this section and sections 221 and 237 the tax shall be paid in four installments, each consisting of one-fourth of the total amount of the tax. The first installment shall be paid at the time fixed by law for filing the return, and the second installment shall be paid on the 15th day of the third month, the third installment on the fifteenth day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on the fifteenth day of the ninth month, after the time fixed by law for filing the return. Where an extension of time for filing a return is granted the time for payment of the first installment shall be postponed until the date of the expiration of the period of the extension, but the time for payment of the other intallments shall not be postponed unless the commissioner so provides in granting the extension. In any case in which the time for the payment of any installment is at the request of the taxpayer thus postponed, there shall be added as part of such installment interest thereon at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per month from the time it would have been due if no extension had been granted, until paid. If any installment is not paid when due, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall become due and payable upon notice and demand by the collector.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 214: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 214, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: 'imposing an income tax'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"'Provided further, That all bona fide stockholders of record owning 1 per cent or more of the outstanding stock of any corporation shall, upon making request of the commissioner, be allowed to examine the annual income returns of such corporation and of its subsidiaries. Any stockholder who pursuant to the provisions of this section is allowed to examine the return of any corporation, and who makes known in any manner whatever not provided by law the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any such return, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"'CITIZENS OF UNITED STATES POSSESSIONS.

"'SEC. 260. That any individual who is a citizen of any possession of the United States (but not otherwise a citizen of the United States) and who is not a resident of the United States, shall be subject to taxation under this title only as to income derived from sources within the United States, and in such case the tax shall be computed and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as in the case of other persons who are taxable only as to income derived from such sources.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"'PORTO RICO AND PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

"'SEC. 261. That in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands the income tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the revenue act of 1916 as amended.

"'Returns shall be made and taxes shall be paid under Title I of such act in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, as the case may be, by (1) every individual who is a citizen or resident of Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands or derives income from sources therein, and (2) every corporation created or organized in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands or deriving income from sources therein. An individual who is neither a citizen nor a resident of Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands but derives income from sources therein, shall be taxed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands as a nonresident alien individual, and a corporation created or organized outside of Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands and deriving income from sources therein shall be taxed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands as a foreign corporation. For the purposes of section 216 and of paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234 a tax imposed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands upon the net income of a corporation shall not be deemed to be a tax under this title.

"'The Porto Rican or Philippine Legislature shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal the income tax laws in force in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, respectively.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 231: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 231, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'equal to the sum of the following:

"'FIRST BRACKET.

"'30 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 312) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital;

"'SECOND BRACKET.

"'65 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital;

"'THIRD BRACKET.

"'The sum, if any, by which 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit (determined under section 311) exceeds the amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets.

"'(b) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation (except corporations taxable under subdivision (c) of this section) a tax equal to the sum of the following:

"'FIRST BRACKET.

"'20 per cent of the amount of the next income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 312) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital;

"'SECOND BRACKET.

"'40 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

"'(c) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation which derives in such year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, a tax equal to the sum of the following:

"'(1) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (a) as the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income. In computing such tax the excess-profits credit and the war-profits credit applicable to the taxable year shall be used;

"'(2) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (b) as the part of the net income not attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income.

"'For the purpose of determining the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts, the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to gross income derived from such Government contract or contracts and from other sources, respectively, shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

"'(d) In any case where the full amount of the excess-profits credit is not allowed under the first bracket of subdivision (a) or (b), by reason of the fact that such credit is in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, the part not so allowed shall be deducted from the amount in the second bracket.

"'(c) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," the tax imposed by this title shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title II of the revenue act of 1917.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 232: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 232, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301 shall in no case be more than 30 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000, plus 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000; the tax imposed by subdivision (b) of section 301 shall in no case be more than 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000, plus 40 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000; and the above limitations shall apply to the taxes computed under subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 301, respectively, when used in subdivision (c) of that section. Nothing in this section shall be construed in such manner as to increase the tax imposed by section 301'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 233: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 233, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'SEC. 303. That if part of the net income of a corporation is derived (1) from a trade or business (or a branch of a trade or business) in which the employment of capital is necessary, and (2) a part (constituting not less than 30 per cent of its total net income) is derived from a separate trade or business (or a distinctly separate branch of the trade or business) which if constituting the sole trade or business would bring it within the class of "personal service corporations," then (under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) the tax upon the first part of such net income shall be separately computed (allowing in such computation only the same proportionate part of the credits authorized in sections 311 and 312), and the tax upon the second part shall be the same percentage thereof as the tax so computed upon the first part is of such first part: Provided, That the tax upon such second part shall in no case be less than 20 per cent thereof, unless the tax upon the entire net income, if computed without benefit of this section, would constitute less than 20 per cent of such entire net income, in which event the tax shall be determined upon the entire net income, without reference to this section, as other taxes are determined under this title. The total tax computed under this section shall be subject to the limitations provided in section 302.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 234: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 234, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'Any corporation whose net income for the taxable year is less than $3,000 shall be exempt from taxation under this title'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 236: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 236, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'(c) In the case of any corporation engaged in the mining of gold, the portion of the net income derived from the mining of gold shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this title, and the tax on the remaining portion of the net income shall be the proportion of a tax computed without the benefit of this subdivision which such remaining portion of the net income bears to the entire net income.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 242: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 242, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'(c) If the corporation was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, then, except as provided in subdivision (d), the war-profits credit shall be the sum of:

"'(1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and

"'(2) An amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital, for the prewar period, of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer; but such amount shall in no case be less than 10 per cent of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year. Such average percentage shall be determined by the commissioner on the basis of data contained in returns made under Title II of the revenue act of 1917, and the average known as the median shall be used. If such average percentage has not been determined and published at least 30 days prior to the time when the return of the taxpayer is due, then for purposes of such return 10 per cent shall be used in lieu thereof; but such average percentage when determined shall be used for the purposes of section 250 in determining the correct amount of the tax.

"'(d) The war-profits credit shall be determined in the manner provided in subdivision (b) instead of in the manner provided in subdivision (c), in the case of any corporation which was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, if (1) a majority of its stock at any time during the taxable year is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a corporation which was in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, or if (2) 50 per cent or more of its gross income (as computed under section 233 for income tax purposes) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 243: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 243, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert 'e' in parentheses; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 254: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 254, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus: Provided, That the commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in which tangible property is included in invested capital at a value in excess of the stock or shares issued therefor, containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, the value of the tangible property at the time paid in, the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor, and the amount included under this paragraph as paid-in surplus. The commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 257: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 257, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert '25'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 259: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 259, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert '25'; and on page 62, line 14, of the bill, after the word 'lowest,' insert a colon and the following: 'Provided, That in no case shall the total amount included under paragraphs (4) and (5) exceed in the aggregate 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 263: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 263, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

"'(a) Where the commissioner is unable to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

"'(b) In the case of a foreign corporation;

"'(c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

"'(d) Where upon application by the corporation the commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital, nor (2) in which 50 per cent or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (compared under section 233 of Title II) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

"'SEC. 328. (a) In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year, as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business, bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. In the case of a foreign corporation the tax shall be computed without deducting the specific exemption of $3,000 either for the taxpayer or the representative corporations.

"'In computing the tax under this section.'

"And on page 65 of the bill, after line 16, insert the following:

"'In cases in which the tax is to be computed under this section, if the tax as computed without the benefit of this section is less than 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer, the installments shall in the first instance be computed upon the basis of such tax; but if the tax so computed is 50 per cent or more of the net income, the installments shall be in the first instance be computed upon the basis of a tax equal to 50 per cent of the net income. In any case, the actual ratio when ascertained shall be used in determining the correct amount of the tax. If the correct amount of the tax when determined exceeds 50 per cent of the net income, any excess of the correct installments over the amounts actually paid shall on notice and demand be paid together with interest at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per month on such excess from the time the installment was due.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 270: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 270, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 65 of the bill, lines 22 and 23, strike out 'section' and insert 'subdivision'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"'If such predecessor trade or business was carried on by a partnership or individual the net income for the prewar period shall, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, be ascertained and returned as nearly as may be upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for corporations in Title II, including a reasonable deduction for salary or compensation to each partner or the individual for personal services actually rendered.

"'In the case of the organization as a corporation before July 1, 1919, of any trade or business in which capital is a material income-producing factor and which was previously owned by a partnership or individual, the net income of such trade or business from January 1, 1918, to the date of such reorganization may at the option of the individual or partnership be taxed as the net income of a corporation is taxed under Titles II and III; in which event the net income and invested capital of such trade or business shall be computed as if such corporation had been in existence on and after January 1, 1918, and the undistributed profits or earnings of such trade or business shall not be subject to the surtax imposed in section 211, but amounts distributed on or after January 1, 1918, from the earnings of such trade or business shall be taxed to the recipients as dividends, and all the provisions of Titles II and III relating to corporations shall, so far as practicable, apply to such trade or business: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any trade or business the net income of which for the taxable year 1918 was less than 20 per cent of its invested capital for such year: Provided further, That any taxpayer who takes advantage of this paragraph shall pay the tax imposed by section 1000 of this act and by the first subdivision of section 407 of the revenue act of 1916, as if such taxpayer had been a corporation on and after January 1, 1918, with a capital stock having no par value.

"'If any asset of the trade or business in existence both during the taxable year and any prewar year is included in the invested capital for the taxable year but is not included in the invested capital for such prewar year, or is valued on a different basis in computing the invested capital for the taxable year and such prewar year, respectively, then under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary such readjustments shall be made as are necessary to place the computation of the invested capital for such prewar year on the basis employed in determining the invested capital for the taxable year.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 282: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 282, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert a colon and the following:

"'Provided, That if such previous owner was not a corporation, then the value of any asset so transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition (at the date when acquired by such previous owner) with proper allowance for depreciation, impairment, betterment or development, but no addition to the original cost shall be made for any charge or expenditure deducted as expense or otherwise on or after March 1, 1913, in computing the net income of such previous owner for purposes of taxation.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 285: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 285, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'(1) The same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period. Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax imposed by this title, the excess shall be credited or refunded to the corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

"'(b) If a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the tax for such fiscal year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under subdivision (b) or (c) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the entire period.

"'(c) If a partnership or a personal service corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, it shall pay the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period.

"'Any tax paid by a partnership or personal service corporation for any period beginning on or after January 1, 1918, shall be immediately refunded to the partnership or corporation as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.'

"And on page 67, line 5 of the bill, after 'corporation' insert the following inclosed in parentheses: 'other than a personal service corporation'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 289: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 289, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'TITLE IV.—ESTATE TAX.

"'SEC. 400. That when used in this title—

"'The term "executor" means the executor or administrator of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator, any person who takes possession of any property of the decedent; and

"'The term "collector" means the collector of internal revenue of the district in which was the domicile of the decedent at the time of his death, or, if there was no such domicile in the United States, then the collector of the district in which is situated the part of the gross estate of the decedent in the United States, or if such part of the gross estate is situated in more than one district, then the collector of internal revenue of such district as may be designated by the commissioner.

"'SEC. 401. That (in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1916, as amended, and in lieu of the tax imposed by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917) a tax equal to the sum of the following percentages of the value of the net estate (determined as provided in section 403) is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

"'1 per cent of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000;

"'2 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

"'3 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $250,000;

"'4 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

"'6 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $750,000;

"'8 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $750,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;

"'10 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000;

"'12 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

"'14 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

"'16 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

"'18 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000;

"'20 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $5,000,000 and does not exceed $8,000,000;

"'22 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000; and

"'25 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,000,000.

"'The taxes imposed by this title or by Title II of the revenue act of 1916 (as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917) or by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917, shall not apply to the transfer of the net estate of any decedent who has died or may die while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war or from injuries received or disease contracted while in such service, and any such tax collected upon such transfer shall be refunded to the executor.

"'SEC. 402. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

"'(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate;

"'(b) To the extent of any interest therein of the surviving spouse, existing at the time of the decedent's death as dower, courtesy, or by virtue of a statute creating an estate in lieu of dower or courtesy;

"'(c) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has at any time created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (whether such transfer or trust is made or created before or after the passage of this act), except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title;

"'(d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent;

"'(e) To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth; and

"'(f) To the extent of the amount receivable by the executor as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life; and to the extent of the excess over $40,000 of the amount receivable by all other beneficiaries as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

"'SEC. 403. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

"'(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

"'(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and such amounts reasonably required and actually expended for the support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered, but not including any income taxes upon income received after the death of the decedent, or any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes;

"'(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property, real, personal, or mixed, which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property is included in the decedent's gross estate;

"'(3) The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts, to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes, or to or for the use of any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since December 31, 1917; and

"'(4) An exemption of $50,000;

"'(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States—

"'(1) That proportion of the deductions specified in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated, but in no case shall the amount so deducted exceed 10 per cent of the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States;

"'(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property, real, personal, or mixed, which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property is included in that part of the decedent's gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States; and

"'(3) The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts, to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes, or to or for the use of any domestic corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes within the United States. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since December 31, 1917; and

"'No deduction shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 404 the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident not situated in the United States.

"'For the purpose of this title stock in a domestic corporation owned and held by a nonresident decedent, and the amount receivable as insurance upon the life of a nonresident decedent where the insurer is a domestic corporation, shall be deemed property within the United States, and any property of which the decedent has made a transfer or with respect to which he has created a trust, within the meaning of subdivision (c) of section 402, shall be deemed to be situated in the United States, if so situated either at the time of the transfer or the creation of the trust, or at the time of the decedent's death.

"'In the case of any estate in respect to which the tax under existing law has been paid, if necessary to allow the benefit of the deduction under paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) or (b) the tax shall be redetermined and any excess of tax paid shall be refunded to the executor.

"'SEC. 404. That the executor, within 60 days after qualifying as such, or after coming into possession of any property of the decedent, whichever event first occurs, shall give written notice thereof to the collector. The executor shall also, at such times and in such manner as may be required by regulations made pursuant to law, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth (a) the value of the gross estate of the decedent at the time of his death, or, in case of a nonresident, of that part of his gross estate situated in the United States; (b) the deductions allowed under section 403; (c) the value of the net estate of the decedent as defined in section 403; and (d) the tax paid or payable thereon; or such part of such information as may at the time be ascertainable and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax.

"'Return shall be made in all cases where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $50,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The commissioner shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

"'SEC. 405. That if no administration is granted upon the estate of a decedent, or if no return is filed as provided in section 404, or if a return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector shall make a return and the commissioner shall assess the tax thereon.

"'SEC. 406. That the tax shall be due one year after the decedent's death; but in any case where the commissioner finds that payment of the tax within one year after the decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate, he may grant an extension of time for the payment of the tax for a period not to exceed three years from the due date. If the tax is not paid within one year and 180 days after the decedent's death, interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the expiration of one year after the decedent's death shall be added as part of the tax.

"'SEC. 407. That the executor shall pay the tax to the collector or deputy collector. If the amount of the tax can not be determined, the payment of a sum of money sufficient, in the opinion of the collector, to discharge the tax shall be deemed payment in full of the tax, except as in this section otherwise provided. If the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax as finally determined, the commissioner shall refund such excess to the executor. If the amount of the tax as finally determined exceeds the amount so paid, the collector shall notify the executor of the amount of such excess and demand payment thereof. If such excess part of the tax is not paid within 30 days after such notification, interest shall be added thereto at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the expiration of such 30 days' period until paid, and the amount of such excess shall be a lien upon the entire gross estate, except such part thereof as may have been sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

"'The collector shall grant to the person paying the tax duplicate receipts, either of which shall be sufficient evidence of such payment, and shall entitle the executor to be credited and allowed the amount thereof by any court having jurisdiction to audit or settle his accounts.

"'SEC. 408. That if the tax herein imposed is not paid within 180 days after it is due, the collector shall, unless there is reasonable cause for further delay, proceed to collect the tax under the provisions of general law, or commence appropriate proceedings in any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to be sold under the judgment or decree of the court. From the proceeds of such sale the amount of the tax, together with the costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by the court, shall be first paid, and the balance shall be deposited according to the order of the court, to be paid under its direction to the person entitled thereto.

"'If the tax or any part thereof is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to or in the possession of, any person other than the executor in his capacity as such, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement out of any part of the estate still undisturbed or by a just and equitable contribution by the persons whose interest in the estate of the decedent would have been reduced if the tax had been paid before the distribution of the estate or whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate, it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution. If any part of the gross estate consists of proceeds of policies of insurance upon the life of the decedent receivable by a beneficiary other than the executor, the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiary such portion of the total tax paid as the proceeds, in excess of $40,000, of such policies bear to the net estate. If there is more than one such beneficiary the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiaries in the same ratio.

"'SEC. 409. That unless the tax is sooner paid in full, it shall be a lien for 10 years upon the gross estate of the decedent, except that such part of the gross estate as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration, allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be divested of such lien. If the commissioner is satisfied that the tax liability of an estate has been fully discharged or provided for, he may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, issue his certificate releasing any or all property of such estate from the lien herein imposed.

"'If (a) the decedent makes a transfer of, or creates a trust with respect to, any property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth) or (b) if insurance passes under a contract executed by the decedent in favor of a specific beneficiary, and if in either case the tax in respect thereto is not paid when due, then the transferee, trustee, or beneficiary shall be personally liable for such tax, and such property, to the extent of the decedent's interest therein at the time of such transfer, or to the extent of such beneficiary's interest under such contract of insurance, shall be subject to a like lien equal to the amount of such tax. Any part of such property sold by such transferee or trustee to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth shall be divested of the lien and a like lien shall then attach to all the property of such transferee or trustee, except any part sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

"'SEC. 410. That whoever knowingly makes any false statement in any notice or return required to be filed under this title shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

"'Whoever fails to comply with any duty imposed upon him by section 404, or, having in his possession or control any record, file, or paper, containing or supposed to contain any information concerning the estate of the decedent, or, having in his possession or control any property comprised in the gross estate of the decedent, fails to exhibit the same upon request to the commissioner or any collector or law officer of the United States, or his duly authorized deputy or agent, who desires to examine the same in the performance of his duties under this title, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered, with costs of suit, in a civil action in the name of the United States.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 292: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 292, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a colon and the following:

"'Provided, That where such water transportation lines are in competition between American ports with foreign water transportation lines from adjacent foreign ports, the tax imposed under this subdivision on amounts paid for water transportation between American ports shall not exceed the amount of the transportation tax to which such foreign water transporation lines are subjected by their government corresponding to this tax.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 297: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 297, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and at the end thereof insert the following new paragraph:

"'The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.'

"And on page 85, line 19 of the bill, strike out 'November 1, 1918,' and insert 'April 1, 1919'; and on page 86, line 16 of the bill, insert after 'policy' a colon and the following:

"'And provided further, That on all policies covering life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy, by which a life is insured not in excess of $500, issued on the industrial or weekly or monthly payment plan of insurance, the tax shall be 40 per cent of the amount of the first weekly premium or 20 per cent of the amount of the first monthly premium, as the case may be.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 325: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 325, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 92, line 9, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out 'of fermentation'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"'(d) (1) There is hereby created a board to be known as the "Advisory Tax Board," hereinafter called the board, and to be composed of not to exceed six members to be appointed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The board shall cease to exist at the expiration of two years after the passage of this act, or at such earlier time as the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may designate.'

"'Vacancies in the membership of the board shall be filled in the same manner as an original appointment. Any member shall be subject to removal by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall designate the chairman of the board. Each member shall receive an annual salary of $9,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary expenses when absent from the District of Columbia on official business.

"'(2) The commissioner may, and on the request of any taxpayer directly interested shall, submit to the board any question relating to the interpretation or administration of the income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax laws, and the board shall report its findings and recommendations to the commissioner.

"'(3) The board shall have its office in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia. The expenses and salaries of members of the board shall be audited, allowed, and paid out of appropriations for collecting internal revenue, in the same manner as expenses and salaries of employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue are audited, allowed, and paid.

"'(4) The board shall have the power to summon witnesses, take testimony, administer oaths, and to require any person to produce books, papers, documents, or other data relating to any matter under investigation by the board. Any member of the board may sign subpœnas and members and employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue designated to assist the board, when authorized by the board, may administer oaths, examine witnesses, take testimony and receive evidence.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 561: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 561, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 128, line 17, and again on page 129, line 7, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out the word 'Titles' and insert the word 'Title'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 569: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 569, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'(c) That the pragraph of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, reading as follows: "Refunding taxes illegally collected (internal revenue): To refund and pay back duties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws," is repealed from and after June 30, 1920; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit for the fiscal year 1921, and annually thereafter, an estimate of appropriations to refund and pay back duties or taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, and to pay judgments, including interest and costs, rendered for taxes or penalties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 578: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 578, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 132, line 11, of the Senate engrossed amendments, after the word 'States,' insert the following: 'at the instance of the United States'; and the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Jones, Wash.	New	Smoot
Calder	Kellogg	Nugent	Spencer

Harding	McKellar	Shafroth
Henderson	McNary	Sheppard
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Va.	Simmons

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] on official business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the report is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was on my feet with a view to addressing the Senate. I do not think the conference report can be agreed to in that way. I think it is necessary that we should have consideration of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair merely desired to expedite business. The Chair did not know that the Senator from North Carolina desired to address the Senate. Without objection, the vote whereby the report was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the Senator from North Carolina will be recognized.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has already been done. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senate added over 600 amendments to the revenue bill as it passed the other House. Of those amendments the Senate conferees receded from only 68. The House receded from its disagreement to 417 of the Senate amendments without change and from its disagreement to 117 of the Senate amendments with amendments. In order to bring the two Houses together upon these 602 amendments, it is obvious that a vast amount of work was required. That the conferees were able to accomplish this result in a little over two weeks show that their work was constant and diligent; but even with the greatest diligence, Mr. President, it would have been impossible to accomplish this result within so short a time had not every member of the conference been alive to the fact that the exigencies of the situation required the utmost speed.

I desire to say to the Senators who do me the honor to hear the brief statement I am going to make, that I am advised by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury that Government obligations amounting to more than $800,000,000 will mature and will have to be paid by the 15th day of March next, and that the money which it is expected to realize from the first installment under this bill has been pledged for the payment of those maturing obligations.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue further advises me that, relying upon the assurances that were given to him by the conferees that this bill could be passed at this session, and passed within a short time, he has abandoned all purpose of arranging to collect taxes except under this bill, and that if for any reason this bill should fail or be delayed so long as to make it impossible for him to collect the taxes this year under it the Treasury Department and the Government would be placed in a most embarrassing position.

Mr. President, the statement I shall make will be of a general character. I do not purpose to discuss the details of the conference committee action and report. I do desire, however, to state very briefly the general purport and effect of the action of the conferees with reference to the more important matters adjusted by them.

Early in the year 1918 the Secretary of the Treasury recommended to Congress the enactment of a new revenue law, framed to raise $8,000,000,000 by taxation, to help meet the expenditures of the fiscal year 1918, estimated at that time at $24,000,000,000. In response to this request the Ways and Means Committee of the House prepared, and the House passed, the pending bill, providing for an $8,000,000,000 tax levy. When the armistice came on November 11, 1918, the bill was still before the Finance Committee of the Senate, to which it had been referred.

There was no purpose upon the part of that committee up to that time to reduce the amount of the levy below the House estimate of $8,000,000,000. Within a few days, however, after the signing of the armistice the Secretary of the Treasury, in a communication to myself as chairman of the Finance Committee, advised that the estimated expenditures would, because of the practical termination of the war, be reduced to $18,000,000,000, and at the same time he recommended a reduction of the taxes to be imposed for the fiscal year 1918–19 from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 and for the fiscal year 1920 from $6,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. Senators will recall that the President, in his message to Congress delivered a short time after the armistice, joined the Secretary of the Treasury in these recommendations.

While many of the amendments made by the Senate were made with a view of improving the general structure of the bill, the major part of them were made with a view to accomplishing the reduction recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the President. To accomplish this $2,000,000,000 reduction for 1919 the Senate made sweeping reductions in the House rates for that year and still greater reductions for the fiscal year 1920 and subsequent years. It revised those rates from the beginning to the end of the bill, cutting them materially in most cases.

But the changes made by the Senate were not confined to the lowering of rates; the Senate adopted many amendments that were of an ameliorative character, providing relief in cases of hardship and inequality and giving additional deductions and credits, as well as other remedial provisions, made expedient because of changed economic and industrial conditions resulting from the sudden termination of the war. No inconsiderable portion, Mr. President, of the reductions made by the Senate in the amount of revenue expected from the income and excess or war profits will be accomplished through these so-called relief amendments.

The Senate did not change the individual normal income-tax rate for the taxable year 1918. It did, however, change the surtax rates, reducing those rates as to small and moderate incomes and increasing them somewhat as to larger incomes, especially those in excess of $200,000. The result of these changes is a reduction in estimated revenue receipts from this source of about $50,000,000. The House conferees agreed to these changes. The Senate reduced the individual normal income-tax rate for the taxable year 1919 and subsequent years from 6 and 12 per cent to 4 and 8 per cent, and the House agreed to these changes. These were the only changes made by the Senate in the individual income-tax rates as provided in the House bill, and to all of those changes the House conferees agreed.

The House bill imposed a flat rate of 12 per cent upon the income of corporations, and provided, in effect, for an additional 6 per cent against such part of corporate incomes as were not distributed. The Senate eliminated this 6 per cent differential tax and made the flat corporation income tax for the taxable year 1918 12 per cent. To that change the House, through its conferees, very reluctantly agreed.

The only other change made by the Senate in the House corporation income-tax rates was that with reference to the rates for the taxable year 1919, fiscal year 1920. The Senate had fixed those rates at 8 per cent. The House conferees insisted that this was too low; they insisted that because of the fact that they had yielded to the Senate with reference to the 6 per cent differential tax, thereby permitting corporations to retain a part of their earnings without being subjected to the surtax to which individuals were liable, those rates ought to be raised at least for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. In just a minute. The Senate consented to the increase in its rates for 1920 from 8 to 10 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator, under the rules of the Senate or the House, how it was possible to increase that rate from 8 to 10 per cent. The House had passed no legislation whatever imposing a tax for the taxable year 1919. The Senate passed a provision imposing a normal tax of 8 per cent, and the conferees bring in a tax of 10 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think there is any difficulty concerning the power of the conferees to do that. The House bill imposed a tax of 12 per cent for the year 1918 and 12 per cent for every taxable year thereafter; and the conferees simply reduced the 12 per cent, that being the highest rate, to 10 per cent for one of those subsequent years, and made that rate applicable to all other subsequent years. That is to say, under the House bill, if it had not been amended by the Senate, the rate for the fiscal year 1920 and every subsequent year would have been 12 per cent, and under the rule we could change the rate so as not to exceed that limit. At least, I will say to the Senator, that was the view of the conferees.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that perhaps that could be construed in that way, although the bill itself imposed the tax on the year 1918—that is, the taxable year 1918, the fiscal year 1919—and I do not think there is anything in the bill itself which says that the tax shall be at that rate hereafter.

Mr. SIMMONS. The tax fixed in the House bill is 12 per cent for the taxable year 1918 and each year thereafter. That is the language, I think; but if it were not the language my conclusion would still be correct. The rate of 12 per cent would continue until the law was repealed or amended.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is quite right in that last statement. I was wondering myself upon what theory they did change the rate fixed by the Senate, as the Senate acted specifically on that year, virtually repealing the law as it stood.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not repealing it; amending it.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, it is the same thing, because the tax law for 1918 is virtually repealed by the legislation that we passed. In other words, the law as it was passed by the Senate provided that the taxes imposed under the bill for 1918 should apply only to that year, and then the Senate passed legislation for the year 1919. The House not having acted upon it, I wondered how it was that they could be increased. I simply brought up the subject at this time in order to get the Senator's ideas as to why it was done.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have stated to the Senate and to the Senator the views of the conferees with respect to this matter, and in those views I heartily concur. I believe that the Senator upon further reflection will also agree that that change was within the province of the committee.

As I have stated, the Senate adopted a series of amendments applicable to incomes and profit taxes commonly designated as relief amendments which will result in a reduction of the taxes in the cases to which these amendments are applicable, and will materially diminish the revenue from these sources. It is estimated that the reduction in revenue resulting from these amendments will amount to approximately half a billion dollars.

The more important of these amendments are those relating to amortization and depletion, first, with reference to industrial plants and vessels; second, with reference to oil and gas wells, mineral deposits, and timber where profits are realized through depletion of the capital; and, third, those amendments relating to shrinkage in inventories and net losses.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I have in mind the case of a shipyard on the west coast. The owner of this yard had several shipyards on the east coast. At the request of the Government, through the Shipping Board or the Navy Department, he very largely extended his shipping plant on the west coast, investing practically all the profits from his eastern yards in his western yard so as to extend his plant to do Government work. Under circumstances of that kind can he ask the Government to consider his profit invested in his plants, which to-day are not worth much more than 25 per cent of what they cost him, because they cost him war prices, and in the cancellation of the contract by the Shipping Board his yard is not worth what it was before?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can answer the Senator generally by saying that if by reason of the investment of his profits in an extension of his yards he has constructed a plant which was necessary in time of war to meet the demands which were made upon him at that time for production, but which after the termination of the war has depreciated in value because not needed; in that case, under the amortization provision he will be allowed to amortize to the full extent of the depreciation in value. Of course, if there is salvage he would be allowed to amortize only down to the salvage value.

Mr. CALDER. Less the salvage?

Mr. SIMMONS. Less the salvage; but the amortization allowance is based upon the total cost value of the property amortized, and that is made in these amendments specifically applicable to plant and machinery constructed or installed for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. CALDER. I am glad to have the Senator's expression of opinion on the subject, because I was not sure that the shipbuilding plants were included in the terms of the bill, and I wanted to be certain that that was the Senator's view.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; the bill is explicit with reference to that character of property. On account of the amortization provision contained in the bill, contractors for war material are going to find very great relief, because I realize, and the Senate must realize, that in very many instances to meet the emergency of war contractors were required not only to construct new plants but to install machinery that will be of very little value to them after the war has ceased.

I wish to call the Senator's attention, further, and I wish to call the attention of the country, to the fact that there are some war contractors who have been attacking the bill who have been importuning Senators to use their influence to defeat the bill, so that the tax against them might be levied under the present law, which imposes lower rates of taxes. They would find, if they should accomplish their purpose and defeat this bill, that when the taxes were levied under the present law they would not get the benefit of this amortization privilege, and that might mean in many instances higher taxes under the present law than under the proposed new law.

Mr. CALDER. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is nothing in the present law that gives any such deduction or allowance.

Mr. CALDER. I know there is not; but I understand there is a ruling or decision of the Treasury Department that has helped out the situation somewhat. I am quite sure that but for that ruling a great many concerns would have gone bankrupt.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think there was a ruling that helped them to some extent, but the ruling did not and could not help them to the extent this bill does, for this bill helps them to the extent of the full original cost, if the loss is total.

Mr. CALDER. I am sure that is very fair. Does the Senator think the Treasury Department is justified under the previous law in amortizing the loss of a shipbuilding plant where a profit on the investment has been made?

Mr. SIMMONS. I doubt it very seriously. I think it would be quite a departure from the terms of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. In further answer, I will say to the Senator that in most cases there was an absolute contract between the Government and the owners of the plant. Of course, the Government has to give weight to that.

Mr. CALDER. I have in mind several cases where men were led to believe there would perhaps be a certain figure of profit. The Government has come in subsequently and rather taken the ground that they could not under the law, despite the fact that they had fitted out these shipyards, allow any such procedure. That I very much regret.

Mr. SIMMONS. There can be no doubt that under the bill their power will be ample and plenary, so far as plant and facilities acquired on or after April 6, 1917, are concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. It is very sweeping in its provisions.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is very sweeping, as the Senator from Utah very justly observes.

There is another amendment of this character which, of course, will very considerably reduce the amount of revenue to be collected under the bill, but which, I think, under the conditions which now exist, industrial and economic, will be of the greatest possible relief to the taxpayer and is but a fair measure of justice. I refer to the amendment or amendments relating to shrinkage in inventories and net losses. These provisions were retained by the conferees with some amendments. In fact, Mr. President, the amendment which the conferees made to the inventory provision I regard as most vital. It will very greatly strengthen it, in my opinion, and I refer to it this afternoon, because I think the business people of the country who have not read the bill, but have relied upon the newspapers for their information with reference to this and other important provisions, have not yet come to realize the great relief it will afford under the present conditions. Market values are falling and this decline will undoubtedly proceed at a constantly accelerating rate. Under such circumstances the allowance for falling inventories, as amended by the conferees, will afford the greatest relief from the heavy taxes which the bill imposes.

In general terms, where during the year 1919, by reason of a decline in values, the inventories upon which the incomes for the year 1918 were based have shrunk so as to make it apparent that the tax which would be paid in 1919, based upon these high inventories, would be based upon values that no longer exist, values that have disappeared, which will never be realized, the bill permits a reduction to the extent of the decline in the inventory values and provides that the tax for the preceding year shall be redetermined and paid upon the new basis of value, instead of upon the original inventory basis.

I do not think it is possible to estimate with any degree of accuracy what will be the loss in revenue as the result of this amendment. It is a broad, sweeping amendment, but it does nothing more than common justice to the taxpayers. It says to the taxpayer that where your profits turn out to be, by reason of shrinkage in inventory values mere paper profits, you shall be allowed to pay your tax upon the basis of the actual inventory value at the time you make your return for 1918, and if the losses have not been discovered at the time you make those returns and they are discovered any time during the year 1919 then the commissioner may make the allowance and the taxpayer may get the benefit of the shrinkage.

Let me illustrate with the case of the cotton manufacturers. They have laid in great stocks of raw cotton, the larger part of which was purchased at 30 cents or more than 30 cents a pound. The inventories for the year 1918 would have to be based upon those values. That cotton is to-day worth probably not much over two-thirds of the amount for which it was purchased. If they are required to pay their taxes without any rebate upon the basis of the cost of this raw material still in hand, it is easy to see that they would have to pay tax upon a value charged against them, but which will not, as a matter of fact, ever be realized.

I wish to call attention to this fact, Mr. President, and I do it because, while the bill was in conference, I received many telegrams from the people of my State protesting in one way or another against this tax, and asking that the rates be reduced so as to yield $4,000,000,000 rather than $6,000,000,000. Of course, they were told that could not be done; that the conference committee had no power to take such action even if it had the desire. They then said defeat the bill so that we may be taxed under the present law. Of course, everybody would rather be taxed upon the basis of $4,000,000,000 than upon the basis of $6,000,000,000.

I wish, in connection with these protests, to emphasize the fact that if this bill should fail the manufacturers of this country, producers, and tradesmen, who have purchased great stocks of material at high prices, would pay large taxes, based upon inflated inventory values; and if the taxes should be levied under the present law there would be no such relief as this particular amendment affords. The amendment allows a rebate to the full amount of the shrinkage. I think in very many cases they will find that the relief which will come to them through the amortization provision of the bill, through the obsolescence provision of the bill, through the net-losses provision of the bill, and through the inventory provisions of the bill will more than offset the difference between the new rate and the rate at which they would pay taxes under the present law.

Coming now to the excess-profits and war-profits taxes, I may say in general that the House accepted the rates adopted by the Senate with but few modifications. The House conferees accepted the excess-profits rates adopted by the Senate for the taxable year 1918, with an amendment increasing the second bracket from 60 per cent to 65 per cent, and they accepted the Senate rates for 1919 and thereafter with no material change except that relating to income derived from war contracts, to which I shall refer hereafter.

It will be seen from this statement that the House accepted nearly all of the Senate amendments with respect to individual income taxes, corporate income taxes, and profits taxes, so far as rates of taxation are involved. Ordinarily the Senate could not have expected the House to have acquiesced in practically all of these amendments, with a few minor modifications; but the House conferees recognized the fact that after the bill left the House the situation changed, and that most of these reductions were made by the Senate to accomplish the recommended reduction from eight to six billion dollars in the amount of revenue to be raised under the bill.

There was one important change made by the conferees in the profits tax for the taxable year 1919 and subsequent years. While agreeing to the Senate rate of 20 and 40 per cent, the conferees of the House insisted upon an amendment in which the conferees of the Senate very heartily concurred. In fact, the Finance Committee had discussed, before the bill was reported to the Senate, the wisdom of making an amendment of that character. I had announced myself in favor of it, and declared a purpose to introduce it upon the floor of the Senate, but inadvertently I failed to do it. The conferees of the House insisted upon, and the Senate conferees heartily concurred in, an amendment to the 1919 rate providing that where the net income of any corporation derived from any contract or contracts with the Government exceeded $10,000, that part of its income accruing from such contracts should be taxed under the 1918 rates.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do I understand that in 1920 the war-profits tax against contracts with the Government is 80 per cent, and not against other business operations?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know whether the Senator understood me or not. I state that a war-profits tax was imposed upon corporation derived from Government contracts. It is not an income tax.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I understand that. There is a war-profits tax this year of 80 per cent, for 1918?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now, I am speaking of next year, 1919.

Mr. SMOOT. The taxable year.

Mr. KELLOGG. The taxable year of 1919. Is the war-profits tax of 80 per cent against war contracts alone?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me see if I understand that. Here is a shipbuilding concern, or any concern, manufacturing for the Government. Although it may make not more profit——

Mr. SIMMONS. Did I say "war contracts"? I mean by that term Government contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918.

Mr. KELLOGG. Well, suppose a shipbuilding concern, or any other manufacturing concern, was willing to work for the Government at the same rate, or even at a less rate, of profit than it would work for a private concern. The concern which is patriotic enough to do Government work is penalized next year with an 80 per cent tax, while other manufacturing concerns, right beside it, pay no tax at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is mistaken about others right beside it paying no tax. The others would pay the excess-profits tax, which is 20 and 40 per cent; and the corporation to which the Senator refers, if it were making profits outside of those made on its contracts with the Government, would only pay at those rates, 20 and 40 per cent. The Senator knows what we were driving at. The President, in his message to Congress, stated that, while he favored the reduction of the taxes for 1920 to $4,000,000,000 and favored a reduction in the profit rates, a high war tax against war profits ought to be continued.

Mr. KELLOGG. Quite so.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his recommendation asking that the war-profits tax be abolished after 1918, suggested that there ought to be provision by which the 80 per cent rate would be continued for profits realized after 1918 from Government contracts made during the war; and the purpose which the conference committee had in view was to see to it that a Government contract heretofore made, and based upon the prices that had heretofore obtained, should pay the same tax upon its war profits when those war profits were made in 1919 as it is required under the law to pay when those profits were made in 1918.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am quite aware of that, and I would not object to everyone who makes a war profit from contracts with private individuals or with the Government being required in 1919 to pay a good, heavy rate of tax; but the war-profits tax this year—1918—makes no discrimination between those working for the Government and those working for private individuals; and while I have no doubt some contractors may have made very large profits from the Government, I think you will find that those manufacturers and contractors who were not doing business with the Government made more money than those who were doing business with the Government.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator pardon me for calling his attention to the fact that the contracts referred to in this amendment are only such contracts with the Government as were made between April 6, 1917, the day when we went into the war, and November 11, 1918, when we went out of the war. The presumption is that these contracts were based upon the high costs and the high rate of profits that obtained during the war.

Mr. KELLOGG. Quite so.

Mr. SIMMONS. They go over; they are executed in the next year. There is no change in the contract. The basis is the same. The contractor may be able to make a larger profit in 1919 because of falling markets, falling cost of labor, falling cost of material than he made in 1918; and to let that contract escape the higher tax that the bill imposed upon all other contracts made upon the same basis, it seems to me, would be quite a discrimination.

Mr. KELLOGG. I agree with the Senator; but why should not a contract made by a shipbuilding or a manufacturing company with a private concern, made in the same time, to run the same length of time, making the same big profits, be taxed in the same way? That is why I can not understand the provision.

For instance, let me explain. One contract is made with the Government for building ships, and it runs from July, 1918, to July, 1919. If it is made with the Government, the manufacturer must pay 80 per cent this year of 1919. If it is made with a private concern, although the profit is greater, and it is a war contract, he pays no taxes at all under the war-profits tax in 1919. That is the point.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I see the point the Senator makes.

Mr. KELLOGG. During the war we made no discrimination between those manufacturing for the Government and those manufacturing for private concerns, and I do not see why we should make any discrimination during 1919.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think everybody in this country recognizes the fact that even while the war was going on there was quite a difference between the profits that were derived from Government contracts and those derived from private contracts. They were upon a different basis while the war was in progress. It is a matter of common knowledge that in the case of Government contracts, because of the fact that the situation required speed, because time was the essence of the thing, and because every consideration of expense had to be sacrificed to acceleration in delivery, the contractors with the Government demanded a profit which they did not get and could not have obtained from private sources. That was spoken of during the war as one of the chief elements that entered into and formed the basis of a large part of the consideration which the Government agreed to pay on these contracts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that perhaps that was so in some cases; but I know of many, many cases where the private contractor was selling at a higher rate than that at which the Government was purchasing the same class of goods, and in some cases, I will say to the Senator, I know of concerns that were selling goods to the Government and also making the same goods for private parties, and the price at which they were sold to the private purchaser was higher than the price at which they were sold to the Government.

Mr. SIMMONS. Doubtless some cases of that kind may be found; but the Senator knows that when they were constructing these great cantonments, when it was of the utmost importance that they should be ready to receive in the quickest possible time the soldiers who were coming from every part of the country, advertisements went out offering the highest prices for labor and for material in order that speed might be accomplished. The Senator knows that that was so with reference to shipbuilding. He knows that that was so with reference to the manufacture of munitions of war. If the Government could not get them quickly, they would be of no use to the Government. Speed was of the very essence of the thing, and prices calculated to obtain labor and material in the quickest possible way were demanded by the contractors and paid by the Government, and this was true of all of these contracts, of those that were not executed as well as those that were executed before the armistice.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with all that the Senator has said. I know that the prices advanced beyond all reason; but what I can not understand, Mr. President, is this: While those prices to the Government were advancing, so they were advancing to the individual contractor. He had to pay those prices, and in some instances even more than the Government paid, and the persons that sold those goods to the private contractor or to the Government made those outrageous profits; and it seems to me that we ought to catch those profits, whether they were made by an individual contractor or whether they were made by a contractor with the Government. That is the only thing that I can not understand about this proposed amendment. I will say to the Senator that it is a new subject matter. It was never discussed, and it has been put in here since the bill passed the Senate. It is a new thing entirely, and when I read it I wondered why it was in here.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is an amendment to the Senate amendment. The conferees accepted the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. But I mean they changed the Senate amendment by amending it, and put in provisions that were not passed upon by the Senate at all. It is entirely new.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know it is new in the Senate, but it is permissible under the rules.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to get the idea that I am going to make a point of order on those things. I simply wished to bring it out here in the discussion. If I wanted to be captious over the matter, of course I could simply say that there is new matter put in here contrary to the rules of the Senate; but I am not going to do it, and I do not want any other Senator to do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am very glad to hear the Senator say so. I do not think his objection would be tenable, but I am very glad to know that the Senator does not propose to be hypercritical.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be tenable. Of course, that is a difference of opinion; but, be that as it may, if I knew it would be sustained I would never raise it, I want to say to the Senator, either on this item or on any other item that is in the bill. That is not the question. The only thing that I desire to emphasize is that I believe, just as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] believes, that wherever these unconscionable profits were made, whether by a contractor doing private work or by a contractor doing Government work, there is no difference in principle, because the people ultimately have to pay them.

That is the only position that I take in this matter. I am not going to ask the Senator to strike it out. I simply think it is an unfair proposition, and I do not think it can be defended, if you are intending to do exact justice between all citizens of our country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say with respect to that. I am sorry that my colleague upon the committee, the Senator from Utah, disagrees with me.

Mr. President, in addition to the relief amendments placed in the income-tax title, but affecting profits taxes as well as income taxes, amendments relating to amortization and obsolescence, shrinkage in inventories, and so forth, the Senate added a general relief clause investing more or less discretion in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the advisory tax board for relief in cases clearly establishing injustice, inequality, or discrimination. The House conferees accepted these provisions of the Senate.

The relief provisions as contained in the Senate amendments were specific in their terms. They specified the special conditions and circumstances under which the commissioner might give relief. The conferees on the part of the House, while not specially objecting to that method of relief, insisted that it was very much better to give authority in more comprehensive terms and without such detail of specification and particularization. After careful discussion and consideration it was agreed to rewrite the Senate relief provision and give the necessary power to the commissioner in general terms. The general opinion of the conferees and of the department, and I concur in that opinion, is that the amendment as redrafted broadens rather than restrains the powers of the commissioner in the matter of relief against injustice, inequality, and discrimination.

Such a provision, Mr. President, is of the greatest importance in a bill to take effect under conditions such as now exist in this country. There is no such power invested in the commissioner under the present law, but cases arose under the present law in which a strict application of the rigid and inflexible definition of invested capital would have worked such intolerable hardship and oppression that the commissioner was compelled to cast about and find, if possible, authority by which he might partially, at least, relieve against such hardship. Of course the commissioner could not give full relief. Of course there might be some question about his authority to give even partial relief in many cases.

While some relief could be accorded measurably though not fully meeting the requirements of the particular cases under the conditions existing during the application of the present law, it is perfectly apparent that under the changed conditions which exist now, in the chaotic situations in which the business interests of the country have been thrown, the measure of relief which can be afforded under the provisions of the present law would prove utterly and miserably inadequate.

Therefore, Mr. President, in the interest of common justice, having laid down a hard and fast—practically an inflexible—rule to measure invested capital, a rule adopted probably because we could not find anything better, it was thought expedient and necessary under these conditions to invest the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with broad powers and discretion in certain conditions and circumstances to grant such relief as justice and common fairness would dictate should be given. We accordingly framed the general provision to which I have referred, and the House conferees accepted it with a slight amendment.

That is another one of the provisions which, I think, the business interests of the country have not yet come fully to realize. They may know that there is some provision here by which the commissioner can help them in case of difficulties of the kind I have described, but I do not think they have yet come to realize the breadth of the discretion which is lodged in the commissioner in this amendment and what it may be worth to them under the conditions which now confront us.

I know this bill imposes high taxes. It is necessary to impose high taxes, higher than we have been paying heretofore. But, Mr. President, while the rates are higher, while the taxes will be higher, I believe that when you take into consideration the relief provisions of the bill as compared with the relief provisions of the present law it will be found that this bill will bear with but little greater weight upon the great business interests of the country than the present law, especially on that part of the business interests that have to pay, in addition to income taxes, excess-profits or war-profits taxes.

It is estimated that the reductions in rates made by the Senate amendments and retained in conference, and the reductions resulting from the ameliorative and relief amendments made by the Senate and retained in conference, will probably reduce the revenues from the House estimates approximately $900,000,000 for the taxable year 1918.

Mr. President, your conferees, very much to their regret, were forced by the attitude of the House to yield the plan which the Senate had devised for taxing insurance companies. The Senate had stricken out altogether the House provisions with reference to insurance and had written in a new scheme upon an entirely new basis. The House conferees while not objecting to the scheme in toto objected to a part of it which was absolutely essential to the whole, and as we thought essential to the justice of the scheme. They were willing to accept the rate adopted by the Senate, but they were not willing to allow the deductions provided in the Senate scheme.

Your conferees did not think that its scheme would be equitable or satisfactory if the deductions were eliminated, and, after much controversy and much discussion, reflection, and investigation—for we did investigate a good deal to see if we could not reach a basis of compromise—finding ourselves unable to come to any satisfactory adjustment with reference to the Senate scheme, the Senate receded, and the effect of that was to restore with slight amendments the House provisions of the bill.

There was also, Mr. President, sharp disagreement in conference between the two Houses with reference to inheritance taxes. The present law is the basis of the House scheme; in fact, it is the House scheme, with lower rates; that is to say, the House rates are very much higher than are the rates of the present law. Its basis is an estate tax; that is to say, the taxes are levied against the entire estate of the decedent after the authorized deductions have been made.

The Senate scheme was based upon an entirely different principle. It did not tax the total estate of the decedent, but it taxed the amount going to each one of the beneficiaries of the estate, giving each one of those beneficiaries a deduction, and, of course, splitting up the amount and dividing it between the beneficiaries, and taxing it as so divided. Even at the same rates as those in the House bill, the yield of the tax would have been less, because the rates of the House bill, like the rates of the present law and like the rates recommended in the conference report, are graduated according to the size of the entire estate, while the rates of the inheritance tax were adjusted to the size of the several distributive shares. The Senate conferees, finding it impossible to get the House conferees to agree to their plan of an inheritance tax, accepted the House plan of an estate tax, with material reduction in the rates applicable to small and moderate sized estates.

The House rates were, I believe, nearly double the rates of the present law. The Senate rates were, in effect, very much lower. The rates that we finally agreed upon in conference are very much less than are the rates of the present law for estates of less than $750,000. They are not so very much higher than the rates in the Senate amendment. So it may be said, speaking broadly, that while the Senate yielded to the House as to the method of imposing this tax the House yielded to the Senate as to the rates of the tax.

Mr. President, I pass over the tobacco schedule, because there were no changes of importance made in conference from the Senate amendments. The Senate reduced the House rates on cigars, cigarettes, and tobacco. The House conferees accepted practically all of these reduced Senate rates. A slight increase was made in the tax on cigarettes. The conference raised that rate from $2.90 to $3 a thousand. There was also one change in the rate with reference to cigars selling for more than 5 cents and for less than 8 cents from $5.40 to $6 a thousand. Otherwise the House accepted the Senate rates.

The same thing, Mr. President, is true with the Senate rates on admissions and dues. The House had doubled existing rates and the Senate amendment cut the House rates in two, and restored the rates of the present law. The House conferees accepted all of these reductions made by the Senate. The only exception, I believe, is the tax on cabarets. That was raised a little bit above the Senate amendment, halfway, I think, between the Senate rate and the House rate, to be accurate.

The House practically accepted all of the Senate excise rates. There was a slight change in the automobile tax and the tax on vending machines.

The House accepted, with slight exceptions, all of the rates of the Senate with reference to special taxes, the exception being chiefly the rates on ship brokers and customhouse brokers.

The conferees changed the Senate's basis of calculating the capital-stock tax from the net-assets basis to market-value basis as provided in the present law. With those unimportant exceptions all of the Senate's reduced rates were agreed to.

The same is true of the stamp taxes. The only material change made by the conferees in the stamp section of the bill affecting rates was that on foreign insurance, which was reduced from the Senate rate of 5 per cent to 3 per cent.

Mr. President, the Senate made a very striking amendment to the House bill in its amendment permitting a corporation whose principal income is derived from the personal activities of the principal stockholders to be taxed as a partnership instead of as a corporation. The fundamental reason for that change is found in the fact that the excess-profits taxes and the war-profits taxes for 1918 would be extremely oppressive—I might use a harsher term than that—would be almost destructive if they were imposed without allowing a reasonable exemption or deduction.

This exemption or deduction is based very largely upon the invested capital. With a deduction which for excess-profits tax can not be less than 8 per cent of the invested capital, and for war-profits tax can not be less than 10 per cent of the invested capital—with this allowance entirely exempt from taxation—a capitalistic corporation is by the very letter of the law guaranteed a reasonable profit, however high the tax may be upon that part of their profits in excess of this allowance, so that no concern whose business is based upon capital, whose profits are the returns of capital, can be bankrupted or can be deprived of what in the business world is regarded as a fair return upon the capital invested in the business. But where the income is not derived from capital, but is derived from the personal exertions of the principal owners of the corporation, there can be no exemption based upon invested capital. If these excess-profits and war-profits taxes were imposed, therefore, upon a corporation that had no capital or very little capital, they would constitute a flat tax upon the entire earnings, without any deductions except for the actual expenses incurred in the conduct of the business. That would be a great hardship. We sought in the present law to remedy that by imposing a flat 8 per cent tax in such cases. That was an unsatisfactory solution. The House sought in this bill to solve the problem by imposing a flat tax of 20 per cent upon the net income in lieu of the profits tax. That was not a satisfactory solution. But when we permit such concerns to be taxed as a partnership we exempt them under the present law from excess-profits taxes and from war-profits taxes, and put them upon a parity with the individual and the partnership paying taxes only upon their income.

The Senate made that amendment, and I think it was one of the wisest amendments made to the bill. The House conferees accepted that amendment, but after reflection the House conferees and the Senate conferees concluded that there was a class of profits made largely by corporations with no capital invested, but which rely only on their personal services, that would escape just taxation under the Senate amendment. So, by mutual consent, we added a provision to the bill exempting from this privilege accorded personal-service corporations corporations 50 per cent or more of whose gross incomes consists of—

Gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

We also provided that this provision should not include corporations "50 per cent or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal."

Another Senate amendment with which the conference had trouble, but which was finally accepted by the House conferees, was the amendment providing for the consolidated return. That is one of the good provisions of the bill. I should have been exceedingly sorry to have seen it stricken from the bill, and yet the House conferees seemed to be very much opposed to it. After long discussion we finally compromised that matter by retaining the Senate's consolidation scheme with a provision taking out of it any corporation "organized after August 1, 1914, and not successor to a then existing business 50 per cent or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived from Government contracts or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive." In case the corporation is taken out of the consolidation for this reason, that particular corporation is assessed separately, while the other affiliated corporations are assessed on the consolidated basis.

Mr. President, there is another amendment which occupied the time of the conference to some extent, but was finally happily adjusted. That was in connection with the controversy over the so-called King amendment. I think the conferees on the part of both Houses felt that the amendment as originally adopted was too broad. Senators will remember that that amendment was offered during the last stages of the consideration of the bill in the Senate, and it was understood, I think, and so expressed upon the floor of the Senate at the time, that the amendment would require some consideration by the conferees. While we rewrote the amendment, I think that what we have included in the bill will accomplish the main purpose which the author of the amendment, the Senator from Utah, had in mind. It was prepared, after consultation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and with the experts of the department, with a view to authorizing the commissioner to call for and to secure from the contractor and from the Government department concerned such information with respect to the contract as the commissioner deems necessary in order to enable him properly to adjust and assess the taxes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, would not the commissioner have the right to do that now?

Mr. SIMMONS. I presume he would, but it was thought best to make it clear that he had the powers which he said he should have. In asking the commissioner's advice, we said to him, "We want to give you with respect to these matters all the power you think you need." I will state to the Senate, as frankness requires, that this amendment was practically prepared under his direction and I think it gives him all the powers which he needs to get the information that is thought necessary to adjust and assess the taxes properly.

Mr. President, there were two Senate amendments from which the Senate conferees receded. One of those amendments was that relating to campaign contributions, presented in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. From the very first reading of the bill in conference that amendment became the subject of much discussion and controversy. A rather ugly state of mind was developed on the part of some members of the conference with respect to it. The House conferees sharply disagreed about it, three of them being very pronounced in their opposition. It was finally taken back to the House for instructions, and the House did instruct its conferees to yield if the retroactive provision of the amendment were eliminated. The House conferees did yield; they stated that, of course, they had to carry out their instructions; but it was very evident that in yielding that did not end the matter so far as they were concerned. There were some strong expressions on the matter by a majority of the House conferees. On the part of the Senate conferees, while, of course, they were bound by the action of the Senate, some of them stated that, if the provision were amended as proposed by the House conferees, they would not support it. I do not wish to go into a discussion of the situation that developed, but the situation which did develop satisfied me that, if this amendment were retained in the bill, it would lead to long and bitter discussion in both Houses, and that in this Chamber it would probably result in dangerous delay or in the ultimate defeat of the bill. Under these circumstances the House conferees went back to their body and asked for instructions, and upon the initiative of certain prominent Senators a poll was taken on both sides of this Chamber as to the present feeling of Senators with respect to this amendment, particularly in connection with conditions disclosed with respect to it in conference.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator inform me who took that poll, and when?

Mr. SIMMONS. As long as the Senator puts the direct question to me, I think that I owe it to him and owe it to the Senate to say that, in view of the representations made to me by the Senators to whom I have referred as to the present feeling of the Senate, I asked the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to make a poll of the Democratic Senators, a poll having already been made and communicated to me of the Republican Senators. Another poll of Democratic Senators other than that made by the Senator from Virginia was taken to verify that poll as to certain Senators whose answer to the first poll was somewhat indefinite and to extend it to certain Senators who were not present at the time the first poll was taken. This supplementary poll was taken by an official of the Senate at my instance.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to say that it is the first I ever heard of any such poll, and I am the author of the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am speaking now about the Democratic side of the Chamber.

Mr. THOMAS. I happen to be on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. SIMMONS. A similar poll, I am advised, was taken on the other side of the Chamber. I do not know who took it, but the result of the poll was brought to the attention of the conferees. Considering all these circumstances, therefore—the situation which developed in the committee, which to my mind meant delay, and long delay, and possibly the ultimate defeat of this measure if this provision were retained in the bill, added to the fact that these polls reflected a changed sentiment on the part of many Senators with reference to the amendment—the Senate conferees felt that it was their duty to recede, and they did.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I wish to say, as one Member on this side, that I was asked in that poll how I felt about the amendment, and I said that I favored it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The other amendment from which the Senate conferees receded was that with reference to the zone system. It is well understood that ever since the zone system was first proposed as a provision of a revenue bill both sides of the Senate have been opposed to it. The Senate struck it out of the present law. It was restored in conference, under pressure amounting almost to coercion.

We had two votes in the Senate upon this question while the present bill was under consideration; and those votes, both the vote in Committee of the Whole and the vote in the open Senate, disclosed the fact that a very decisive majority of the Senate was opposed to the zone system; but from the very beginning it was well known that the House has been just as much in favor of this system as we have been opposed to it. Every vote that they have taken there has sustained it. Their conferees have uniformly insisted, with great persistence, upon its retention, and when the Senate adopted the amendment under discussion repealing that system I think it was well understood by Senators that the Senate conferees would be confronted by a persistent and obstinate opposition from the House conferees.

We were not mistaken about that. From the very outset we were notified that that particular Senate amendment had to go out of the bill. This matter was discussed all through our conference sittings. It kept bobbing up every day. It would not down, and always there was the same note, that whatever else happened there could be no agreement unless this Senate amendment was eliminated. Your conferees urged that it be taken back to the House, as the campaign-contribution amendment was taken back, but that was very politely declined; and, although every member of the Senate conferees regretted it, we finally felt that it was necessary to yield on this amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator say whether any proposal was made for modifying the terms of what might be called the zone system?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think not. The Senator means, by the House?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By the House or by the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not think there was any discussion of a compromise. I do not think the temper of the opposition encouraged any.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was just a question of "take it or leave it"?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And will the Senator say whether or not the Finance Committee, or, within his knowledge, the House Ways and Means Committee, have investigated the effect of the zone system, as it has thus far been operating, on postal rates and on the distribution of magazines, weeklies, and daily newspapers?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not tell the Senator about that. There was not much detailed discussion of this amendment, because the character of the opposition precluded such discussion. I myself have no information about it, and there was none disclosed by the conferees upon the part of the House. They based their opposition upon the ground that the repeal of this system would be in the interest of a flagrant subsidy that had for years prior to its enactment been given to certain publications.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The situation, to my mind, is a very distressing one. I think the whole system is a violation of wise public policy, and I was wondering whether the Finance Committee of the Senate, in the course of its consideration of the bill, had secured any reports from the Post Office Department or elsewhere as to the actual effect of the zone system as it has now been operating for about a year.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that we did not. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who has always been very active and very much interested in this matter, may have secured some facts along that line, but they were not presented to the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I be prompted by the Senator from North Carolina as to when the zone system took effect?

Mr. SIMMONS. Under the present law?

Mr. SMOOT. July 1, 1918.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I am mistaken.

Mr. SIMMONS. It did not take effect for some time after the passage of the law, July 1, 1918, as stated by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am mistaken, then, in saying that it has been in effect for a year; but, at any rate, there has been no report from anybody of an official character, so far as the Senator knows?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not before the Finance Committee, because that committee was so pronouncedly and fundamentally against the zone system that it did not require any detailed information with reference to its operation in order to induce action.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio. I think he addressed the Chair first.

Mr. POMERENE. If it is any consolation to the chairman of the committee, I desire to say that so far as I am concerned, if the only choice to be had was between the zone system and a reduction of the rates below what they are, I want to compliment the conferees on their good judgment in receding.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that before any meeting of the conference was held the statement was made in the public press that the amendment of the Senate would go out or the bill never would become a law?

Mr. SIMMONS. I believe that statement was made in the press, but I do not know that it was made as coming directly from any particular person.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I saw it in the press, and saw it credited to one particular person who was a member of the conference.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think, regardless of what was said, that there was a very strong impression created that there would be no bill unless the Senate conferees receded. I do not charge that to any individual conferee, but that impression was indelibly impressed on my mind.

Mr. SIMMONS. And on the mind of each member of the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there are some other matters which I should like to discuss in connection with this bill, but I have detained the Senate so long that I will defer them until the provisions of the report to which they refer is reached in the regular course of the discussion.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I did not know whether or not the Senator from North Carolina was going to move an adjournment now.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I will say very frankly that I should like very much to have a night session.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, the Senator can pass his bill to-morrow, in all probability.

Mr. SIMMONS. We might pass it in a pretty short time to-night. As the Senator knows, we passed it a little while ago without any discussion at all. The Senator was out of the Chamber at the time.

Mr. PENROSE. I know that the Senator has made a speech two or three times longer than I had any idea he would make. It has been very interesting and illuminating——

Mr. SIMMONS. I thank the Senator for that statement.

Mr. PENROSE. But I think we had better proceed in an orderly way.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate very long. I regret very much that this report comes at the end of a long session, and that it affects a bill the passage of which seems to be very essential to the national welfare.

One of the great evils of our legislation consists in the fact that the most important measures which we are called upon to enact are finally submitted to our ultimate judgment during the closing days of the Congress considering them. Hence they are rushed through without that consideration which they deserve, and in some cases much evil is apt to result from the hasty manner in which we dispose of great and important questions. There are two features of this bill, however, to which I wish to advert for a moment, and then, as far as I am concerned, I shall not obstruct its passage.

I wish to refer, first, to the reinsertion in this bill of the income tax against the salaries of the President of the United States and of the Federal judges, both of which, as I construe the Constitution under which we act, are protected from this and from all other methods of diminishing them during the occupancy of the incumbents. I have read the Constitution and comments upon it in vain if these provisions can be ignored, disregarded, and violated by indirection; and, so believing, I am not able, with that provision reinserted in the bill, to give it the sanction of my vote. I gave at length last September the reasons why, in my judgment, these items should be eliminated from the bill. They were eliminated by the Senate Committee on Finance, and were reintroduced at the conference.

I refer now to the amendment whose adoption I succeeded in securing on the 23d day of September by a vote of 34 yeas to 28 nays. I tried to get favorable consideration of that amendment in the committee without success. The Senate thought better of it than the committee did, and adopted it by a very decided majority. I do not think I speak too harshly when I say that I never thought the amendment had any chance whatever with the Senate conference committee. Every member of it voted against the amendment; and while it was loyally supported literally, it was not supported otherwise.

I knew, Mr. President, that the amendment was having a hard time, not only because the Senate members of the conference committee had voted against it here and also in the committee, but because it offered a real method of preventing the collection of huge sums of money for campaign purposes and their expenditure at public elections. We have much legislation upon the statute books upon that subject, and thus far it has amounted to nothing. There are more ways of driving a coach and four through a statute, whether State or national, that is designed to prevent the corrupt use of money in elections, than any other statutes of which I have knowledge. It occurred to me and to some others that if a heavy tax could be placed upon such contributions over and above a certain sum, and also excepting those which under the statutes candidates may make, it would prove to be an effectual stop, certainly a great diminution, in the evil against which it was aimed, and the existence of which no man has ever, so far as I know, denied.

The amendment had not been in the committee long before I was informed that it was not at all popular. It was not long after that before I was informed that it was more popular with the House committee than with the Senate committee; and about that time I was informed that the chairman of the Republican national committee had come to Washington, and was also quietly active in opposition to this amendment. I heard about that time that the Democratic leader of the Senate was also engaged in working against the adoption of that amendment. It now seems that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], certainly without my knowledge, for he never said anything to me about it, for the purpose of aiding the committee in the effort to beat this measure, took a poll of this side of the Senate, while somebody else, I presume equally opposed, polled the other side.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will permit me to interrupt him.

Mr. THOMAS. I am simply stating what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] stated upon the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know what the statement of the Senator from North Carolina was. I did not hear it. My connection with the matter I will state to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly will yield the floor to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. My connection with the matter was this: The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] came to me and asked me to ascertain what the sentiments of the Democrats were regarding this amendment, and asked me to poll them, so as to guide him as far as possible in that conference, stating that he was having difficulty with it.

As to such Senators as were here who did not vote, or who had voted against the amendment, I made a memorandum in writing, which he has, without trying to control any Senator or suggesting any course of action to him. I told him frankly what the Senator wanted. The Senator from North Carolina has that memorandum, if he has kept it, in which that information was put down, so that any man interested in the matter could say whether he desired the Senate to recede or whether he was indifferent about it. The Senator from North Carolina was given that memorandum, with that information opposite each man's name, for his own guidance, and I understand that what he did not ascertain somebody else continued to ascertain for him.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado permit an inquiry?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask him whether he does not realize that the objections of the House conferees to his amendment were largely based on the fact that it was retroactive?

Mr. THOMAS. I am aware of that.

Mr. PENROSE. And the Senate conferees were unwilling to destroy or mar the symmetry of his amendment by permitting any alteration in it. The two Houses were deadlocked upon the question.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the high regard which the Senator from Pennsylvania had for the symmetry of my amendment was the moving cause of his opposition to it.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not say "the substance"; I said "the symmetry," Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. I said "the symmetry" also.

Mr. PENROSE. I know the Senator did.

Mr. THOMAS. Indeed, the Senator's love of symmetry is so notorious that it sometimes operates to prevent the exercise of his better judgment.

Mr. President, the House considered this amendment on the floor and by a large majority proposed an amendment striking out the retroactive nature of it and making it entirely prospective. As far as I was able to inform the committee—and I never went near them upon this subject; I was not invited, and did not deem it appropriate to go unless I was invited—I suggested to the two Democratic members of the committee, I believe the only two who attended the conference, the chairman and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], that I would be more than content to see this amendment remain in the bill by striking out its retroactive feature. When the opportunity was given for that purpose after the House had acted, the devotion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the symmetry of the amendment and the consequent impossibility upon his part of permitting it to be in any way mutilated seems to have found unanimous support from all the other members of the committee, with the result that, by joint Republican and Democratic action, this amendment, which I believe would go far to purify elections in America, has been slaughtered. It has disappeared from the bill; and those of us who want to see it enacted, who believe that it is a good amendment, can only obtain further action upon it by nonconcurring in this report, sending it back to the committee, and thus taking upon ourselves the responsibility of defeating the bill.

That, Mr. President, I do not want to do; but I want to take this occasion to let the country know how that amendment was defeated, and I believe that those in America who want to put a stop to the unlimited use of money in national elections will see to it, when this amendment comes up again—as it will come up in future Congresses—that both parties, instead of combining to defeat it, will be equally anxious to combine in making it a part of the laws of the United States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he sits down?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I did not quite understand. Were the House conferees willing to agree to this amendment with the retroactive feature out?

Mr. THOMAS. The House conferees were opposed to the amendment as it stood. It was then taken to the floor of the House, and the statement was made by one of the members of the conference that it was a Senate bluff and introduced by a man having a grievance, or words to that effect. I think the Member from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] proposed a substitute for or amendment to the Senate amendment which struck out the retroactive feature and made it prospective only. The House thus instructed their committee to report and stand for that sort of an amendment, but the Senate committee declined to concur. That is the history of it as I read it from the RECORD.

Mr. President, in connection with the other amendment to which I referred, placing an income tax upon the salary of the Chief Magistrate of the Nation and the members of the judiciary, I ask permission to place in the RECORD without reading a letter upon that subject bearing date the 16th day of February, 1863, written by the then Chief Justice of the United States, the Hon. Roger B. Taney, to the then Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Salmon P. Chase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., October 3, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As requested by you to-day, I inclose herewith a copy from the records of this court of the letter written by Chief Justice Taney to the Secretary of the Treasury in February, 1863.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES D. MAHER,
Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Tuesday, March 10, 1863.

Order of court.

Ordered, upon the request of the Chief Justice, that the following letter from him to the Secretary of the Treasury be entered on the records of the court:

WASHINGTON, February 16, 1863.

Hon. S. P. CHASE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: I find that the act of Congress of the last session imposing a tax of 3 per cent on the salaries of all officers in the employment of the United States has been construed in your department to embrace judicial officers, and the amount of the tax has been deducted from the salaries of the judges.

The first section of the third article of the Constitution provides that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges of both the Supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

The act in question, as you interpret it, diminishes the compensation of every judge 3 per cent, and if it can be diminished to that extent by the name of a tax, it may in the same way be reduced from time to time at the pleasure of the legislature.

The judiciary is one of the three great departments of the Government created and established by the Constitution. Its duties and powers are specifically set forth and are of a character that requires it to be perfectly independent of the two other departments, and in order to place it beyond the reach and above even the suspicion of any such influence the power to reduce their compensation is expressly withheld from Congress and excepted from their powers of legislation.

Language could not be more plain than that used in the Constitution. It is, moreover, one of its most important and essential provisions. For the articles which limit the powers of the legislative and executive branches of the Government and those which provide safeguards for the protection of the citizen in his person and property would be of little value without a judiciary to uphold and maintain them which was free from every influence, direct or indirect, that might by possibility in times of political excitement warp their judgments.

Upon these grounds I regard an act of Congress retaining in the Treasury a portion of the compensation of the judges as unconstitutional and void; and I should not have troubled you with this letter if there was any mode by which the question could be decided in a judicial proceeding. But all of the judges of the courts of the United States have an interest in the question and could not, therefore, with propriety undertake to hear and decide it.

I am, however, not willing to leave it to be inferred from my silence that I admit the right of the legislature to diminish in this or any other mode the compensation of the judges when once fixed by law, and my silence would naturally—perhaps necessarily—be looked upon as acquiescence on my part in the power claimed and exercised under this act of Congress, and would be regarded as a precedent, establishing the principle that the legislature may at its pleasure regulate the salaries of the judges of the courts of the United States and may reduce their compensation whenever Congress may think proper.

Having been honored with the highest judicial station under the Constitution, I feel it to be more especially my duty to uphold and maintain the constitutional rights of that department of the Government, and not by any act or word of mine leave it to be supposed that I acquiesce in a measure that displaces it from the independent position assigned to it by the statesmen who framed the Constitution; and in order to guard against any such inference I present to you this respectful but firm and decided remonstrance against the authority you have exercised under this act of Congress, and request you to place this protest upon the public files of your office as the evidence that I have done everything in my power to preserve and maintain the judicial department in the position and rank in the Government which the Constitution has assigned to it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

R. B. TANEY.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him if he does not think that the amendment proposed by him, to which he has referred, regarding the tax on campaign contributions, could have been supported in the Senate, from his knowledge of the feeling of the majority who would probably vote on it?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, I had no doubt of it. I do not believe that a single man who voted for it was liable to change. I will read their names:

Senators ASHURST, BECKHAM, BORAH, CHAMBERLAIN, CUMMINS, GRONNA, HENDERSON, HITCHCOCK, JOHNSON of California, JOHNSON of South Dakota, JONES of New Mexico, KENDRICK, KENYON, KIRBY, LA FOLLETTE, LENROOT, LEWIS, MCKELLAR, MCNARY, MYERS, NELSON, NORRIS, NUGENT, OVERMAN, PHELAN, POLLOCK, POMERENE, SAULSBURY, SHAFROTH, SHEPPARD, THOMAS, TRAMMELL, VARDAMAN, and WILLIAMS.

There were 34 not voting. How they would have voted upon the amendment of course I do not know. It may be that if any considerable number of them had been in attendance, or should be in attendance should the matter again come up for consideration, they would vote against it. I do not know.

Mr. POMERENE. How many were there against it?

Mr. THOMAS. There were 28 against it. The vote stood 34 to 28, with 34 not voting.

Mr. POMERENE. What was the date of the vote?

Mr. THOMAS. The 23d of December.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only inquired because I was a good deal impressed by the plan which the Senator had, so far as I know, originated, to put a stop to enormous campaign contributions, which we know have become not uncommon in this country; and I do not think any person who supported that amendment had any particular desire to have it retroactive, unless it might be that men who had made those contributions might contribute toward a fund which might be used by the Department of Justice in finding out what the result of those contributions was at the last election.

Personally I should have been very glad to have that amendment go through as it was originally; but, looking to the future, I think it would have been very much better to have it go through with the retroactive clause struck out.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Colorado, who will have an opportunity, will insist on every occasion—possibly even to the extent of going as far as the advocates of some of these sacred measures which have been pinned on every bill which came into the Senate from time to time until they have finally gone through, although they have made many bills look like a clothesline on Monday morning—I sincerely hope that he will insist upon putting this amendment on until it attracts the attention of the country sufficiently to be adopted and to be insisted upon.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, the Senator knows that an amendment of this kind must appear, if at all, upon a revenue bill originating in the House. This retroactive feature, I should perhaps say, is due to the fact that it was introduced before the committee last September. This bill levies taxes for the year 1918, and it was not retroactive at the time it was introduced except in so far as that part of the year which had passed was concerned, and it was not amended here because I wanted to introduce it precisely as it was introduced there. That accounts for the fact that when it was ultimately adopted in the Senate, the elections were over and it would have had a retroactive effect. I was quite willing to have it so. I was not insistent upon its being so. I will endeavor to the best of my ability if opportunity hereafter offers, as I think it will, if I live, to incorporate it in the first revenue measure that comes before the Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from North Corolina if he will consent to take a recess.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would like very much to go on longer and then take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think anyone wants to go on at this late hour. Neither do I think it is fair to ask anyone to go on now when no one is here. I was going to suggest that the Senate adjourn or take a recess.

Mr. SIMMONS. As the Senator knows, I have not been in the Chamber very much of late, but I was under the impression that the Senate has been sitting until about half past 5.

Mr. PENROSE. Until 5 or a little after.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would the Senator from Utah have any objection to proceeding now?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to begin at five minutes past 5. I know most Senators are away, and, in fact, I never want to talk to the Senate unless I have something to say.

Mr. PENROSE. There is not a quorum here.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. THOMAS. Before that motion is made, will the Senator move that when we recess we shall recess until 11 o'clock?

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well, I move that when the Senate takes a recess it shall recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 12, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 11, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we pray that amid the conflicting reports which come to us from the peace council over the sea that we may possess our souls in patience, praying for light to guide the men who are confronted with gigantic problems, that they may be able to adjust all differences, and form a peace league which shall insure unity, right, and justice for all mankind. In the name of the world's Great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3992. An act to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians; and

S. 5516. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5516. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the second deficiency bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15140. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] asks to take from the Speaker's table the bill just reported, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3992) entitled "An act to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 30.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Hon. KEY PITTMAN, as one of the Senate managers, is hereby authorized to affix the name of JAMES D. PHELAN as one of the Senate managers to the conference report on bill (S. 2812) entitled "An act to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain" under oral authority and by telegram requesting such action.

REFUSAL OF LICENSES BY WAR TRADE BOARD.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of House resolution 531, and consider the same in the House now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman claim privilege?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. It is a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 531.

Resolved, That the President, if not incompatible with the public interest, be requested to communicate to the House what, if any, reasons exist for the War Trade Board to refuse license to American manufacturers to export manufactured goods to citizens of neutral countries with which we are not and have not been at war; and what, if any, reasons exist for the refusal of the War Trade Board to permit American manufacturers to communicate with their customers in such countries in regard to future business.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order it is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. GARNER. It asks for reasons. It does not ask for facts. You can not make a resolution that asks for reasons privileged under the rule.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. It calls for facts.

Mr. GARNER. It calls for reasons, if I understood the reading of it.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Well, they would be facts.

The SPEAKER. It reads:

Resolved, That the President, if not incompatible with the public interest, be requested to communicate to the House what, if any, reasons exist for the War Trade Board to refuse license to American manufacturers to export manufactured goods to citizens of neutral countries with which we are not and have not been at war; and what, if any, reasons exist for the refusal of the said War Trade Board to permit American manufacturers to communicate with their customers in such countries in regard to future business.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if it makes any difference, I move to strike out the word "reasons" and ask them to report what facts, if any, exist.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

The SPEAKER. What is it the gentleman from Illinois wishes?

Mr. FOSTER. I make a point of order that it can not be done under that resolution. It has to be introduced and go to the committee.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is not in order. All the Speaker has to do is to refer to the precedents. There are scores of them to the effect that you can ask for facts but can not ask for reasons.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if I may be heard on the point of order——

The SPEAKER. Well, briefly.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I think it makes no difference whether it says "reasons" or "facts." It is facts that it calls for. What I desire to know and what the House ought to know is whether or not we have an autocratic board here in the city that prevents American manufacturers from doing business. I have in mind two or three particular cases from my district where they have not only refused to permit the export of sewing machines to Spain and to Mexico, but where they have absolutely refused to permit any communication with men in those countries in regard to that business.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee is certainly well taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was just cogitating on that proposition as to whether reasons and facts are practically the same.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a resolution of inquiry which asks for facts is clearly in order, but a resolution which calls upon the President or any department to give reasons for an action has always been held not to be in order. There can not be any possible doubt about that.

Mr. GARNER. Let me give an illustration to the Chair. The fact is that I go to the Office Building, but the reason I go over there is a different proposition entirely. I go to the Office Building, but can not give any reason why I do. I think the difference is too apparent to ask whether reasons are facts. The rule, as I understand it, that makes a thing privileged is relative to calling for facts as to what the President did. The reason for these things is a different matter entirely.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. The reasons must depend upon the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but you can ask for the facts.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. The resolution does that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The gentleman could remodel his resolution very easily.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Then, Mr. Speaker, may I offer to amend the resolution and state the facts instead of the reasons?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The point of order has been sustained. The gentleman will have to introduce another resolution and refer it to the committee.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, to-morrow, after the reading of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, my colleague Mr. FULLER be permitted to address the House on the subject of Lincoln for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, his colleague Mr. FULLER be permitted to address the House on the subject of Lincoln for not exceeding 15 minutes. The Chair himself has been intending for the last 10 years to make an address on Lincoln and hopes to do it some time.

Mr. MANN. Why not do it?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY—HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-morrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with, and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business in order to-morrow be dispensed with, and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPRINT OF HEARINGS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a reprint be ordered of the hearing on the bill H. R. 13392, held on January 13, and that a print be made of the subsequent hearing on February 6 on H. J. Res. 382, on the Coast Guard Service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that a reprint be made of hearings on January 13 and February 6 on the bill H. R. 13392 and H. J. Res. 382. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman asks unanimous consent for a reprint of a hearing. If it has not yet been printed it would be printed as a House document?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes; and a subsequent hearing was held, and it is desired that they both be printed together.

Mr. MANN. That is not a House document.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes; it is a hearing.

Mr. MANN. It is a committee print.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I was informed that unanimous consent had to be obtained to get a reprint with a subsequent hearing.

Mr. GARNER. What is the hearing on?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. On the bill H. R. 13392, concerning the transfer of the Coast Guard to the Navy, and House joint resolution 382.

Mr. GARNER. Is the object in getting this reprint to send out copies to members of the Coast Guard? What is the object you have in view? Enough copies no doubt are printed to supply Members of the House. I can not understand why you want a reprint, unless it is to send out the reprints promiscuously.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Another hearing was had, and a print of it is desired.

Mr. GARNER. The committee has authority to print it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I understand they have.

Mr. GARNER. Then go ahead and print it. You do not have to get unanimous consent here.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I was informed you did have to.

Mr. GARNER. You are mistaken. If they could have the first hearing printed they could have the second.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. They wanted a reprint of the first, so as to have both hearings printed together.

Mr. MANN. If it is reprinted by order of the House it would be a House document, and that is not usual.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. There was a demand for the reprint of the first hearing, together with a print of the second hearing, for the information of those interested in the legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. I think the committee has authority to print.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I present a privileged report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address I made at Pittsburgh on the spread of bolshevism.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to get his friend to withdraw his demand for a quorum. Nothing can be done in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold making the point.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. FESS. To print in the RECORD an address of mine at Pittsburgh on the spread of bolshevism.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered by him on the spread of bolshevism. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, where was the address made?

Mr. FESS. Before the chamber of commerce at Pittsburgh.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LANGLEY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week on account of sickness in the family.

THE RAILROADS.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I desire to present a petition from constituents of mine, asking that the Government take over the railroads. They ask that it be put in the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER. They can not do that, Mr. Speaker. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 566.

Resolved, That after the adoption of this rule it shall be in order in the consideration of H. R. 15539, a bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes to consider new legislation in said bill, notwithstanding the general rules of the House, as follows:

"For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the vessels enumerated below:

"Ten first-class battleships, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessels of their class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action; two of these at a cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $21,000,000 each, to be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein.

"Ten scout cruisers, carrying suitable protection and armament suited to their size and type, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action; two to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $8,000,000 each, to be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein.

"And for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States in accordance with the latest improvements in the construction of ships, and in the armor and armament therefor, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to submit to Congress on the first Monday in December next, general description of such additional vessels as may be needed to complete and round out the Navy of the United States. Types and numbers shall be recommended after full consideration and analysis of recent war experience, and particular attention shall be given to aeroplane carriers and any other new types developed during the war or shown to be necessary by the aforesaid war experience.

If at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for, there shall have been established with the cooperation of the United States of America any tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments then, and in that case, such naval expenditure as may be inconsistent with the engagements made by the establishments of said tribunal or tribunals, may be suspended when so ordered by the President of the United States, and no contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Francis	Mondell	Siegel
Birch	Gould	Moon	Smith, C. B.
Bland, Ind.	Graham, Ill.	Moores, Ind.	Smith, T. F.
Booher	Gray, N. J.	Nichols, Mich.	Snyder
Borland	Hamill	Nolan	Steenerson
Britten	Hamilton, N. Y.	Norton	Stephens, Miss.
Brumbaugh	Harrison, Miss.	O'Shaunessy	Sterling
Carew	Haskell	Park	Stevenson
Chandler, N. Y.	Heaton	Platt	Strong
Church	Heintz	Porter	Sullivan
Cooper, Ohio	Helm	Pratt	Swift
Costello	Helvering	Price	Taylor, Ark.
Cox	Husted	Rainey, H. T.	Templeton
Davey	Ireland	Rayburn	Tilson

Fairchild, G. W.	McKinley	Sanford	White, Ohio
Fisher	McLaughlin, Pa.	Scully	Wood, Ind.
Flood	Madden	Sears	Woods, Iowa
Flynn	Miller, Minn.	Sherley

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 330 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLER of Washington, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, on February 12, on account of delivering a Lincoln Day address.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing an article by my colleague [Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts] embodying the results of his observations on his recent trip to Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article written by his colleague [Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts] on his trip to Europe. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules be two hours, one hour to be controlled by myself, and one hour by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this rule be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I have had requests from both sides of the House for much more than an hour's time. Members say they want to discuss this rule and the matters that it involves and to have the matter disposed of on the question of adopting the rule making the proposition in order. Could the gentleman extend the time? I know the tentative agreement was for an hour on a side.

Mr. POU. I would prefer not to extend the time. The gentleman knows that under the five-minute rule there will be opportunity for debate. I think the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. PADGETT], so far as he could be, has been very generous already.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But there is an impression in some parts of the House and a hope in other parts of the House that there will be no five-minute debate upon this matter; that its consideration will be denied by the defeat of the rule.

Mr. POU. If the rule is to be defeated, it seems to me that an hour on a side ought to be sufficient.

Mr. BURNETT. Has any time been agreed upon for general debate in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. POU. There will be no general debate. The rule simply makes in order that part of the bill which on yesterday was held not to be in order.

Mr. BURNETT. I understood from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that perhaps there would be time devoted to a general discussion of the proposition.

Mr. POU. I think, perhaps, if the rule is adopted the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will be generous in any agreement as to time.

Mr. BURNETT. I wanted to know whether there would be an opportunity for general debate.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the rule be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by myself and one hour by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this rule be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Kansas, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. POU. This resolution makes in order that part of the naval bill which was ruled out on a point of order on yesterday. Of course, those who were present yesterday are familiar with what took place. What is known as the greater Navy program was ruled out on a point of order. The Committee on Rules felt that the House should be given an opportunity to vote upon legislation of such vast importance. The rule simply makes this legislation in order. The question of the naval program is in a way raised by the rule itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this situation is presented: This war was brought to an end sooner than most men expected by the acceptance of the formula laid down by the President of the United States. His program, consisting of 14 proposals or conditions, was agreed to by Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, and some of the smaller States. No criticism can rob the President of that triumph. No good man would wish to rob him of the credit. I well remember the comments on that message wherein his 14 points were announced to the world. The almost universal comment in this Chamber was that the President was demanding too much; that Germany would never agree to the things he demanded. But a thing almost without parallel happened. The great nations of the earth accepted that program of the President, and adopted it without change, as the basis for a peace which it is hoped will be built up for all time to come. The President prior to the trip to Europe had asked for the enactment of the program contained in this bill.

After he arrived in Europe and engaged in negotiations there, which all the world hopes will result in a permanent peace, he reaffirmed the request that he made in his message, which was, in effect, that the United States ought to maintain an unconquerable Navy. Now, my own judgment—if it is worth anything, and certainly I know that it is not worth much—is that there are just two kinds of navy that this Nation ought to maintain; either an unconquerable navy—and I have always supported that since I came into this Chamber in the Fifty-seventh Congress—or if not an unconquerable navy, then a navy just large enough to do the police duty necessary to take care of our coast lines. What sense is there in having a navy just big enough to be defeated?

An admiral in the Navy, known and respected throughout the world, now dead, told me once that one battleship having guns with a range of 12 miles was more than the equal of five battleships having a range of 10 miles. For one I hope and pray that the day will come when a big navy is not necessary to our safety as a nation, but so long as men kill each other in war I want my country to have a navy big enough to win. That I believe to be practical common sense. God in heaven knows I hate war. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I have reason to hate war, but I believe a great navy is the best and most economical insurance against war.

Has it come to the point where this great Nation of ours, rich and powerful, to-day the premier nation of the world, must depend upon the navy of any other country for protection or support? I was astonished, I felt humiliated as an American citizen, when I heard the suggestion actually made on this floor that gentlemen would vote for this program if they were assured that the navy of Great Britain was not big enough to do the job. My God! Where is the Americanism in such a suggestion as that. For one I am proud to stand here and support this program. I want a navy big enough to conquer any other single navy in the world if the time ever comes when we must fight.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the program the gentleman advocates is wise, and I, like him, have always been a big Navy man, why not begin now instead of waiting until February 1, 1920?

Mr. POU. It would please me better to begin it now. Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, every man who loves peace should hold up the hands of the man now in Europe who is trying to build up a perpetual world peace. The only place in the world that I know of where President Wilson is constantly criticized is in America, mostly here in this Chamber. He is putting forth his best endeavors that the aspirations of mankind for everlasting peace shall not fail. Reaffirming the request made in his message, he has told us that this legislation will be helpful to him in the great task that he has undertaken. Gentlemen who criticize this man for this trip do themselves great injustice. History is going to give the President a place, a place of which every American may justly be proud.

What is the result of this war? Seven million men killed, 14,000,000 men wounded. The debt of France equals half of her total wealth; that of England equals 37 per cent of her total wealth; and ours will probably be $50,000,000,000. My God, we do not want a repetition of such a tragedy as this ever again! [Applause.] It has struck at the hearts of thousands of homes in America. The tragedy of it all is greater than words can express. Instead of criticizing the President, instead of making his task harder, it seems to me the hour has come when every man should rise above party and stand by him and support him in his great effort to satisfy the aspirations of all civilized mankind for an everlasting peace on earth. [Applause.]

No man ever went forth on a nobler mission. No man ever accomplished so much in so short a time. Having written the conditions upon which peace is based, he is criticized because he goes to take part in the council of the very powers which accepted his program. Those who criticize him for going to Europe would almost certainly have criticized him if he had remained in America.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on the 11th of November last the terms of an armistice were accepted by Germany that thrilled the hearts of the entire part of the world that was in opposition to the German Empire in the most colossal war ever waged in the history of civilization; everybody accepted the terms of the armistice with satisfaction and with joy. Since that day the attention of the world has been taken from the war that was waged, the steps leading up to it, and the inhumanities with which Germany carried it on. The terms of the armistice have been in a large measure forgotten, and on yesterday when the time arrived for renewing the armistice, which came as the result of the heroism of our boys with those of the allies, had been so far forgotten that Germany showed a front, and to-day is uncertain as to whether or not she will accept the terms laid down for the continuation of the armistice or the terms of peace when they are finally agreed upon. The war, with its issues, with its victories, has been for the moment forgotten as the result of a campaign to prevent wars in the distant future.

This war should have been terminated with a crisp, decisive peace treaty, agreed to as soon as possible after the peace commissioners assembled. [Applause.] There should have been no time lost in terminating this war and demobilizing our armies. Then the question of avoiding wars in the proximate or the remote future could well have been taken up.

I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina that the aspirations of the world should be gratified and that every precaution should be taken, and covenants or agreements entered into by our country with the nations of the world to secure immunity in the future against another such catastrophe as the one through which the world has just gone. But I must be excused from accepting his method of securing covenants against future wars.

Mr. Speaker, a covenant entered into for the future peace of the world should be entered into openly and voluntarily by all who are parties to the covenant. No nation should sign such a covenant for the future peace of the world under duress or by the threat of force from any other nation.

Let us take the question before us this morning and strip it to the marrow: It is proposed that the nations shall covenant together for the peace of the world in the future. The President has been the leading exponent of that lofty ambition, and I wish him Godspeed, and sincerely hope that when the conference is over we shall have an arrangement that will adjust international differences without resorting to the arbitrament of arms. But any arrangement or league entered into at the point of the bayonet for the future peace will not last. The nation that is forced to enter into such a covenant will break it when it ceases to fear the bayonet.

Mr. Speaker, the President on the very day of his appeal to the Congress of the United States for an unheard-of naval program in the United States thrilled the Chamber of Deputies in Paris by advocating a disarmament of the world to save the world from future wars and to save the people of the world from the burden of taxation caused by armaments and preparations for war. This question to-day brings up before the House the proposition as to whether or not we shall say to the President, "While you are urging France and England and Italy and Spain and Japan and all the rest of the world to disarm we will grant your request, Mr. President, for the greatest naval program ever undertaken by any nation in the history of mankind." Is it honest? I refuse to believe that the President really wants that kind of an authorization handed to him while he is urging the rest of the world to disarm. I believe that he is honestly endeavoring to provide for the peace of the world—not by force of arms, not by battleships, but by mutual covenants entered into by the nations of the earth.

If this thing is done, which we are asked to do now, it is a challenge to England, a challenge to France, a challenge to Japan, a challenge to Italy, a challenge to every nation in the world to increase their armament, to increase the number of their battleships, and to prepare for war, because the greatest, the richest, the most powerful nation in the world, the nation which has the most unlimited resources, is to-day, while urging all of the other nations of the world to disarm and to enter into covenants of peace, preparing to control the seas and for arbitrament by arms with the greatest navy the world has ever seen. Are we aiding the President in establishing a league for the preservation of world peace or are we obstructing his purpose in giving this sort of authorization in this bill to-day?

But it is said that the President wants this done. I do not know whether he does or not. It is said that a cryptic telegram was received from him in which he said he did want it and that anything short of this colossal naval program would be fatal to his plans. Even if he did say to the Committee on Naval Affairs that he wants the greatest naval program ever undertaken in the world, he may have erred in judgment as to the best plan to pursue to enable him to arrive at a conclusion that would result in a league of nations. The President has not always been infallible in his judgments with respect to some of these things. Like the rest of mankind, he is sometimes liable to err; and if he asked for this—and the House does not yet know that he did, in terms—I believe that it was a mistake upon his part.

Already there is in the press of Europe severe criticism of the Secretary of the Navy of the United States for urging a great Navy while the President is in Paris urging the rest of the world to disarm. We are not calming the troubled waters by thrusting into them the greatest naval program that has ever been embarked upon by any nation during the very hours that the peace conference is finishing the constitution for a league of nations—on the last day, perhaps, for the consideration of the constitution of such a league. The question is up to us, Shall Congress at this time thrust upon the peace table, into the face of the world, a belligerent program such as the world has never before seen?

It was the duty of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House to have reported to Congress a bill carrying an appropriation for the present Navy, supporting it for the ensuing fiscal year and then, if anything should arise, if anything is wanted after the peace has been agreed upon in Paris, if a league of nations should fail, I would support a naval program that would insure safety to our merchant fleet in the waters of all the seven seas. But that time has not yet arrived. The peace conference has not concluded its work. It has not yet finished its discussions. It has not yet even discussed the terms of peace. Germany has not yet been handed the terms of peace and told to "sign here." The only question now under consideration is a league of nations, enabling the nations of the earth to disarm, and we are asked to thrust into the face of that program a naval program that would cost a billion and a half of dollars and at the same time obstruct, rather than aid, the President in his efforts to provide for the peace of the world. This rule should not be agreed to.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the actual hostilities connected with the great war are over, and the German Army is back of the Rhine. The actual rulers, the real heads, of the four great allied nations are in a peace conference to-day. England is represented by Lloyd George, France by Clemenceau, Italy by Orlando, and America by Mr. Wilson. In the hands of these four men to an unusual degree rests the future peace of the world. Whether we would have wished the personnel of those sitting about the peace table to be different is of no consequence. Whatever part America has in straightening out the world's tangle, it must be done very largely through the personality of the President and those who are associated with him, of his own choice. What are these men trying to do over there? These four men, representing the four great free nations of the earth, are over there trying to work out some plan by which the world shall not again be visited with the scourage of war such as we have just passed through. They are trying to work out a reduction of armament, so that there may be lifted from the backs of the world the terrible burdens incident to maintaining tremendous armies and tremendous navies. My colleague [Mr. CURRIE] and I on the 29th day of last May were in the village of Chateau-Thierry, in France. We saw on that day thousands upon thousands of French, British, and American troops being rushed to the front to stop the German advance, only 3 or 4 miles away at that time, and while these thousands of boys from all these great nations were being rushed into the gap, on the other track thousands more were coming back from the field of battle in ambulance trains, with broken legs and broken arms and broken bodies, and as we walked the streets of that French village and watched that terrible scene, at the time when the German advance was at its high-water mark, we said, "It does seem as though when this thing is once over the statesmanship of the world ought to be able to get together and see to it that nothing like this shall ever occur again." [Applause.] Every man here, every man in America, I care not who he may be, in his thoughtful moments desires that these commissioners succeed in bringing about a reduction of armament. They want them to succeed in making some arrangement by which the probability of war will at least be reduced for the future. No man on this side of the House or on the other side of the House has anything in his heart, of course, but the highest wish for the success of our commissioners in bringing about these two world-desired situations—the reduction of armament and some sort of an arrangement or agreement by which the peace of the world, if possible, may be maintained in the days that are to come.

When the President and his associates come back here with definite propositions, then it will be time for us, of course, to examine into them carefully and determine whether or not, in our judgment, they are such propositions as we want to commit the American people to, but in the meantime we should put our faith and our trust in those who under the Constitution are the only ones clothed with authority to work out anything in our name either for ourselves or for the balance of the world. [Applause.] I know that we sometimes have some little feeling here on our side against the President, and on the other side, too. I know he sent word into some districts represented by Democrats to nominate this man and to defeat that man. I know that he sent out a letter——

Mr. BUTLER. To defeat all of us.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I know he sent out a letter in which he said that the Republicans had, during the war, done what they could to take the management of the war out of his hands and put it into instrumentalities of our own choosing, but the fact, of course, remains known to us and to all men that no Executive ever sat in the White House who has had behind him more completely the support of the country and all parties than the present Chief Executive of the United States. [Applause.] But that does not matter. We can even overlook the fact that he sent out the letter, because in all human probability our majority was somewhat increased thereby. [Applause on the Republican side.] But in any event it does not matter so much, does it, which of us may sit here for a brief hour after all? If the President, gathering to himself all the power—and he has been given more power than any other of his predecessors—gathering to himself all the prestige of this great Republic, if he as our official representative abroad can accomplish these two great purposes, what difference does it make what our personal feeling toward the President may be?

Mr. BUTLER. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question? First permit me to say just one sentence, that this is the only time we have had any difference of opinion——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; we have agreed.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman here advocate this because he wishes this Navy increased, or does he do it for the purpose of bringing about a reduction of armament?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am about to reach that in just a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. Take all the time the gentleman wishes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am going to discuss that proposition in just a moment. That is the next thing on which I am going to touch.

Mr. BUTLER. Take your own time, it will be done well in any event.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There is one other consideration, and I want every man in this House to think of it right now in connection with this great purpose and desire to effect a reduction in armament and to create some tribunal which may hold out some hope for peace in the future, and that is this: Our commissioners abroad may not succeed. They may fail, and, as for myself, I do not want the President of the United States to come back and say that he was on the point of getting a reduction of armament, that he was on the point of bringing into being a tribunal which would adjust the demands of the world and prevent war, but that at the critical moment the Congress of the United States withdrew its support, and because of that action he failed. [Applause.] I do not want the President to be able to say that upon his return to the United States. I do not ask the President to take any responsibility for the constitutional duties devolving upon me as a Member of the House; and if as President of the United States he is charged under the Constitution with the initiating of treaties, then I want in case of Executive failure that the blame shall fall exactly where the credit and the glory will rest in the event of success. [Applause.] I at least am not anxious to take responsibility from the place where it has been put under the Constitution and drag it down upon the shoulders of the Members of Congress. Now, the question that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has asked me is, How does this proposed legislation affect the situation and fit into what I am saying? In the first place, the well-understood policy of the United States, declared here many times before, is the reduction of naval armament. That is known to every man here. The desire of this country is that there be brought about a reduction of armament throughout the world.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just let me finish what I am saying, and then I will—and if it is going to help the commissioners abroad, the commissioners from England, France, and Italy, to know what America would feel itself obliged to do in the event that a reduction of armament is not to be agreed to by other leading nations, then I, for myself, am willing that they should have the benefit of that knowledge in advance. [Applause.] I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman said it was the policy of this country to disarm, provided, of course, the other nations are willing?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Absolutely.

Mr. LAZARO. And there is a provision in this measure that authorizes the President to quit the building program if the other nations agree to do the same thing.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I thank my friend from Louisiana for injecting that statement into my remarks.

Mr. LAZARO. And until that is done we ought to go ahead.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course, no patriotic man, having in mind what America means and is going to mean throughout the ages for the civilization and liberty of the world, would be willing to expose the sacred heritage of this Republic to hostile attack which might destroy in a day all we have struggled for a hundred years to attain. [Applause.] Oh, no.

There is another reason why it occurs to me that it will be helpful abroad for us to declare that in the event that the world refuses to disarm, that America must go forward with adequate preparation necessary for our own protection. We have as much at stake in the world as any other nation. Vast power can be trusted as safely in American hands as in the hands of any other nation in the world. We sincerely hope that it may not be necessary to expand our Naval Establishment, but the world may as well know first as last that, if the old order is to continue, America can not do otherwise than to look after itself. The knowledge of such a policy brought home to the commissioners sitting around the peace table in Europe, in my judgment, will fortify them against objections coming from their own people to what might be regarded as the surrender of prestige and influence which go with great naval and military power. [Applause.]

Now, just one word in conclusion. These are troublous days. There never was a time when men needed to free themselves from prejudice more than to-day. All Europe is shaken with unrest and uncertainty and no one is wise enough to look into the future and say with any degree of certainty what faces us there. In the economy of things it is not given to the average man to lift the curtain separating to-day from to-morrow. It probably is well that it is so, but in this great hour when so much is at stake for us and for our children and for all mankind, I sincerely hope that the curtain may be lifted so that the four world figures sitting at the peace conference may at least catch a quick and hasty glance down the long corridors of the future and from that glance, quick and hasty as it may be, may they catch enough of the Divine purpose to help them to shape and fashion the world now in the remaking in harmony with the spirit of justice and eternal right. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, our colleague from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] always speaks with tremendous power, not only with conviction but generally with persuasion, and has the facility for compelling those who might differ from him to give him the most sympathetic respect to his statements even though we may not be able to admit the force of his conclusions. I think that nearly all that he said, as matters of statement, I could admit, but there are some conclusions that I regret I can not accept. And I would like to have the membership of the House to think just a moment on the appeal that he made when he referred to the status of the war and what ought to come out of it as a definite result.

I do not think anybody, whatever his position is, would stand out against the movement of disarmament if that movement was to be general among all the nations with which we must deal. But our duty now should be to see how the war is to end. The nation that ought to be within the ken of our eye is our enemy, defeated, it is true, but not totally disrupted. Nobody can close his eye to the possibility of resuscitated Germany, if especially Germany can replete in Russia. And anybody that thinks that a nation that has not been touched, except in her man power, her entire industrial organization still intact, with a possibility in the immediate future of becoming one of the world's most dangerous powers—if anyone realizing that fully will see this possibility, it seems to me that our concern should not be a division among our allies, our friends, but a solidarity against our enemy. We ought not now in the American Congress to deal with propositions that look to a division of the allies that are against our enemy.

What is this? There is a form of threat. Against whom? Against whom can it be meant? It is not an announcement to Germany nor to Austria—to our enemies. It is a subtle announcement to the men with whom our President sits about the table, who are our friends, with whom we have been fighting a common enemy. And it is not an open statement, but it is a statement, not made clear to you—not to the House, at least—that there is something of a secret matter on which "we can not take the public into our confidence; this is something that we must hold as a club"; made more effectual by a refusal to allow the lawmakers to know what it means. Over whom? Over our friends, not our enemy. And to me it seems the one proper thing to do to-day is to sit about that table as friends and decide how the war shall end, and end at once, by signing this treaty. [Applause.]

Three months have elapsed. What has been done? The discussion comes to American shores in conglomerated dispatches, in which to-day you read one thing and which to-morrow you must unread. I know the American people want to put an end to the war, so that while it is really over it will be legally over, and the American soldiers will know what is expected of them, whether we will bring them home or what we are to do. In other words, instead of disputing with our friends as to the ending of the war with Germany, let us unite with our friends, and whatever is to be done let it be done with the cards on the table. [Applause.]

There are two things in this proposal that I do not like. One is that it is not known to the public what the play is, and another is that it seems to be held in the form of a threat to our friends that "if you do this, all right; if you do not do it, then we will deal with you." This is not the time to put that up. The time to make that proposal is when we have dealt with our enemy. The time for us to say whether we will disarm or not is when the war is ended and the treaty is signed; then we can stand upon a policy of disarmament. It would not be in the form of a threat then, but as a matter of legitimate negotiation. But as it now comes in here it is not only a threat, but the secret element in it, it seems to me, is unwise.

We are told that before the President landed he had his program made up; that he would seek an interview early with Lloyd George and lay his ideas before him; then he might be called upon to address the British public, and if what he wanted, which up to date is not made public to us, is not forthcoming, then he would consult the feasibility of recommending to our Nation a Navy the biggest or equal of any navy on the sea. I do not know what has taken place except what the dispatches carry. I do know, as you do, that conferences were held. I know, as you know, that the British public was addressed at Manchester and the French were addressed in the Chamber of Deputies. I do know, as you know, that the Secretary of the Navy has recommended a big naval program. I know, as you know, that an official inquiry was made of the President to know whether anything occurred to change the plan. Now comes to us—I do not mean to us, but to certain ones—a cablegram, a secret communication, so mysterious that it can not be given to the representatives of the people in Congress assembled, and upon that we are asked to embark upon such an expenditure as herein proposed. I stand for a great first line of defense, which is assured by completing the contracts already authorized, which we are willing to do and which will be done by this Congress. But I decline, while our President sits with our allies to effect a final peace treaty with our enemy, to do anything which will divide our friends at the very moment that our chief concern should be to insure unity of friends.

I shall be compelled, gentlemen, to vote against this rule. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kansas use a little more of his time? Could he conveniently do so now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can use more time. How many more speeches will the gentleman from North Carolina have?

Mr. POU. There will be probably three short speeches.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule, because I am opposed to the alleged naval increase which it makes in order. No one can accuse me of not being a "big-navy" man. Since I was elected to Congress, 16 years ago, I have consistently voted for a big Navy, often for a Navy bigger than that recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I have voted for battleships when many on this side, and more on that, voted for no battleships. I voted for four battleships when a then very distinguished Democratic leader urged eloquently that we should have no Navy at all, because New York harbor could be defended by rowboats.

But this proposition, gentlemen, is a naval program with a string to it. In the first place, not a cent is appropriated. In the second place, the program is not to be begun for more than a year, or nearly a year—until February 1, 1920. And in the third place, and worst of all, the increase is left contingent not on the will of the American people, but upon the decision of some nebulous tribunal of other peoples hereafter to be created. In my judgment, gentlemen, that is not a bona fide increase of the Navy.

What authority is given in favor of this proposition? A cable—nothing but a cable; and a confidential cable. I happen to be one of those referred to by gentlemen yesterday as the clique who are familiar with the contents of that cable. The situation simply was that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] read to me that cable and asked me that I keep it confidential; and, of course, I shall not abuse the confidence of the gentleman from Tennessee, for whom I have the highest regard; whom I regard as one of the very ablest chairmen of the Committee on Naval Affairs that we have ever had. It is not his fault that the House is not made fully acquainted with the contents of that cable. It is the fault of those who submitted it to him in confidence.

But, gentlemen, I do not believe in making of the membership of the House some sheep and some goats. [Applause.] We all ought to know what is in it. I happen to know, and I happen to differ from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], who also knows and for whose opinion I have the highest regard. I do not believe that the contents of that cable justify me in voting for this proposition. [Applause.]

I believe the time has come, gentlemen, when this House shall vote authorizations and appropriations only with full knowledge of the facts. [Applause.] I think the time has come when this House should cease to be a mere registering machine of the will of the Executive, particularly when it is privately expressed. [Applause.]

We all of us listened the other day to the eulogy of a statesman by a statesman, and there was not a more significant sentence in that eloquent oration than the one in which it was said that the subject of the eulogy was a man who, throughout his public career, had no secrets from the American people. [Applause.] My colleagues, we are going to celebrate to-morrow the birthday of another great American, Abraham Lincoln, who had no secrets from the American people. [Applause.] We have had other Presidents of the United States who had no secrets from the American people. Would to God that we had one now! [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who professes great friendship for the Navy and who takes pride in the fact that he has always stood for a great Navy, is hardly consistent in refusing to support a rule that would, at least, authorize the House to consider a naval program. The gentleman is aware that if the rule is passed the bill as reported by the committee is open to amendment, and if he feels, as he now states, that a mistake would be made to withhold authority to make contracts until February 1, 1920, or to fail to now carry an appropriation for the new construction, he can offer appropriate amendments giving immediate authority to contract and carrying present appropriations.

Permit me to say that the personnel of the House Committee on Naval Affairs will represent the varying views on the floor of the House. Some have favored small navies. Some have favored a Navy second only to the largest, and yet others have favored a Navy equal to the largest; and the same differences of opinion now expressed on the floor of the House as to the wisdom of providing a new program at this time were fully discussed by the members of the committee, just as you have discussed them here; and yet, notwithstanding such differences, the committee were later unanimous in recommending this program.

A distinguished gentleman from the Republican side of the House will be chairman of the Naval Committee in the next Congress, one whom every member of the committee honors and respects, and who will stand guard to see that economy is practiced. He first felt that the new program might now be safely postponed, but when the committee finally considered all matters submitted to it, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], like others, subordinated his individual opinion and joined in a unanimous report for this new program.

Now, let me suggest some past facts to those who venture to assert that the President might use this as a threat. They have forgotten that the President in February, 1916, long before we went to war with Germany, in a speech at St. Louis declared himself in favor of a great Navy. I quote his language:

> There is no other navy in the world that has to cover so great an area of defense as the American Navy, and it ought, in my judgment, to be incomparably the most adequate navy in the world.

Prior to that, in July, 1915, the General Board submitted to the Secretary of the Navy the following recommendation for a naval program:

> The Navy of the United States should ultimately be equal to the most powerful maintained by any nation of the world. It should be gradually increased to this point by such a rate of development each year as may be permitted by the facilities of the country, but the limit defined should be attained not later than 1925.

Evidently the President in his speech at St. Louis followed the recommendation announced by the General Board in July, 1915, and after the President's speech in St. Louis in 1916 this House in August of that year passed with practical unanimity what is now declared to have been the largest naval bill that any country ever passed, and permit me to call attention to a provision of that bill which the Members of this House without dissent voted for—and I am wondering how some, including the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], in view of the speech just made, can harmonize his present utterances with what he then voted for. I read from the August, 1916, naval bill this provision, known as the Hensley amendment, viz:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its international disputes through mediation or arbitration, to the end that war may be honorably avoided. It looks with apprehension and disfavor upon a general increase of armament throughout the world, but it realizes that no single nation can disarm and that without a common agreement upon the subject every considerable power must maintain a relative standing in military strength.

Remember this is a part of the bill providing for the greatest naval building program that this or any other country ever proposed. No one undertook to then suggest—as the gentleman from Ohio now does—that such a provision was evidence of insincerity or a mere bluff. Oh, no. Clearly it was only an affirmation of what the President in his speech at St. Louis declared—that if no agreement could be reached between the nations of the world limiting armaments, then we must build a navy equal in strength to any in the world.

You were but carrying out that policy in the August, 1916, bill, and yet, in providing for that large Navy, you announced an earnest desire that the nations of the world should meet and agree upon a limitation of armament, both on land and sea, and the bill of 1916 carried an appropriation of $200,000 to cover the expenses of delegates to a conference of the nations of the world, to be assembled on invitation of your President at the conclusion of the European war, for the purpose of considering and submitting recommendations looking to that end to their respective governments.

And now, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] well says, we are met with this interesting situation: Our representatives are in conference at Versailles, France, with representatives from the great nations of the world to consider this very matter, and no one will claim that our President is embarrassed on account of his declaration made at St. Louis in 1916, long before we entered the war, and which he has steadfastly adhered to since that time. In sending a wire to the Secretary of the Navy urging what he recommended to Congress before he went overseas he is but continuing to insist on a building program which he first declared for in February, 1916. He then, as now, coupled it with the further statements that authority should be given to discontinue all naval construction inconsistent with any international agreement that might be made looking to disarmament. Certainly there is here nothing inconsistent in the position of the President. No one can or will construe his speech of February, 1916, and his continuous insistence of the policy there announced as a threat.

Let me suggest that it might be misunderstood if the Congress should now refuse to provide for an increase of the Navy, pursuant to the policy announced in the naval bill of August, 1916, and continuously recommended by the President.

Certainly a review of these facts makes it clear why the President, without being misunderstood by any nation, continues to urge what he recommended in February, 1916, at St. Louis, to wit, "incomparably the most adequate Navy in the world."

Some have asserted that the President entertained different views prior to February, 1916; so did many Members of the House. I recall that the distinguished leader of the minority changed his mind on this subject overnight in a garden, and others suffered changes just as sudden. Few there are in the House, looking back over the legislation for the past 10 years, who can now claim that they have during such time not changed their views upon many great questions.

In conclusion let me say that the committee has thought it wise, in providing for this new building program, since it is consistent with the views held by the President and consistent with the position taken by Congress in the August, 1916, bill, to likewise insert in this bill the provision known as the Hensley amendment. We have not inserted the provision in full, as I read it a few minutes ago, but in that form it remains unrepealed in the bill of 1916, and carries an appropriation of $200,000 to cover the expense of assembling delegates to consider the question of submitting all differences and disputes between nations to an international tribunal and to submit recommendations for limitation of armaments.

Can there now be any possible misunderstanding of the President's position or the position of Congress on this important matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I repeat, can there now be any misunderstanding of the policy of Congress or the purpose and desire of the President as to disarmament? In a recent speech before the French House of Deputies the President gave utterance to this far-reaching and important statement:

> The nations of the world are about to consummate a brotherhood which will make it unnecessary in the future to maintain those crushing armaments which make the people suffer almost as much in peace as they suffered in war.

My friends, what have you and I, since the passage of the bill in August, 1916, done to bring about what we there announced was the declared policy of Congress in reference to universal disarmament? The one man and the one organization that has done more to uphold the hands of the President in this matter is none other than an ex-President of the United States, Mr. Taft [applause], and the American League of Nations to Enforce Peace, of which Mr. Taft is president. This league is now holding meetings—North, East, South, and West—to declare their firm support of what you announced to be the national policy in the August, 1916, bill, and which policy the President has at all times consistently stood for, and which was the actuating reason of his trip overseas, that he might exert every effort to secure what you strongly declared for in the August, 1916, bill.

Let no one for a moment suggest, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] did this morning, that the President of the United States, who has consistently stood for an insuperably great Navy since February, 1916, and who has consistently since that date urged disarmament, and is now doing more than any other living individual to accomplish it, is seeking to use the building program provided for in the present bill as a bluff. The nations of Europe understand the position of the President and can not be misled.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Why does he want it?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Why did he want it in February, 1916?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Why does he want it now?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Do you subscribe to the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey, made yesterday, that when you learn Great Britain needs help to build more ships then you might be willing to authorize more?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. OLIVER of Alabama was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Under leave to extend I herewith set out some data showing that most of the international conferences after a great war have lasted a long time:

> The congress of Westphalia: The treaty decided upon at this congress, signed in 1648, brought to a conclusion the Thirty Years' War, which began in 1618. This was a dynastic war and was brought to a close by the exhaustion of all concerned. The peace treaty is said to have settled the question of religious liberty at that time. The revocation of the edict of Nantes followed. Small States were numerous in the congress and their presence made every step cumbrous. One congress for peace was first proposed, and under negotiations in 1636 mutual agreements to meet being signed on July 22, 1641, the imperial delegates appeared on July 11, 1643, and the ratifications of the treaties were exchanged in February, 1649, 13 years from their first inception. Though the peace of Westphalia directly affected only the relations of the German States inter se, and with the immediate neighbors, France and Sweden, no European power was absent from the congress, except England, Poland, Russia, and Turkey; and even at this the Kings of England and Poland and the Grand Duke of Muscovy, as allies of one or the other of the belligerent powers, were included in the treaty of Osnabruck.

The congress of Utrecht: This was begun in the fall of 1711. The last treaty provided for in its sessions, from January 20, 1712, to April 11, 1713, were not signed till November 15, 1715, a period of nearly four years. The colonial supremacy of the English-speaking folk was established, and it put an end to the war of the Spanish successors.

The congress of Berlin: This met June 13, 1878, and adjourned in a month, July 13, its work done in a single treaty. Six great powers decided all matters, these England, France, Italy, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia, while four small powers, interested in the result, were not represented, these Greece, Montenegro, Serbia, and Roumania. This congress settled territorial questions in Eastern Europe after the Russo-Turkish War. Turkey had refused to accept suggestions for future government of her Balkan possessions made by the six powers. At the Constantinople conference (Germany, Austria-Hungary, France, Great Britain, Italy, and Russia) Russia declared war.

The congress of Vienna: This was in session from September, 1814, to June, 1815. It readjusted the map of Europe after Napoleonic wars and was participated in by all the European powers except Turkey. It was called to make arrangements for carrying out the stipulations of the treaty of peace, known as the treaty of Paris, signed May 30, 1814. The congress never met as a body, but worked through two committees, one of which had charge of general European matters, and was composed of representatives of the great powers and of Spain, while the other, composed of representatives from Austria, Prussia, Hanover, Bavaria, and Wurtemburg, had particular charge of German affairs.

The principal questions before the congress were the claims of Russia and Prussia, and at one time war seemed imminent between the two eastern and three western powers. The main results of the negotiations were as follows:

The bulk of the Duchy of Warsaw was awarded to Russia as the Kingdom of Poland; Cracow was made a neutral republic; Prussia received West Prussia, Posen, the northern half of Saxony, and the bulk of the Provinces of the Rhine and Westphalia; Hanover was enlarged and made into a kingdom; Bavaria was compensated for her losses; and a territorial commission for the settlement of the boundary disputes between the German States was established at Frankfort, where it sat until 1819, and Germany was reorganized as a confederation of 39 States. Austria received back most of the territory lost by her in the wars with France and was compensated in Germany, Italy, and Illyria for the loss of Belgium. France lost additional towns and districts to Prussia, Bavaria, and the Netherlands and Sardinia as a result of Waterloo. Belgium, Holland, and Luxemburg were united to form the Kingdom of the Netherlands. Norway and Sweden were united. Finally, England retained Cape Colony and Ceylon, Mauritius, Helgoland, and Malta.

Versailles and Frankfort on the Main: In the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 negotiations began at Versailles in January, 1871, and peace was signed at Frankfort on the Main on May 10, 1871, France ceding Alsace-Lorraine, Metz, and Strassburg and a war indemnity of $1,000,000,000. France was occupied by German troops until the indemnity was paid. On January 18, 1871, at Versailles, William, King of Prussia, was proclaimed Emperor of Germany.

Spanish-American War: Protocol signed August 13, 1898, stipulated for the surrender by Spain of all claims of sovereignty over Cuba, the cession to the United States of Porto Rico and an island in the Ladrones, and for the occupation of the city and bay of Manila by the United States forces. The treaty was negotiated at Paris and signed December 10, 1898, and ratified by the Senate February 9, 1899, and signed by Queen Regent March 17.

Russo-Japanese War: At invitation of President Roosevelt representatives of Russia and Japan met at Portsmouth, N. H., in August, 1905, and signed a treaty of peace on September 5, 1905.

The Crimean War was concluded by the treaty of Paris of 1856. The treaty was made by the five great powers of that period and Sardinia and Turkey. Russia was on one side; France, England, Turkey, and Sardinia on the other. It lasted from 1853 to 1856. It was a congress treaty made between powers some of which had not been at war, and Russia, which on the whole was the vanquished party, made a cession of territory.

The American Revolution: The peace treaty between Great Britain and the United States was signed in Paris; referred to sometimes as the treaty of Paris and also as the treaty of Versailles. The congress lasted from November 30, 1782, to September 3, 1783. This was a treaty of the recognition of the independence of the United States of America and not of future stipulations. On November 25, 1783, the British forces were withdrawn from New York.

The treaty of Ghent: This brought to a close the War of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain. The conference lasted from August 6, 1814, to December 24, 1814. In it is the interesting stipulation that Great Britain shall come to terms with the warring Indian tribes and a declaration against the slave trade.

Spanish-American War: This was brought to a close by the treaty of Paris of 1898, thus recording the conquests made by the United States, Spain ceding what she had lost—Porto Rico, Guam, and the Philippine Islands. As to Cuba, Spain relinquished its sovereignty, with the provision that the United States should occupy the island temporarily and protect life and property.

The Balkan Wars: These wars were ended by the treaty of London, the conference lasting from December 16, 1912, to May 30, 1913.

Mr. POU. I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas how many more speeches there will be on that side?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We shall probably have two or three more.

Mr. POU. Will not the gentleman use some of his time now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not see the gentlemen who were asking for time.

Mr. POU. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I propose to briefly discuss the so-called "increase of the Navy" program from the standpoint of one who favored it both before and after the famous cablegram from the President.

The principal reason for the sensation caused by this message from the Commander in Chief to the Secretary of the Navy is the mystery that has accompanied it, and also, perhaps, the Heaven-sent opportunity for the newspaper men to make a good story. A plain statement of the facts will remove misunderstanding and clear the air.

Carrying out the policy adopted three years ago of planning for the Navy several years ahead instead of the haphazard, uncertain, and jerky plan of annual authorizations of one or more ships, as Congress might vote, it became necessary the first of this session to consider another three-year program. The Secretary of the Navy made a recommendation of 156 ships, large and small, based, however, largely on the pre-armistice situation. This, after consultation with the committee and, presumably, with the distinguished experts who are heads of bureaus, was subsequently reduced to 20. There was some disagreement in the committee over this, as is well known. Some suggested that, as there might be an arrangement made to abolish war or reduce armaments, we had better not authorize any ships. Others thought it wiser to go ahead with a reasonable program and cut it off when world conditions were definitely changed and the papers signed. It was recalled that the President in his address to the Congress at the opening of the session had strongly and specifically urged the continuance of the three years' building program, and this was his language:

"I take it for granted that the Congress will carry out the naval program which was undertaken before we entered the war. The Secretary of the Navy has submitted to your committee for authorization that part of the program which covers the building plans for the next three years. These plans have been prepared along the lines and in accordance with the policy which the Congress established, not under the exceptional conditions of the war, but with the intention of adhering to a definite method of development for the Navy. I earnestly recommend the uninterrupted pursuit of that policy. It would clearly be unwise for us to attempt to adjust our programs to a future world policy as yet undetermined."

The question naturally arose as to whether the President had seen anything in Europe to cause him to change his mind. Nobody knew. Doubtless the Secretary of the Navy was aware of our attitude, and it seems he, on his own initiative, desiring to help us, and, as I believe, desiring to help the country at the same time, wired the President, saying that the committee was hesitating about bringing out a three-year program, thinking that developments over there might have changed the situation and obviated the necessity for it, and asking him if he adhered to his recommendation of December 2. The President wired back to the Secretary that he had learned nothing to change his mind and considered it more important than ever. These two messages were sent up to us by the Secretary and read aloud by the chairman. There was nothing more in the messages. No facts were given. No reasons mentioned. Nothing more is known by us. You, gentlemen, know all that I do about it, and I was present at all meetings of the committee when this matter was considered.

There is nothing in this much-advertised incident of the cablegram to cause any open-minded man to oppose this measure. The President gave his opinion when asked to. His opinion should and does carry more weight than that of any other American, because he occupies a unique position. He has a viewpoint from a position occupied by himself alone. His opinion did not change my views, as I was for the program before, nor do I believe it changed the views of a majority of the committee for the same reason, but it was considered of such importance by some patriotic members of the committee that they subordinated their personal views to what they regarded as the best interests of the country, and I honor them for it.

So it happens that the President, the Secretary of the Navy, and the entire committee all feel the same way about this matter. They may be all wrong. It may be wise to decline to authorize any continuation of the naval program heretofore established. It may be wrong to provide for the further building of ships after these now under construction are finished, but I do not believe it, and I do not think in planning stringent economy we should begin with the defenses of the country.

I favor a large and powerful American Navy—not so large as Great Britain's, because I can not conceive the possibility of trouble in the future between the English-speaking peoples which will require a fight to settle it—and I believe that from now on our job in the world is the same as hers; but it is at least interesting to recall that within the memory of men in this House the two nations have been twice on the verge of war. Great Britain must of necessity have the most powerful navy for purposes of defense. Her empire embraces nearly one-fourth of the land area of the globe and approximately one-fourth of the population and is scattered all over the world. Forty millions of her home people dwell on a little island which can not produce enough to feed them. They could not sleep nights if they were not positively sure that her lanes of commerce were always open for the bringing in of food and raw materials by her mighty merchant marine.

We also must have a navy commensurate with our needs and our responsibilities—large enough to protect our interests in any situation possible to arise.

We came out of the Spanish War a world power. We come out of this war the world power. We can hardly avoid the world responsibilities which go with it.

It is the announced policy of the Government, and I think a very wise one, hereafter to divide our fleet equally between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, to have exactly the same number and weight of ships on one coast as on the other.

Our military sea frontier, which once simply went down one coast and up the other, now begins at Eastport, in the district I have the honor to represent, and extends to the Panama Canal, to Guam, to the Philippines, to the islands of Alaska, and thence back to continental America.

Our merchant marine, the lack of which was so wicked in this war, is about to expand and resume its proper place in the world. The development of defense by mines, submarines, and airplanes, in the opinion of thoughtful observers, has in no wise diminished the importance of a fleet. The battleship is the only force that will insure the keeping open of our sea frontiers and sea bases. We can not fortify every mile of our coast lines; it is easier to have a mobile naval force to protect them.

We can fortify at the entrance to our big cities, but the enemy may be mean enough not to go in that way. It is now well established—verified from different sources—that Germany perfected plans years ago, whenever she should attack this country, to effect a landing on the shores of Frenchmans Bay, in the State of Maine, fortify the beautiful hills which surround it, establish a base, land troops, and sweep westward through the helpless country, and come down to Boston and New York from the north. On the day war was declared between Germany and Great Britain the fast German liner Kronprinzcssin Cecile—constructed to be transferred immediately into a war vessel and later used by us as the transport Mount Vernon—was four days out from New York filled with passengers and freight, including a large amount of gold. At the first click of the wireless announcing "the day" had come, her commander, an officer in the German Navy, opened his sealed orders which had been on board for years, and headed straight for Bar Harbor in Frenchmans Bay, there to wait and join a possible German force later. Nothing prevented this landing but the presence on the ocean of the American and British battleships—principally the British.

So long as we held control of the sea Germany could not win. If we had lost that, the war would have been over in a minute.

Many things—our responsibilities in this hemisphere, our participation in affairs abroad, the unsettled conditions in the world—demand a continuance of our naval power.

All the reasons that ever existed for a Navy exist now except one, the possibility growing out of a league of nations, and we have provided for that in the bill.

I see no inconsistency in trying to get a league of nations and planning for a Navy at the same time. We only plan for the Navy in case we do not get the league.

But gentlemen say, "Whom are we going to fight?" We will not have to fight anybody if we are well prepared. We would not have been in this war if we had been ready. More peace surrounds a bulldog than a black-and-tan.

Germany for the time is down and out. Other Germanys, other combinations against the peace of the world, may arise. A quite possible event at the moment is a combination of Russian and German Bolshevism and its spreading like a fire in a dry forest.

We can spring to arms quicker than we can spring to battleships, and without battleships arms are no good.

But gentlemen say this program for the increase of the Navy is too big. Let us look at it from a business point of view. There is no politics in it, anyway.

It is proposed for the next three-year program to dovetail into this one the eventual construction of 10 battleships, as good ones as anybody has, and 10 comparatively small scout cruisers. If things go along well we finish these ships in 1926. Do you know how many of our present battleships will be ready to retire by that time? Twenty-three. By then all the ships of mixed caliber—meaning by this ships having both large and medium sized guns—will be out of date. Twenty years is substantially the life of one of these complicated machines in anywhere near its full usefulness. In case of urgent necessity they may be used in the back lines, as was the old Oregon in this war, but after that they are principally useful to look at. When they become obsolete they are a liability and not an asset. A modern ship can hold a position just outside the range of an old one and pound her to pieces with no more danger to herself than if she were attending a Sunday-school picnic. At the Battle of Santiago the New York just was not in the fight at 7 miles away. Admiral Plunkett told our committee that the 14-inch naval guns he took abroad could drop shells on Germans 23 miles off, and those shells were just as troublesome after they arrived as if they had only traveled a mile. To be sure they were fired on land, but our sea ranges have increased greatly in 20 years.

We propose, then, to substitute for 23 battleships, by that time obsolete, 10 battleships of the best we can build—and that means the best in the world. We shall have put out of the line a total of 308,146 tons and put in 420,000. I ask you if that so far is an unbusinesslike or an improper thing to do?

The rest of the program is 10 scout cruisers. They do not take the place of anything, but there is an urgent independent reason for them. We have been deficient in these vessels for some time. We have three small ones, of only about 23 or 24 knot speed, and practically obsolete.

The lessons of this war have strongly impressed naval men with the importance of these vessels. They are the eyes of the fleet, and to make it most efficient we must have them if nothing else is done. They add only 70,000 tons to the Navy, but they are highly important tons on account of the speed with which our American ingenuity will be able to carry them through the water.

So long as we have a Navy it should be well balanced. We got top-heavy with destroyers during this war. I do not count Eagle boats, which Mr. Ford was to build and which, I understand, will not float, or some little matter of that sort, but good, reliable American destroyers, such as we produced in record time to meet this emergency. These vessels did magnificent service and we want to keep them. I was told in Queenstown last summer that 25 of our destroyers were admitted by British officers to be equal to 30 of theirs. Incidentally we were shown an American destroyer in the harbor of Queenstown which was said to be the best destroyer ever built, and I am proud to say that she was built and launched in record time at Bath, Me. Useful vessels like this, new and effective, we want to keep. When heavy vessels are built it is necessary to provide a lot of small ones to go with them. In this case we will not have to. The Navy will be rounded out better by having these heavier ships.

I am confident that anyone who believes in keeping up a reasonably strong navy will consider that a program which when worked out at the end of six or seven years will result in substituting 10 good battleships for 23 obsolete ones and adding 10 scout cruisers of only 7,000 tons each, badly needed, is not an unreasonable one.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When did I understand the gentleman to say that the new program would be completed?

Mr. PETERS. In 1926 or 1927.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. PETERS. But the question is asked, Why should we authorize them till we finish the ships now being built?

In all probability the next naval bill will be passed in the summer of 1920. If we put off this authorization till then, the department can hardly get to work on the program till the following year. It is in the interest of economy and efficiency, and it is highly desirable from a business point of view, that the department should know more in advance what its construction program is going to be. Any manufacturer who runs his business prudently and who has $400,000,000 worth of work in sight wants to know when it is coming several years in advance. The building of warships does not begin when the keel is laid. A very large part of the work comes before that. The present ships will be well beyond their first stages of construction by the time the new program can be taken up. The means employed to carry the construction of the first ships to the laying of the keel can be turned right over to the new program and dovetail in without lost motion. Many private yards now building torpedo boats will complete them before 1921, and the Government desires to use them for some of these new vessels without a gap. It will be expensive for the Government in both money and time if the yards have to stop work and shut down or get started on other construction. The work on the present program is so far advanced that it is in the interest of economy, efficiency, and speedy results for the Bureau of Construction to know now whether the Government will adopt this program.

This program is said to be expensive, and we must economize. That, of course, is true. It will cost four hundred millions, spread over six or seven years. We are now spending about three hundred millions per year for new construction, and that will be true during 1919. After that, and with this program added, expenditures on new work will dwindle down to about one hundred millions per year, which should be about normal, unless conditions largely change.

If we can not afford this program, then we must stop. Everyone must decide this for himself. In my individual judgment, we can not afford to stop.

There is no bluff about this program, as I see it. Neither does it mean the biggest Navy in the world by any means. It is a businesslike addition to a business Navy.

I am not in favor of a huge Navy. I am opposed to emulating Great Britain. I do not believe we should strive for the greatest Navy in the world. I do not think we should build a Navy because any other power wants us to or expects us to; nor do I think we should refrain from building up a Navy because any other power objects. [Applause.] This is our Navy and our own family row, and we will settle it among ourselves.

I have great admiration for the seamanlike qualities of a high-ranking admiral who testified before us, but no respect for his judgment when it comes to assigning reasons for this increase. We will not make this addition because other nations expect it or because some of them are busy and will ask no questions. We do not want to build a Navy when other people are not looking—we want to build it when they are looking. [Applause.] The principal usefulness of a navy is in being seen. When they see we have one, nothing else happens.

I believe that the traditional naval policy of this country, our growing maritime interests, our increasing responsibilities in the world, our lengthened sea frontiers, good business judgment, as well as the glorious record of our Navy in every war we have undertaken, all cry out for the adoption of this program. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, since I have had the honor of a seat in the Congress of the United States I have voted always for the largest Navy program available. I still favor a large Navy for the United States. I live on the north Pacific coast and should favor it, and I do favor it; but I find that this Government, under its war-emergency program of 1916, is building a large Navy, a larger Navy authorized by the Congress than it can complete and turn out in twice the three years allotted for it. That program is what makes this very naval appropriation bill carry the great total of $7,500,000,000—on toward eight billions of dollars. All Members of Congress know that this very day the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Glass, has stated that he is coming to Congress for an authorization for another bond issue and a new credit issue to a total of $20,000,000,000. This House will adjourn shortly, and all of the Members will go to their respective districts, where, of course, they will take part in the floating of the victory loan. You will find it harder work than the selling of previous bond issues, and you will be asked about the present great naval program and also about this proposed paper program. It will be well to know all about both; and why? No Member need think that he will be called, or can honestly be called, a small Navy man if he votes against this proposed paper program. Why? Because when you vote the money to go ahead with the 1916 program you are continuing a great Navy program.

THE PRESENT NAVAL PROGRAM.

For fear that we forget what this 1916 program is, I desire to tell you just what it is. Members should bear this in mind, because they will be asked in their districts about it. According to the report of Admiral Taylor, the 1916 three-year program, calling for 10 battleships, 6 battle cruisers, and 10 scout cruisers, was, on the 1st day of February, 1919, as follows:

None of those 10 battleships have been completed; 6 are zero done. They are being designed, and, while contracts have been let, no construction has been undertaken.

Four are from 5 to 40 per cent completed on the ways.

The six cruisers are not yet being built. They are being designed, and some contracts for material have been let, but no keel has been laid.

The 10 scout cruisers are from zero to 25 per cent finished. According to Admiral Taylor, of the 1916 program the first battleship could be completed in 18 months, and the last of that program, which would be the battle cruiser, the most complicated in design and the most difficult to build, would not be finished until five years from date.

The total amount expended on the 1916 three-year program on December 1 was, roughly, $113,000,000. The amount necessary to complete the program from beginning to end is, roughly, estimated at $815,000,000. We have appropriated, including the amount expended of $113,000,000, about $240,000,000, leaving appropriations necessary to carry the program to completion $575,000,000, roughly.

On February 1 we had 85 submarines in service, 73 building, and 9 authorized. On that same date we had 112 destroyers in service, 212 building, and 12 authorized.

Those figures are taken from the statements of Admiral Taylor, as presented to the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]. You see there is a stiff warship program under way. It can not be finished for years. Our present Navy will be placed on both oceans. The new ships will be put on both coasts.

The meaning of the cryptic cablegrams between the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States are not quite clear, but the real meaning of all this paper program is that if we authorize it, even with a string tied to it, our admiralty will see that we keep at the enlarged program. The result will be that other nations will be building great ships of commerce, and we will be putting countless millions into warships and cruisers.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the state of the finances of the United States and the necessity for raising great sums of money, together with the fact that many of the depository banks of the United States throughout the country have during the past year and are now largely overdrawn upon by the Government, should make the Members of this Congress pause in this and all other appropriations. The figures are startling. We will have to raise billions per year for many years to come by taxation and bonds. Oh, gentlemen, when we know that no great power which is likely within the lifetime of any man on this floor to come to blows with the United States is in a financial condition to greatly extend its warship-building program, why should the United States propose even a paper program, thus to take the initiative that may make other nations build? Every mail brings complaints about these appropriations, about taxation, and about the cost of living. When will Members come to a realization of the fact that if we Congressmen vote billions after the war the people must pay the billions. The tax is passed on. Stop, or we will soon go far beyond the ability of the United States to collect the taxes and pay. I am most sincere. I stand for a great Navy, but I protest against a wild, extravagant plan at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel it essential that I state the fact that I have always been in favor of the most adequate and the largest Navy that has been proposed in any measure since I have been a Member of this House. I do not think that my attitude with reference to this rule or with reference to the proposed authority of the naval bill will reflect upon my desire that this Nation shall always have an adequate Navy. The proposition is submitted to this body, however, under very peculiar circumstances, and it is laid before the membership of this House at a time when the proposed program is out of harmony with the avowed aspirations of the people and out of harmony with the purpose for which we entered the war. There has grown up in America during the progress of this war, I think, the most magnificent national spirit that any nation has ever had. It is a spirit founded in ideals, a spirit in part prompted by one who is more of a dreamer than he is concerned with the practical affairs of life, but it is a spirit in which the United States placed all that it had in the world in the way of men and money to make a better world of this and a safer place for men to live in, a spirit that was beautifully stated by one who spoke of our boys in France as the representatives of the Nation that would return from the shores of that wonderful country with their hands as empty as they were when they went there, the spirit of the people who ask nothing for themselves. Now that the war is over and after more than 50,000 of the soldiers that were sent abroad are sleeping in the soil of France, after we have accomplished the purpose which we set out to accomplish, we find proposed in this body not peace terms that will crystallize our purpose in this war, but a measure that will mean a contest between the two nations that by race and language and tradition are natural allies. It is not a proposal that looks to permanent and perpetual peace, but is a proposal which looks to a contest between England and America as to which shall become the most warlike upon the sea. This thing we do is absolutely out of harmony with every avowed purpose of the United States when it entered into this contest and out of harmony with the ideals of the people of America when the contest was concluded.

Upon what ground are we asked to make this tremendous authorization? Not by anything that places in your possession and mine the facts that would justify this, but a cablegram that is spoken of in hushed terms around this Capitol, that is whispered among the favored few who are permitted to see it, not a cablegram that gives the facts upon which you may arrive at a conclusion, but merely a cablegram that gives the conclusion of the one who sends it from the shores of another country. Before I would be willing to authorize a program that would fasten an indebtedness by way of taxation of $7.50 upon every man, woman, and child in the country I want to know the facts that justify it. I wonder if Members realize where we are drifting? I wish that the President would come home. I wish that the President, instead of occupying a summit beyond and above the ordinary affairs of life with his eyes fastened on the stars, dreaming of a Utopia and a short cut to the millennium, would look down into the shadow and see what is going on beneath.

Do you realize that the appropriations and the expenditures of this country in the next year, with the utmost economy, will aggregate more than a billion of dollars a month? Do you realize that with the tremendous expenditures which we are facing that we ought to economize to the last degree and provide only for those things that are absolutely essential in the present condition? How are you going to raise this money? By bonds and taxation. Every man who is at all familiar with taxation knows that, without regard to the manner in which you safeguard the measure, most of it ultimately becomes a consumption tax. The other day before one of the committees of the House Mr. Armour said that his excess-profits tax had amounted to $6,000,000 in the last year, and when asked if that was pushed on to the consumer he replied that it was probably so. Do you know that the merchant in the smaller communities, fearful that he will buy on a falling market, is refusing to buy, and that the jobber is refusing to load up for fear of loss, and that as a result of that the manufacturers are working short-handed; that idle men and men out of employment are already on the streets of our great cities? Do you realize when you demobilize the Army that we have now that you are adding to the unemployment? Go ahead with your idle dreams of universal brotherhood at a cost of $750,000,000 for this unnecessary program. Follow it out in the appropriations to carry it into effect, then levy your taxes, increase the consumption tax, make higher the cost of living, and place it upon the men who are walking in idleness the streets of America to-day, and you have a condition in this country that, so far as I am concerned, creates great apprehension. [Applause.] The Bolsheviki is not a disease. He is a symptom. He is the product of a condition, and the only way to treat him is not by treating the symptom but by removing the condition. Do not strike at its product instead of removing the condition. By this measure you are aggravating the condition. Oh, well, we have the idealist dreaming of that Utopia where there shall be universal brotherhood, of a condition in which the irritating problems of race and creed and national aspirations shall all be done away with by a mere formula, by somebody writing in a peace treaty that there shall be no more war. You may proceed along that line, gentlemen, but just so sure as you continue this wasteful extravagance, just so sure as you make these unnecessary authorizations for naval expenditures of millions of dollars, you are adding to a condition that to my mind creates more apprehension to-day than any other condition that confronts the American people. I have never been very sympathetic with this league of nations. Of course, we all want universal peace. Of course, we want war done away with. I would like to do away with it, but I can not help but be conscious of the frailities of mankind and the fact that more than 3,000 peace treaties have been agreed to in the history of this world, and that every one of them recited that the ultimate purpose of the treaty was to insure universal and perpetual peace. And wars still continue. I do not believe that the greatest navy in the world is essential to American life. I do believe that we should have less of dreams and more of good, common, horse sense in the administration of the affairs of this country. [Applause.] I believe, still further, that we should go to work and encompass a peace with Germany, that we should close up this war by making Germany powerless so far as threatening against the peace of this earth. I believe instead of waiting three months along the line of a league of nations and universal peace we should close up the war which we have been fighting. [Applause.] And I do not believe that before we have done that that we should be consuming our energy, consuming our time, and creating tremendous expenses preparing for a war with an ally rather than closing up a peace with an enemy. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point. It is apparent a quorum is present in the lobbies and cloakrooms.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, if you saw a man with whom you had an issue at stake get a gun you would proceed to get one. In this instance we serve notice on all the world that we expect and arrange for a broad platform of preparation for naval warfare. This is a direct challenge to every Government on earth to see who can build the most warships. There never was a more ill-timed, ungainly, unfortunate, threatening, menacing firebrand thrown into the arena of the world's activities than this. This is no time to threaten the nations of the world, all of whom are extending open and appealing hands to this great Republic which now stands at the summit of all the power and achievements that the world ever saw.

We have 4,000,000 of the best soldiers in the world, and we could almost dismiss them, put our ships out of commission, and be at peace and in no danger for 10 years; and yet they bring this proposition here. In the last analysis there is only one man to be consulted, and that is the taxpayer who will bear this burden and whose sons are fighting these battles.

There are only two questions: One is, What will he put in it? And the other is, What will he get out of it?

He put in $30,000,000,000 and the lives of 100,000 and the services of 4,000,000 sons. He gets glory, honor, and a good fight for a just cause, gallantly won. But he must get more: He must have the knowledge he has set up forever the cross of Christ in place of the crown of Cæsar as the standard of civilization.

If he is to be forced immediately into arms and armaments—into spending $1,000,000,000 for iron ships to carry on wars—he has gained nothing, and all his sacrifices are in vain. We expended $30,000,000,000 that the great annual expenditures for military and naval appropriations might cease. Has our taxpayer bought a gold brick? How long is this cry for more money to waste to continue? Why not take these millions and crisscross this country with roads? Why not spend it redeeming waste lands for farms for soldiers? Why not divide it among those who risked their lives for us?

They tell us that we have $250,000,000,000 worth of property. Six per cent on that sum is $15,000,000,000. The Federal revenue bill this year asks for $6,000,000,000. The State, city, and municipal taxes will be $4,000,000,000 more. That is $10,000,000,000. Of your $15,000,000,000 income on your investment two-thirds goes for taxation. We will be forced to borrow $5,000,000,000 more. And yet men come here asking for what? What are you going to get out of it? When this war began the Germans lined their coasts with submarines and mines, and the greatest Navy in the world never went near them. You say that we should build great ships of war to defend New York and the Panama Canal. You can protect our coasts with mines and submarines as easily as the Germans protected theirs with submarines and mines.

Mr. BAER. Did the German Navy get near the British Navy?

Mr. LITTLE. No. It did not get near it. It was just as afraid of submarines as the English were. Britain had twice the fleet Germany possessed, yet it never ventured within a hundred miles of the German coast, fearing submarines and mines, and the gentleman inquires whether the German fleet assailed the English coast. What is he driving at? What point is there to such a suggestion? If the Germans had no fleet their coast would have been just as well protected. The English fleet squatted in harbor behind great steel nets for fear some little submarine would poke its nose in among them and sink $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 worth of battleships by losing $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 worth of submarines. The gentleman is hardly in earnest. Let us conclude that he broached in jest.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will, later.

Mr. CALDWELL. Just a short question.

Mr. LITTLE. I am awfully short of time myself.

Not one of the big ships ever dared to venture to sea unless it had a free track home. The only way the transports got across was not by the protection of any English Navy, but by fleet pairs of heels.

What are you getting out of it? If you put your money into submarines you would have $500,000,000 invested, and you would have 500 submarines, and there would not be a warship in the world that would ever dare to go out to sea unless it had investigated thoroughly and knew that there was not a submarine in sight. As long as a man is in danger he will fight and hit below the belt, and the first nation that will get into trouble will build submarines.

It is all nonsense to talk about abolishing submarines, my friends. What is the argument in favor of this plan in the bill? Not a thing on earth except a mystic utterance here that nobody understands. Whenever a Greek politician got into hot water he appealed to the oracle at Delphos. Once informed as to the advice desired, the prophecy sought floated out in mystic profundity as readily as the limpid waters sprang from the desert rock that Moses smote. Mr. Daniels was in trouble, and he invoked the Delphic oracle of America, and it gave forth an utterance which he says means more ships. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] read it and says that it does not mean that. We are just as competent as anybody to pass upon the evidence produced, if the taxpayers select good Congressmen, and if we have to pass upon anything else we would be recreant in our duty. One man has as good a right to interpret the oracle as another. I interpret it to have intended submarines and mines—and, anyway, the oracle business all went into the discard at the November election. Said the Roman Emperor, when his general returned from the German forests, "Quintus Varus, what hast thou done with my legions?" Gentlemen of the House, the taxpayers will demand of you why, at a time like this, you spend a billion dollars of our money on iron pots that submarines can sink as fast as they catch them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if this bill shall pass without the proposed authorization, it will carry appropriations for the maintenance and increase of the Navy to the extent of nearly $750,000,000, which I believe is the largest sum ever appropriated in time of peace by any nation of the world for the maintenance and increase of its navy. And that of itself is a sufficient answer to those who would say that such here as oppose the proposed authorization are not in favor of a sufficiently large Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have heard but two arguments in favor of the proposed authorization. One is that a cablegram came from the President; the other is that it is the duty of this country to provide a Navy as large as the navy of Great Britain. I do not take the cablegram from the President too seriously. There are two ways in which it may be looked at. First, that the Navy officials, whose duty it always is to extend their power and the power of the Navy—and that is true of all branches of the Government service—asked the Secretary of the Navy to cable to the President for help while the naval bill was before the House. And the President, complying with the request of the Secretary of the Navy, cables back that, in his opinion, the proposed authorization should be granted. That is not to be considered very seriously. The President of the United States, a wonderful man, in a great position, still does not know all there is, and it is not his place to determine the appropriations which shall be made. That is our responsibility. We must act upon facts. We passed many an appropriation for the war at the mere suggestion of the Executive, but now that we have arrived at the point of peace it is time for us, when we make an appropriation, to know the reasons for the appropriation itself, and not act merely because some one in the executive department of the Government, even the President himself, thinks it ought to be granted.

Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested on both sides of the House, sometimes in the public discussion, more often in private conversation, that the President desires this authorization as a threat to force other nations to agree to its policies at the peace table. I do not know whether there is anything to that or not. But certainly if the President has reasons for desiring a great Navy he ought to give the reasons to us. And I doubt whether, if this be a threat, it would be a successful one. What is the situation? Emerging from a war where all peoples desire, if possible, to provide some method by which wars may be avoided in the future, we now are confronted with the actual proposition of whether or not we shall at this time proceed with an enormous naval program. If it be a threat, it is directed at Great Britain.

Gentlemen here have stated that we must never rely upon the Navy of Great Britain, and yet this bill itself does rely upon the Navy of Great Britain, because if this authorization be suspended by the President the Navy of Great Britain will still far overtop ours, and you propose to allow the President to suspend the authorization. And those who say that they desire the Navy of this country larger than that of Great Britain can not afford to vote for a proposition permitting the President to suspend its construction.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the President will be successful in his aspirations for a league of nations, which will, through orderly and peaceful methods, prevent the settlement of disputes in the future by war. But I do not believe that before the peace is agreed upon, before the terms have been arrived at, that the proper way to secure peace in the future is for the Congress of the United States to say, "We propose to have a Navy large enough to lick the rest of the world." [Applause.] If Congress agrees to this authorization and the President uses it at the peace table, it will be used elsewhere. If we agree to this authorization, the report will go throughout the world that the United States of America proposes to enter upon a contest with Great Britain as to which nation shall have the largest and most powerful navy.

And every German in Germany and some elsewhere will say, "The allies, now that peace has come, commence to quarrel among themselves and prepare for future contests between themselves." That will be the gladdest piece of news that has leaked into Germany for many a day.

Mr. Speaker, we can afford to suspend the authorization for the future until peace has been entered into and we know where we stand. Can we afford, on the other hand, to borrow money now for an increased authorization of the Navy? We can not pay the expenses of the Government next year out of the tax bill which will soon become a law. Do we propose to increase the taxes or do we propose in time of peace to borrow money to build a Navy or do other work in that direction? We can not do it out of the revenues which come from the present law or the present bill. Will we undertake, just as we have had a war and are emerging into peace, to say that we propose to increase the tax burdens or borrow money in order that we may now, as we emerge into peace, enter into a contest as to who shall have the greatest navy in the world, and then perhaps go upon the theory that we will have war with Great Britain? Let us for a moment believe that after this war we may have peace for a few years and get ourselves settled back in our accustomed modes of business and life. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, how much time have we remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes remain on the gentleman's side and none on the other side.

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] one-half of the remaining time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for two minutes and a half.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to speak upon this rule and, of course, can compress nothing into two minutes and a half which will be adequate to meet the issue before us. I am in favor of passing the pending rule. If passed it would do nothing more than permit the House to debate and vote upon this exceedingly important question. The House should not be afraid of a full and fair discussion. It can not be led into doing anything wrong by merely hearing the truth from both sides.

This bill provides that—

No contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920.

It provides also that—

If at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for there shall have been established with the cooperation of the United States of America any tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments, then, and in that case, such naval expenditure as may be inconsistent with the engagements made by the establishments of said tribunal or tribunals may be suspended when so ordered by the President of the United States.

I again remind the House that if the bill should become a law no contracts for the construction of vessels therein authorized could be entered into prior to February 1, 1920—almost one year from now.

This seems to me to be a proposition very easily understood. Debating this rule, even passing the bill, would not bind, would not even permit, the United States to do anything before the 1st of February, 1920, not even so much as to enter into a contract. Long before that date the suggested tribunal will have been either established or not established. If such international tribunal shall be established—and I sincerely hope that it will be—then, of course, there will be no necessity of going on with this contemplated great navy. But if, as has been intimated by the papers, there are across the sea men in high place who are pronouncedly reactionary, and who wish it understood that the world has learned nothing through the awful four years of slaughter, but must go back to conditions as they were before the war, then it is well for the United States to take these precautionary steps, and to take them now. In any event it is wise now to adopt this rule and to listen to a fair discussion of the main proposition. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, just one word in conclusion. I would like to ask the membership of this House, Can you afford at this time to defeat this rule? Now, this I believe to be true—patriotism is just as great on one side of the aisle as it is on the other. The President has had the support of this House from the day of the declaration of war. This program comes here with a unanimous report from a Committee on Naval Affairs representing every phase of thought on the naval question. I submit that at this particular time the House of Representatives can not afford to take the responsibility of voting down this resolution.

This is no new question. Every President that I have served under has favored a big Navy—both Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt. Yes, Roosevelt, great American; sweet be his sleep. America will forever cherish his memory as a mother cherishes the memory of her own offspring. Those men always favored a big Navy.

I leave the question with the House, reminding you that having supported the President from the beginning of the war up to this good hour, we can not afford to take the responsibility of voting down this rule now. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the rule.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. POU. A division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the rule will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 148, answered "present" 3, not voting 73, as follows:

YEAS—205.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. TREADWAY.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. EMERSON.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. STRONG.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. HUSTED.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. MOORES of Indiana.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. BLAND of Indiana.

Mr. EAGLE with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. DENT with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. DELANEY with Mr. PLATT.

Mr. RAGSDALE with Mr. RAMSEYER.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia with Mr. RODENBERG.

Mr. HELM with Mr. ROWE.

Mr. LESHER with Mr. SIEGEL.

Mr. PARK with Mr. SWIFT.

Mr. SABATH with Mr. TILSON.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. TINKHAM.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania.

On this vote:

Mr. SMITH of Idaho (for) with Mr. LANGLEY (against).

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota (for) with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois (against).

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH (for) with Mr. LEHLBACH (against).

Mr. SULLIVAN (for) with Mr. COOPER of Ohio (against).

Mr. LEVER (for) with Mr. HAUGEN (against).

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "present." If I were not paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ESTOPINAL, I would vote "yea." I should like to announce that my colleague, Mr. COOPER of Ohio, is absent from the city. If he were present, he would vote against the rule and against the Padgett amendment, but would vote for the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HAUGEN, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. LEVER. I voted "yea," but I will withdraw my vote and vote "present," as I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HAUGEN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois for three days on account of important business.

THE OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a request of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SENATE, February 11, 1919.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill S. 3992, entitled "An act to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be returned to the Senate.

There was no objection.

MINING OF COAL, PHOSPHATE, GAS, ETC.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 30, with reference to bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain, in order to give another Senator authority to sign the name of Senator PHELAN, who has telegraphed his authority for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), that Hon. KEY PITTMAN, as one of the Senate managers, is hereby authorized to affix the name of JAMES D. PHELAN as one of the Senate managers to the conference report on bill S. 2812, entitled "An act to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain," under oral authority and by telegram requesting such action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, why the haste for jumping this in right after the adoption of the rule?

Mr. FERRIS. I am glad the gentleman from Massachusetts has asked the question. This bill has been three times passed by the House and has been the subject of debate for four or six years. It has been killed every time in the Senate until this time, and after a long period we have got a bill, but one of the Senators, Senator FALL, from New Mexico, is sick, and Senator PHELAN is absent on account of the death of his business manager; he telephoned Senator PITTMAN authorizing him to sign his name. Senator PITTMAN did sign the name of Senator PHELAN, but the question was raised as to his authority to do it. The Senate has passed the concurrent resolution authorizing Senator PITTMAN to sign for Senator PHELAN.

Mr. WALSH. Have all the other conferees signed?

Mr. FERRIS. All but one; all five of the House conferees have signed.

Mr. MANN. Not all but one.

Mr. FERRIS. No; one is sick.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I asked unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I proposed yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The situation is this: The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] had offered an amendment. Then the gentleman from Minnesota offered an amendment to the amendment. The immediate matter before the committee is the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The rule which has been adopted by the House makes the legislation that is found on pages 53 and a part of 54 in the bill in order. The first two paragraphs of that legislation on page 53 have been stricken out on a point of order. An amendment has been offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. If that amendment is withdrawn, will it then be in order for the gentleman from Tennessee to offer as an amendment the first two paragraphs that have gone out on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so, undoubtedly. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he is willing to disclose what his procedure will be.

Mr. PADGETT. It was my desire to offer the whole provision as an amendment, with the statement that I would move to strike out the balance of the paragraph from the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is agreeable to us.

Mr. PADGETT. I will offer it as one amendment and give notice that I will move to strike out that which is remaining in the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on those amendments is exhausted. The Chair will suggest that the first thing is to dispose of the amendment to the amendment, the Miller amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I inquire what the amendment is?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offered an amendment to appropriate $2,000,000, and the gentleman from Minnesota offered an amendment to the amendment providing for an appropriation of $210,000,000. Now, the question is, unless it is withdrawn, on the amendment to the amendment. Debate has been exhausted upon it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it be in order to move to strike out that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon that amendment. Those who are opposed to it, of course, can vote against it. The motion to strike it out would not be in order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I had proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which he just proposed. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to explain why that request ought to be withheld, and would like five minutes in which to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Is there objection? Debate upon the matter is exhausted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what would be the effect of the withdrawal of his amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. When that is done, I propose to offer as one amendment the provision covered by the rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That has now been eligible under the rule.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman concede the right of discussion when that comes up?

Mr. PADGETT. There will be some discussion upon it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was not able to get any time on the rule, and this is one of the most important matters concerning the vast industrial district, in which I in part represent, that can come up. I had no opportunity to discuss it. I voted against the rule, and I should like five minutes in which to explain why I voted "no"—not necessarily on my own account, but on account of others.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman had voted "aye," it would not have been necessary to explain.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw his amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Strike out, on page 53, lines 1 to 25, inclusive, and, on page 54, lines 1 to 15, inclusive, and to insert the following:

For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the vessels enumerated below:

Ten first-class battleships, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessels of their class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action; two of these at a cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $21,000,000 each, to be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein.

Ten scout cruisers, carrying suitable protection and armament suited to their size and type, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action; two to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $8,000,000 each, to be begun as soon as practicable, subject to the limitations herein.

And for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States in accordance with the latest improvements in the construction of ships, and in the armor and armament therefor, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to submit to Congress on the first Monday in December next general description of such additional vessels as may be needed to complete and round out the Navy of the United States. Types and numbers shall be recommended after full consideration and analysis of recent war experience, and particular attention shall be given to aeroplane carriers and any other new types developed during the war or shown to be necessary by the aforesaid war experience.

If at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for there shall have been established with the cooperation of the United States of America any tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments, then and in that case such naval expenditure as may be inconsistent with the engagements made by the establishments of said tribunal or tribunals may be suspended when so ordered by the President of the United States, and no contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I just wanted to ask if this is the language found in the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the chairman of the committee and myself had an agreement that there should be three hours of debate, one hour and a half to be controlled by him and the other hour and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. Upon the strength of that time for debate I had promised a great deal more than the hour and a half. What I want to know is whether the chairman will agree that we can now have three hours of debate upon this amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, it is true that yesterday before we began the consideration of the bill the gentleman and I had an agreement, as far as we could agree, that if it was agreeable to the House we would debate the matter for three hours, but conditions changed so yesterday that it got out of our hands, and instead of coming along in that way it went before the House. Yesterday there were several hours of debate upon all phases of this matter and two hours' debate to-day; so that I do not feel that the substance of that agreement is in effect now. We have had several hours of debate.

Mr. BROWNING. I want to state that not one of these gentlemen whose names I put down here for this debate has had opportunity to speak upon the matter. The Committee on Rules this morning understood that we were to have those three hours of debate.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think so.

Mr. BROWNING. And they could not in the time they had, two hours, give these gentlemen time to speak upon it.

Mr. PADGETT. Several members of the Committee on Rules have stated to me that they fixed the very liberal provisions of two hours on the rule, with the expectation that the debate would take place under that and would be cut out of the debate after the adoption of the rule.

Mr. BROWNING. None of the Committee on Rules on this side of the House has informed me of any such arrangement.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not say that it was an arrangement with them. I said that that was their expectation, and several of them have told me so.

Mr. BROWNING. I think we can make better time by dividing it up and having debate upon the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Three hours would run us up until nearly half past 6 o'clock. I am willing to agree to an hour of debate.

Mr. FESS. We will finish it up to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. When the gentleman says that he will agree to one hour of debate, does he mean that to be divided between the two sides or one hour on a side?

Mr. PADGETT. I have suggested an hour only, but I want to be liberal.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman has no one on his side to speak, has he?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. It is likely that I shall have.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest that the gentleman do not go around begging for them. We do not do that over here.

Mr. PADGETT. I will suggest that we have two hours, with the understanding that we take a vote at the end of the two hours, and the gentleman can have one hour and I shall have one, and if I do not have use for my time I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. Give us an hour and a half.

Mr. PADGETT. I suggest that we agree upon an hour on a side.

Mr. BROWNING. I would like to have an hour and a half. We can not allot this time under one hour and a half.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman agrees to an hour and a half on a side, I shall object to the whole business.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee. It is now nearly 3 o'clock. It is very evident that the House will not remain here to transact other business after this bill is disposed of to-day, and it seems to me that we might give three hours of debate to the bill—two hours and a half anyhow.

Mr. PADGETT. I offered to the gentlemen two hours' debate, and I will give them all the time I can, and carry it out in good faith.

Mr. MANN. That would make the House adjourn rather earlier than need be——

Mr. PADGETT. No; it will take some time to take a vote and pass the bill in the House, as there will be, very likely, a roll call in the House, and that will run us up until after 6 o'clock. I will agree with the gentleman on two hours.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will yield further, is that on the understanding that at the end of the two hours that all debate on this amendment is then closed and a vote had?

Mr. PADGETT. And all amendments thereto.

Mr. HASTINGS. And we vote on this amendment at the end of two hours?

Mr. BROWNING. I am perfectly willing to accept that, but I want more than an hour's debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments thereto shall close in two hours, one-half of that time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Let the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] control the time.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does that mean debate will end at 5 o'clock?

The CHAIRMAN. It means that debate will end at the conclusion of the two hours.

Mr. KEARNS. That will be 5 o'clock?

The CHAIRMAN. That means there shall be two hours of debate.

Mr. BROWNING. Will not the chairman of the committee make it two and a half hours? [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. PADGETT. No, I can not——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman can be taken care of and I am doing the best I can.

Mr. BROWNING. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BROWNING. Does the gentleman from Tennessee want me to allot any time? Shall I go on now and use some time?

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will go ahead and use some of his time——

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee has asked me to use some of my time and I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Is there any rule of the House which would prevent a repetition of old arguments?

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I can readily understand how gentlemen who have voted to support the rule may yet reserve their decision regarding this amendment which is proposed until final argument has been made. I am opposed to the adoption of this amendment. Gentlemen of the committee understand, I think, or should by this time, that this amendment which is now proposed is not the amendment of the committee. It is the proposition of the Secretary of the Navy, which has received the indorsement of the President of the United States. I can easily understand how men on both sides of the House might hesitate at this time in refusing any legislation that the President says is necessary. I think, however, that gentlemen should consider the circumstances under which this request is made. We do not know what statements were made by the Secretary of the Navy to the President of the United States when he presented this matter to him. We can not know, because we are refused the knowledge of what the exact terms of the President's dispatch was to the Secretary of the Navy or to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The newspapers say that the President stated that a failure to adopt this program would be fatal to his negotiations, or, as subsequently modified, would be fatal to his undertakings. There is no material difference in the proposition. We ought not to give too much weight to what has been stated as the President's request to the Congress, unless we know what were the propositions that were put up to him. I would like to understand whether the President meant that only the additional and new program was to be considered, or whether he meant that we should carry out the program which has already been adopted. Did the President know that at this time we had seven battleships yet to build? Did the President know that we have five great battle cruisers yet to be built? Did the President know that we had seven scout cruisers yet to be built? Did the President know that we had 51 submarines yet to be built, besides other ships on the existing program? Did the President know when this proposition was placed before him by the Secretary of the Navy that we had, with the present existing facilities, all that we could possibly produce in two years' time? Did the President know that if we adopted any additional program we would have to enlarge the facilities for building these ships and it would take perhaps a year or two of time? Were all of these things known to the President when he said that unless the program was carried out it would be fatal to his negotiations? I judge not. Very easily the President might have supposed that if we should cease carrying out the existing program, if we should stop building battleships already authorized and appropriated for, that it might be considered that the United States had abandoned this very large and existing building program. But we do not know what was in the President's mind when this situation was put before him. I can not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the President is placed in such an embarrassing situation as to claim that a new and almost unheard of proposition of building battleships and battle cruisers and everything else larger than that proposed by any nation in the world should be undertaken at this time as a paper program and an announcement of a policy.

Because, gentlemen, if that be true, it would belie every act and every statement the President of the United States has made since he has been in Europe. The President went there for the purpose of insisting on the reduction of armaments. That was one of his 14 points that he stated time and again he should insist upon. He is now there pleading with England, pleading with France, and with Italy, and with all of the powers represented, that they should agree to a limitation of armament. Can it be possible that he would be so foolish as at the same time to say to his own Nation, "I do not mean this. I want you to go on and adopt the largest building program ever proposed in the history of mankind"? Why, gentlemen, if we should now do what is here proposed, we would say to the world on the invitation of the President of the United States, "The President does not mean it when he asks you to reduce your armament." That would defeat the very object that he has time and time again declared was so dear to him, the security of the reduction of armaments. Can it be possible that we will place the President in this embarrassing situation? Why, gentlemen say and plead with us, "Do not embarrass the President in his negotiations across the sea." And how could we embarrass the President more than to say he is not acting in good faith; he does not propose to reduce but rather to enlarge the armament of the United States. We will insist on you reducing your armies and scuttling your battleships, but we will go on building more. Gentlemen, it seems to me that we are embarrassing the President rather than otherwise. Would it not be wiser for us to say, "We will wait until these negotiations have passed. We will wait until the event is determined." We in the meantime have all we can do under existing authorizations to enlarge our Navy by the use of the existing facilities. We are now building a very large addition to the Navy, such addition as will make it the most powerful navy, next to that of Great Britain, in all the world and equal to any other three nations in the world. Suppose we take the other horn of the dilemma suggested, not very directly but always with indirection, in the debate on the floor of the House, that we must give this power to the President as a club. Let us see what that means. It could mean only one thing. It could only affect one nation. It could only mean that Great Britain shall consent to reduce her navy. If that is insisted upon, we all know Great Britain will never consent. It will mean that the league of nations, which we all desire, will fail. It will mean not only that an agreement for a limitation of armament will fail, but that the whole peace program will fail. Can we be unwise enough to bring about such a result? It is to help the President to secure the future peace of the world rather than to hinder him that this amendment should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, this item providing for the increase of the Navy has provoked more discussion both in the committee and on the floor of Congress than any other provision of the bill. To me the authorization of another three-year program, small in the number of ships contemplated, and hedged about by provisions for the study of the design and type of the vessels, and withholding their construction until the foreign situation clears, is entirely justified and, in my opinion, in accord with the desire of our people.

No one realizes more fully than do I the enormous burden placed upon our people by the necessity of war. No one appreciates more sincerely than I the noble sacrifice of our countrymen in the time of stress. No one is more anxious to have this Nation return to the ways of peace and have its manhood and its genius once more directed toward the development of the Republic. God speed the day when our boys will lay aside the uniforms they have worn with such honor and glory, and reenter the shop, the field, the office, and all the activities by which this mighty Nation has grown to such unequaled splendor. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, much misinformation has surrounded this item, much that has been misleading. It has been stated that this bill appropriates a vast sum for a new program. Such is not the case. Not a dollar of money is provided here for ships not already authorized. We only recommend a policy, a policy that can be changed or terminated at will, and which does not involve a penny. Our taxpayers will not suffer under this item, for no appropriations are made, and if an agreement is reached regarding armaments, no appropriations ever will be made.

This bill provides only for the Navy now in existence or being built under previous authorizations. In the light of the triumph of our Navy in the great conflict, with the deeds of its officers and men forming the brightest pages in our history, who is there who seeks to undermine its greatness or curtail its growth? [Applause.]

The Navy has been, is now, and always will be the first line of defense against the possibility of foreign aggression. It is the medium by which we guard our commerce on the seas, safeguard our rights abroad, and extend the protecting arm of the Government to our citizens and their property in foreign countries. It is the expression of the will and the purpose of the Nation, always ready to preserve the integrity of the Republic and maintain policies which have become part of our free institutions. With the financial and commercial centers of the world within our borders, we should not shackle the Navy or hinder its legitimate expansion.

It should be commensurate in its development with the increase in our population and the growth of our resources, both bringing to us new burdens and larger responsibilities as one of the great powers of the earth. To be effective it must be kept fully abreast of the skill and science of the times, and to accomplish this new ships must be laid down every year, and so I favor this provision in the bill, with the limitations that have been placed upon it.

All sincere advocates of peace hope for the adoption by the Versailles conference of a policy of disarmament. If this is approved, as I hope it will be, we can meet the situation by the cancellation of old contracts and the withholding of new ones. If it fails, then America will be in a position to carry out its own destiny without fear and without favor.

Standing for peace and an earnest advocate of an international covenant for the adjustment of future controversies, I still believe that this Republic should go forward in the fullness of its power and in the sweep of its majesty, undetermined by the friendship of one nation and undismayed by the enmity of another. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it has been my observation and experience that no good cause is ever permanently aided or advanced by a policy of threat or bluff. It is also my opinion that the carrying of a big stick is neither seemly nor persuasive when one sits in friendly conference for the purpose of securing the benefit of common counsel.

Over yonder at Versailles is assembled the most august tribunal ever gathered among men. Its problem is the most stupendous, intricate, and trying ever presented to any assembly in all recorded time. The only hope of a reasonably favorable and satisfactory outcome of their discussions and negotiations rests upon the maintenance of an attitude of candor, confidence, and good faith on the part of all those who have to do with those discussions.

It may not be considered seemly to hold or express an opinion differing from that of our chief representative—by self-appointment—at that council table, touching the matters to which this amendment relates; but may I not be allowed to suggest that those far removed from the currents of ambition that surge around that council table may be as well positioned to judge as to what becomes and preserves the dignity of the Republic as those who are in the very vortex of those currents of ambition. They know at Versailles, and they need no reminder, of the mighty potential strength of this Republic and the heroic valor of her sons. [Applause.] They know, and all the world knows, that we can build, equip, and maintain, if the necessity arise, a Navy greater than can be maintained by any other nation on earth. And this being true, do we enlarge or increase our influence at the peace table by this announcement of a policy of future expansion of the Navy, couched in language which proclaims its character of bluff and threat?

Mr. Chairman, this proposal does not express the spirit of the American people or the attitude which should characterize America at the peace table, and it is the peace table at which the paper guns of this paper addition to the Navy are aimed. [Applause.]

The provision is not in keeping with the dignity of the Nation. It calls in question our sincerity and good faith. It is altogether gratuitous and premature. It suggests a fear on our part that we shall not have the courage or intelligence to meet future issues, except under the spur of a preliminary announcement.

View the proposal as you will, as a future plan or purpose prematurely announced, as a brazen bluff, or as an ill-advised threat, from any and every possible viewpoint it is in bad taste, lacking in dignity, a blunder which, in view of the interests involved, assumes the proportion of a national crime. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago the annual appropriations for the Navy Department aggregated about $150,000,000. This bill, reported after the war with Germany has come to an end, carries about $750,000,000. And if the program that is put on paper is adopted it will cost the Government about $400,000. The annual expenditures that will be necessary on behalf of the Government to keep up the Navy Department, including that program, will be more than $1,000,000,000.

Before starting on this enlarged program we should consider the cost; we ought to know what we are doing. We ought to act, not because one man tells us how to act, but we ought to act, it seems to me, in response to the wishes of the 200,000 men and women that each of us represents. How many Members of this House realize that if we launch into this big program, and the military program must grow with it—how many of us realize that if we are to do this our annual expenditures will never fall below $6,000,000,000? Where is the money to pay the bills to come from? Vote for this program if you think best on the sole demand of the President alone and against the wishes of the taxpayers, but do not complain if these same taxpayers kick you out of office.

We should look the proposition squarely in the face. The friends of this proposition admit it is a bluff. In attempting to deceive others let us be careful lest we deceive only ourselves. Do you think that Great Britain and France do not know that this is a bluff? Why, it sems to me that if America's sentiment were ascertained in this regard, the sentiment of America would be found to be in favor of a league of nations or some plan to enforce peace. They want the President to be successful, to bring that about, but the people of the United States want the President to go to that peace conference with clean hands and impress the nations with which we are allied that America is in earnest in her demand for disarmament and earnestly wants some plan adopted to settle these international difficulties without war, without bloodshed. As an earnest of our good faith, the President should be able to point to the fact that in the United States, in further pursuance of that policy, the American Congress is taking steps to lessen its armament. He should be able to say to those in the conference that the United States will not increase her Navy and America will decrease her Army as rapidly as possible. That we mean what we say when we assert that we are in favor of limiting its armament.

That, I believe, is the sentiment of America to-day; and you gentlemen on that side of the aisle who are following the President on the proposition have but few following you. You will be called upon to give some better excuse to the people you represent for your vote for the amendment than the old excuse that you were following the President.

The people prefer the settlement of these international disputes in a peaceful way. If we are in favor of that program, let us honestly and honorably work to that end. I say the plan is dishonest; it is dishonorable for us to say in France and Great Britain, "We are in favor of a league of nations to settle these disputes; we are in favor of an agreement for disarmament"; but in the United States "We are in favor of a policy to increase our Navy and add to our armament; that we propose to increase our Navy program costing from $150,000,000 at the outbreak of the war to one costing over $1,000,000,000 a year." And we are agreeing to the program even before a peace treaty is signed.

I do not believe we are going to get anywhere with that kind of a policy. I believe that America ought to lay her cards on the table, so that the world can see that we are sincere in our protestations; that we are truly opposed to heavy armaments; that we are opposed to settling these disputes by war.

Mr. Chairman, I never saw, I never heard of a proposition so childish and so foolish as the proposition that is presented here. To think that men like Clemenceau, like Lloyd George, men that are representing friendly powers, can not see through the sham and hypocrisy that we are imposing upon our allies and friends! To me this is inconceivable. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, I am not in any sense of the word a "little-Navy" man. I have for many years believed in a strong Navy, and I publicly advocated that doctrine in my own State long before we engaged in war with Germany. I think we ought to have a Navy big enough and strong enough to protect our thousands of miles of seacoasts on both oceans, as well as our outlying possessions. We ought to have a Navy big enough and strong enough to protect our merchant shipping, which I hope in the near future to see once more carrying our flag as of old into every port and harbor of the world. We ought to have a Navy big enough and strong enough to safeguard all our interests in every quarter of the world.

But I am not going to vote for this appropriation, and I want to see it stricken out of the bill. I am wholly unwilling in the present state of the public finances to vote away some $400,000,000 of the people's money without a sufficient reason for it. Up to date no sufficient reason—in fact, no good reason at all—has been given. Every true friend of the Navy, every true friend of the American people, in my judgment, will under the present circumstances insist that the Navy Department go ahead and complete the construction of ships already authorized, and hurry up about it, rather than come in here now and ask for further authorization of hundreds of millions of dollars to build more ships, the construction of which can not be begun for many years.

Why, as I understand it, they have scarcely yet made a beginning on the program authorized in August, 1916. Nearly three years ago this Congress authorized the construction of 10 first-class battleships, 6 battle cruisers, and 10 scout cruisers, besides a large number of torpedo-boat destroyers, submarines, and other boats. Not one of these ships has yet been constructed. Not one of them is anywhere near completed. As I understand from testimony given at the hearings and from statements made to me by members of the committee, it will be a year and a half at least before any one of these boats already authorized is completed. As I understand the matter, it will be five years at least before this 1916 program is out of the way. Why, then, in the name of common sense, are we starting in on another program of almost equal magnitude at the present time? For the life of me I can not understand it.

What is this proposition anyway? What are we asked to do? The bill provides for the construction of 10 first-class battleships and 10 scout cruisers, the construction to be undertaken prior to July 1, 1922, but no contracts to be entered into prior to February 1, 1920. The cost of this construction and equipment will be upward of $400,000,000. As I understand it, this involves and amounts to a declaration of policy on the part of this Government in favor of a huge naval expansion, that would, if carried out, put us substantially on an equality with Great Britain as regards naval establishment. As I understand it, this is a complete departure from any naval policy which we have heretofore advocated. As I understand it, it is a substantial, radical, fundamental change in our naval policy as adhered to consistently for more than a generation.

Now, it seems to me only the part of wisdom before embarking on any such ambitious program that we should have some good and sufficient reason for doing it. I have listened attentively to the debate on this bill and, so far as I have had opportunity, I have read diligently the hearings before the committee and the report of the committee, but up to date I must confess I have failed utterly to find any reason that was satisfactory, to my mind, for the action proposed.

To be sure, the President of the United States has sent a cablegram to the Secretary of the Navy in which he is understood to have recommended this appropriation. But the President of the United States did not send this cablegram of his own motion. An effort has apparently been made here to make it appear that the President of the United States is begging us and pleading with us to authorize this new program. Nothing could be further from the fact. So far as we know, he has done nothing of the sort. All we know is that the Secretary of the Navy, for some reason best known to him, saw fit to cable the President at Paris for his views concerning this matter and the President of the United States is understood to have sent back word to the Secretary of the Navy that his views as heretofore expressed were unchanged. The Secretary of the Navy has in confidence sent the President's cablegram to the distinguished chairman of the committee, and the chairman of the committee has in confidence shown the cablegram to the members of the committee and to certain other favored individuals, Members of this House. But the bulk of the membership of the House has not seen the message at all. We do not know a single statement it contains. All we know is that in substance it is said to be a recommendation in favor of this appropriation. We are not told what reasons, if any reasons, are given as a basis for the recommendation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am all done voting appropriations in this House simply because the President of the United States says the appropriation is necessary. For months I have sat dom or expediency or necessity of any of these appropriations, running into the millions, and even into the billions, and have asked no questions. If I have had doubt in regard to the wisdom or expediency or necessity of any of these appropriations, I have given the President the benefit of that doubt. Whenever he has said that something was needed I have voted for it. Whenever he has said that some power was needed I have voted to give it to him, and what I say for myself I say also for substantially the whole Republican membership of this House. We have all done the same thing. There has been no politics on this side of the Chamber. Politics was "adjourned," but it was not done on the initiative of the President of the United States. It was done long before he ever suggested it. And more than that, Mr. Chairman, let me say that politics was not reconvened either until the President of the United States spoke the word.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Do you think that he should not have the support of this Congress, now that he is over there trying to secure peace?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I say that the President of the United States should have the support of this Congress absolutely.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then why do you not give it?

Mr. BURROUGHS. He should have the support of this Congress, on both sides of the Chamber; but I say to the gentleman, if the President of the United States wants this bill passed in order to have a trump card to play at the peace conference, why does he not tell us so—why does he not say so? [Applause.] If he has got any reasons why he wants this bill passed, he can send a cable message here giving the reasons. But he has not furnished any reasons. We are the people responsible for this legislation, and it is due us to have the reasons given as to why this important legislation should be enacted.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman——

Mr. BURROUGHS. But up to date no reasons have been given. I decline to yield any more of my time.

Now, I have great respect for the President of the United States and the high office he holds. I admire his great abilities, and no man in this House is more willing to concede that he has great abilities than I am. But I utterly refuse to allow any man holding any position in this country, however exalted it may be, to tell me how to vote. The war is over now and I decline to let any man, even though he may be engaged in the great work of constructing a treaty of peace at Paris, reach under the table and pull a string and make me jump like a common manikin here on the floor of this House. It was bad enough to do that when it was attempted from the other end of the Avenue, but when they try to do it from the French capital, in my judgment, it will not succeed. Certainly it will not succeed so far as I am concerned. The connection is too long.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman intimate that the President is responsible for the jumping that has been going on since this bill has been reported? Has he been pulling some strings?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I do not know to what the gentleman alludes.

Mr. WINGO. I refer to the jumping and the denunciation of him that has taken place since he gave his frank opinion in reference to this matter.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There has been no jumping, so far as I am aware, and if I have my way about it there will be no jumping in this Congress. So far as my vote is concerned, I propose to stand on my constitutional rights here as a Member of this House, and I propose to have reasons given before I vote for any measure of legislation or appropriate one dollar of the people's money.

Neither is it very satisfying to my mind to have the committee tell us, as they do tell us in their report, that we should have an "adequate" Navy. That is simply begging the whole question. We all want an adequate Navy. But what is an adequate Navy? As I look at it, Mr. Chairman, this question of military and naval defense is simply a question of sensible and reasonable adjustment of a Nation to its environment. It is a question of fact for each nation to determine for itself under the circumstances. We get no information whatever as the basis for our action here by the simple statement that we should have an "adequate" Navy.

Every Member of this House wants an adequate Navy, but before that even we want adequate reasons for voting away the people's money.

That is true at all times, but especially, Mr. Chairman, is it true in the present state of the public finances. Here we are now with a bonded debt of $16,000,000,000 and a floating debt of from four to five billions more. At this moment we are facing a bond issue of five or six billions and the possibility of still another one later in the year. I sat here in my seat last Saturday and voted for a huge tax levy of $6,000,000,000, an amount greater, as I understand it, than was ever carried before in any similar legislation in the history of the world. I confess that I hesitated for some time before I voted for that bill. Why did I hesitate? Because I knew the tremendous burden it was imposing upon the men and women and children and all the productive activities of this country—a burden under which many of them will inevitably stagger and groan, and quite possibly some of them go down in bankruptcy and ruin. I knew the inequalities and inequities in the bill, many of which I had sought in one way or other to correct. But I knew also that the debts we had contracted and the debts we were contracting from day to day we must pay. We had fought the war to a victorious conclusion. We had done our part and done it well, and now we must pay the bills. Under the circumstances there did not seem to be anything else to do than to vote the taxes, distasteful and obnoxious as they were.

I understand that in a few days we will be called upon to vote an appropriation of approximately a billion dollars to make up the guaranteed price of wheat to the farmers. I understand that within a few days we shall be called upon to vote perhaps $75,000,000 for a public-buildings bill. Then there is the great Mississippi River project, calling for three or four hundred million dollars, and Secretary Lane's project of land for soldiers, calling for $500,000,000. We just voted in the revenue bill for a $60 bonus for all the soldiers discharged from the service, and that involves two or three hundred million more. I do not criticize this appropriation. To my mind it is little enough. My own State of New Hampshire, through its legislature, has recommended that this appropriation be not less than $200 per man. Then we will be asked to vote $200,000,000 for good roads, a measure which has already passed the other body in this Congress.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, there is still a great army of our boys in Europe. Thousands of our men are way up in northern Russia fighting and being killed for some cause. I hope it is a good one, but I do not know what it is and I do not know who does know. I know one thing, Mr. Chairman, and that is that the people of this country, in my opinion, are entitled to know why these boys are fighting and being killed away up in northern Russia. All these men we must feed and clothe and take care of until we can at last get them home again.

What harm is going to be done if we strike out this appropriation? Under the terms of the bill as I read it we can not begin the construction of these ships anyway before February 1, 1920. That is substantially a year from this date. Why not go ahead and complete the program already under way before embarking upon a new program of such huge proportions? Why should we in the present state of the public finances, and with the whole country staggering under the burden of taxation already imposed, go on here day after day making these needless and wasteful expenditures? What sensible reason can we give to our constituents for voting for this appropriation? Other gentlemen may be able to think of some such reason. I am frank to confess that I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, in August, 1916, Congress adopted a three-year construction program for the Navy. Ships included in that program were: Ten first-class battleships, 6 battle cruisers, 10 scout cruisers, 50 torpedo-boat destroyers, 9 fleet submarines, 58 coast submarines, and other craft of miscellaneous types. Some of that construction has been completed and much of it has not been. A great deal of it yet remains to be built. The three-year program was a new departure. Prior to that time Congress had pursued the policy of dealing with needed construction from year to year, expanding the Navy from time to time as the needs seemed to require. I am not prepared to question the wisdom of that policy, but in 1916 world conditions as to naval affairs had taken on a new and threatening aspect, especially in so far as the United States was concerned. These new conditions were the justification for the three-year building program.

On May 31, 1916, what was perhaps the greatest naval battle in all history was fought between the German Navy under the command of Admirals Hipper and Scheer and the British grand fleet under Admirals Jellicoe and Beatty. It was the Battle of Jutland. The Kaiser in his usual bragging manner had hailed it as a great German victory, and had congratulated his navy and had exhorted them to "Forward" with God. There was a school holiday throughout the Empire to celebrate the widely heralded victory. The British did not seem to be clear in their own minds just what appraisement to put upon the results of the engagement. They knew this comforting fact, however, that with the coming up of the full force of their grand fleet the Germans had retired from the engagement and had declined to make of it a fight to the finish.

On account of the secrecy which had surrounded the damage which had been done to the German fleet, and the further fact that the Kaiser had boasted of it as a great victory, our own naval authorities were no doubt in somewhat of an unsettled state of mind. In fact, a feeling of apprehension as to the supremacy of the British fleet was felt to some extent almost everywhere, and undoubtedly it was felt in the United States. Gradually the differences which had been growing up between the Imperial German Government and the United States of America since the sinking of the Lusitania were becoming more and more acute, and it was almost everywhere felt that if the Kaiser and his military party should win the war, then instead of Britannia ruling the waves Germany would rule them, and the standard of the Prussian Eagle would supplant those of the British Lion upon the high seas. After this then would inevitably come a conflict between the United States and Germany, because the Kaiser had declared to Mr. Gerard, so we are told, that after this war was over that he would take no foolishness from the United States. So it was in the midst of the logic of these events that the three-year program of 1916 was adopted. I find no quarrel with the three-year program. But events since then have assumed an entirely new aspect. Instead of the Battle of Jutland having been a great victory for the German fleet, we have it on the authority of the eminent German critic, Capt. Persius, that if it had not been for the skillful leadership and maneuvering of Admiral Scheer, coupled with the mist and darkness that prevailed, the entire German fleet would have been annihilated.

But, better than that, since then the gallant armies under Marshal Foch have brought the war to a triumphant close, and the "boast of heraldry and the pomp of power" of the supreme war lord of Prussia has been utterly crushed, and Count Hohenzollern is now spending his melancholy days in Holland, with none so poor to do him reverence. The democracies of the world have again demonstrated the fact, which history has emphasized through a period of 6,000 years, that the world never has and never will for long submit to the conquering heel of tyrant. And now that the "shouting and the tumult dies and the captains and the kings depart," and the statesmen of the world gather to prepare for peace, we have the amazing proposition laid before us that the greatest democracy of them all, the United States of America, shall enter upon, so far as I know, the first ambitious after the war program for an increase in armaments. I am perfectly well aware that there is coupled with the provision authorizing the new three-year program another provision which authorizes the President, under certain conditions, to suspend construction of it. But why enter upon a policy of this kind at this time at all? The whole world is staggering under the most tremendous burden of national debts that have been piled up since the dawn of time. Even in the United States of America it looks as if we will have a national indebtedness of at least $25,000,000,000. It is time that the Congress of the United States call a halt and take stock of the future.

Many thoughtful minds are alarmed at the unrest which prevails in the world to-day. And well may we give careful, sober thought to the grave domestic problems which are ahead of every nation in the world. The quicker we can return to normal domestic conditions, the easier these problems will be to solve. But they will be difficult and the processes slow at best. How can business and industry get back to normal conditions if all the money the people make is to be taken in taxation and bonds to maintain military and naval establishments and competitive armaments?

Secretary of the Navy Daniels in his annual report of 1918, speaking of this very proposed three-year program which we are now to vote upon, said: "Including the $600,000,000 for which authorization is requested in the new three-year program, the total estimates of the department for ship construction, including armor and armament, amount this year to $972,090,000. The total amount recommended for appropriation next year for ship construction, that is for completing vessels already authorized and for new vessels, is $572,090,000. Also, Secretary Daniels, in speaking of the 1916 three-year program, said:

> That seemed a very large expansion and involved an appropriation bigger than anybody had before proposed; but in the light of war expenditures the sum does not appear so huge as when Congress made the appropriation for the three-year program.

Very true, Mr. Secretary. We have been voting such stupendous sums within the last 18 months that a mere $600,000,000 seems a bagatelle, but it must be remembered that these huge sums have been voted under pressure of war necessity; under a sense of compelling duty. Many millions were voted and spent which, now that the armistice has been signed, can be of no useful purpose. But we had no way of knowing that, because we did not know when the war would come to an end, and therefore it was the part of patriotism and wisdom to prosecute it with every possible vigor. I am glad we did that. But now conditions have changed. The "war drum sounds no longer, and it is hoped the battle flag will soon be furled," and it becomes the duty of Congress to look into these appropriations with more discriminating attention. The people have a right to expect it of us, and we are derelict to our duty if we do not do it.

CONCLUSION.

I have always believed in and advocated a strong naval force and one which would be entirely sufficient to defend our coasts and our commerce on the high seas against any danger reasonably to be apprehended. I do not know what will be the fruits of the world peace conference which is now assembled at Versailles. No one knows. Its achievements are yet in the womb of time. It is to be hoped that its deliberations and its conclusions will bring about a better feeling and understanding among the nations of the world and that the peoples everywhere may catch a vision of peace and good will the like of which they have never seen before. I grant you that these hopes may be dashed to earth and many of our dreams may be shattered, and after its deliberations are concluded we may find it necessary to adopt the policy of building "incomparably" the greatest navy in the world, with all the financial burdens that policy will impose. Perhaps so. If so, then I am willing to do it. But surely it will be soon enough for the Congress of the United States to adopt that policy when the peace deliberations have been concluded and their results are before us. Until then let us hope that a way will be found to stop the mad race for armaments among the nations of the world and that some kind of a court of arbitration with fixed powers and jurisdiction will be established to which nations may at least have the right to submit their differences and disputes, and that its efforts at mediation and conciliation will have the encouragement and support not by one power merely or by a single group of powers, but by all the world powers, working in harmony for the preservation and integrity of civilization. Then may the vision of Dumas be realized, when great armies shall vie for supremacy in acts of true charity and benevolence, their war cry being, "The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, to-day we are asked to adopt a program that would make ours the greatest Navy in the world. This involves two propositions of fundamental, monumental importance. One is a great national policy and the other is a burden of debt that will rest upon the taxpayers and upon business in this country for a time of which no man knows the end. I am opposed to this program. I am opposed to it primarily for three reasons. The first is that of the 1916 program over $700,000,000 is unexpended, and that is sufficient to provide all the construction that should be necessary or desirable for three years to come.

In the second place, I am opposed to the adoption of this program because I believe this is an unhappy time, while our envoys are gathering around the peace table seeking to reach an agreement based on a common understanding, representing the heart's desire of the people of the world for permanent peace, for us to propose to build the greatest fighting machine in the world. [Applause.]

And in the third place, I am opposed to this program for the reason that if our security is not amply provided in the treaty of peace, there will be abundant time to provide this program, or whatever program may be necessary, after the treaty of peace has shown the necessity. In other words, to summarize my position, I believe this program is unbusinesslike, undiplomatic, premature, and imposes an unnecessary burden on the people of the Nation.

Let us consider the circumstances under which the suggestion is made to adopt the program. In 1916 we adopted a three-year program for naval expenditure of over $800,000,000. Over $700,000,000 of that program is unexpended to-day. It is an abundant program to keep us busy for three years to come. During the war we expended over $500,000,000 in addition to the three-year program, and now before we have completed one-quarter of the three-year program it is proposed to add four hundred million more.

The size of Navy required to properly defend our country is a relative matter. It depends upon the relative strength of the navies against which prudence requires us to be prepared. To-day, as always heretofore during our national life, England unquestionably has the strongest of all navies. During the war we largely increased our relative strength as compared with England's Navy. We have outdistanced every other navy in the world. The German Navy, which was our chief menace, has been destroyed. To-day no other power on earth has a navy comparable to ours in strength or effectiveness. No other nation now proposes a navy to approach our relative strength or endanger our security.

No one will assert that we should build the biggest of all navies with the expectation that some day we will contend with the British Empire for the physical supremacy of the sea. It is unthinkable that we should ever contemplate a war with that nation to whom we are bound by ties of kinship and race and from which we inherited our law, our language, our ideals, and our Christian faith.

Neither is the example of England one for our imitation. The British Empire equals four times our population and three times our area. It includes 70 countries and groups of islands located on every sea, populated by every nation, race, and tribe, exposed to attack from every direction, her homeland a small island, whose people are dependent upon the ships of her merchant fleet to bring 75 per cent of the food to sustain life. No fancy of imagination can compare our necessity of a big Navy to that of England. There has not been a time for 30 years when England could have preserved the integrity of her Empire for a single decade without the supremacy of her navy over that of Germany. England has and ought to have the greatest navy in the world.

It is easy to say, "I do not want my country to play second fiddle to any nation." It would be just as sensible to say, "I want the biggest of navies, whether we need it or not." The difference between England's biggest navy and ours is that she needs it and we do not. I want to build a navy as big as our necessity, not to gratify our vanity, but to serve our needs.

To-day the representatives of our Government are gathered around the table in Europe, seeking to agree on the terms of a just and enduring peace. I find no fault with our President in representing us there in a foreign land. Say what you will, it is the judgment of the American people that they would rather the lips of our President should speak for them at that table than the lips of any other living man.

Our representatives are meeting with our allies, the small nations, the neutrals, and even with those who were lately our enemies, seeking to unite in a league of nations founded on good faith and common purpose, in the hope of preserving the peace of the world. Negotiations thus far advanced have inspired the high hopes of the people of the earth.

Now it is proposed that the purposes of the United States at the peace table will be subserved by the declaration of this Congress in favor of the biggest navy in the world and in adopting plans to that end. In my judgment, such a program by the United States at this time is indefensible. To advance this program while we are meeting the nations of the world in a peace conference puts us in the position of making a threatening move for our pistol pocket. It is neither wise nor desirable that the action of the nations at the peace table should be influenced by threats or coercion.

We are negotiating for peace which we discount in advance by preparing for its failure. This program is the alternative of success at the peace table. We discount our peace prospect and impeach our motives in the middle of negotiations by providing for their failure.

Our hope for a just and enduring peace and cooperation of the nations must rest upon a common understanding voluntarily reached and actuated by the heart desire of the people of a stricken world. An unwilling agreement would be doomed to failure from the beginning.

This program involves a great question of national policy. It involves placing a great burden upon our taxpayers and the business of the Nation for years to come. It should never be adopted until the necessity for it is reasonably shown to exist. I can never lend myself to placing that policy and that burden upon our country until it has the approval of my own mind and my own conscience.

From the standpoint of those who advocate this extension of our Navy, the necessity for it depends on whether or not partial disarmament is agreed on at the peace conference. Will the peace treaty leave us competitive armaments or partial disarmament? No one knows.

Admitting that the necessity for this program is not now known to exist, those who favor it fail to make their case unless they can show that after the treaty of peace will be too late for its adoption. That they can not do. The $700,000,000 uncompleted construction under the program already adopted will fully cover all possible construction until peace is reached and we can exercise our discretion with full knowledge of the facts in determining our future policy.

We are asked to adopt a program before the necessity for it has been determined. The difference between adopting this program now and at some later date, when the necessity for it is shown, if at all, is the difference between acting without knowledge now or with knowledge at a later date.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important matters that has come before Congress. I have been here, modestly quiet, for 15 years, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. PADGETT. I hope the gentleman will not make that point now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman withdraws it, I shall renew it. There is too much suppression of discussion in this House on one of the most momentous bills ever considered by it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15529, the naval appropriation bill, and, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, when 295 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he handed in the names of the absentees to be recorded in the Journal.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in view of the request for a quorum, may I ask the gentlemen to remain here and maintain a quorum so that we can pass this bill by 6 o'clock? I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want it understood I did not make this point of no quorum. I am not so enamored of my knowledge on this subject that I would feel justified in making a point of no quorum in order to get an audience.

Gentlemen complain about the meager information they have as to the necessity for carrying out the program set forth by the amendment under consideration. Many of them have gone to the extent of saying they would not vote for this measure because they had not some inside information which seems to have been furnished the Committee on Naval Affairs. I confess myself some embarrassment in casting my vote without being more fully advised as to all the facts, for my information on this subject reminds me very much of how a magazine editor expressed himself to me some years ago in this city. I was introduced to him as an Indian, and he said, "Are you a regular Indian?" I told him I tried to be fairly regular. "What I mean is," said the journalist, "did you get your name put on one of these rolls and draw lands and money?" I said, "I have my name on the tribal rolls of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribes, and I hope sometime in the dim, distant future, through the meshes of the red tape of our Indian Bureau, to draw my proportionate share of land and money belonging to that tribe." He then retorted, "Mr. Carter, I am doubly glad to meet you. I have written a great deal on the Indian question. I have just finished an article on 'The habits and characteristics of the American Indian as viewed at close range,' and you are the first dad-burned Indian I ever shook hands with in my life." [Laughter.]

My position on this occasion is a fortunate one, for I can vote on either side of this question with perfect consistency, because my vote on naval construction in the past has ranged from the highest program proposed to the very lowest, as I thought the occasion demanded.

I confess I do not know just exactly what the occasion demands here. No one in this House knows what the exigencies demand. Nay, no one on this side of the Atlantic Ocean can say that the naval program proposed by this amendment is not necessary to our future peace and welfare.

I do know this: We have just emerged from a most horrible war, a war which cost us in the blood of American manhood the lives of more than 100,000 American boys, some thirty-odd thousand killed in line of battle and more than 70,000 dying in the camps. In addition to this we had nearly 200,000 wounded American soldiers. We can all agree that one of the principal things for which they fought was to make the future peace of the entire world safe. Moreover, we know that there is now in progress near the city of Paris a peace conference, and that each of our allies has its accredited delegates there, among them being our American representatives. The President of this great Republic, the head of our delegation in this great peace conference, is urging to his uttermost the necessity for a league of nations which may prevent future wars. In the midst of these negotiations he has cabled to the authorities here the urgent necessity for carrying out the program set forth by this amendment.

The question as to whether we agree with Mr. Wilson on internal problems is not at issue. It is not a question with us whether our representative at the peace conference be Democrat or Republican. It is not a question whether it is Mr. Wilson, Mr. Taft, or some other leader of a great political organization who now represents us at the peace conference. Whether we agree or disagree with him on American politics and public questions should not influence our views to the extent of prejudicing our vote on the subject of a league of nations and world peace.

It is enough for us to know that he is an American, the accredited representative of 100,000,000 American people, and that he is representing what he believes to be their views, and, with reference to the league of nations, what I believe to be the views of the American people.

Therefore, as representatives of these same people, our duty is to uphold and sustain him, at least until this conference is over and it is determined whether or not the permanent peace proposed by the league of nations may be possible.

Some of you gentlemen on the Republican side complain about spending these sums of money in support of the American Navy at this time, and yet the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs tells us that this is only about one-half the program that was proposed by the bill of 1916.

Yet, again, you same gentlemen on that side of the aisle did not hesitate to join us in voting some forty or fifty billions of dollars of credit for this war, more than $30,000,000,000 of which will have already been spent before the end of this fiscal year. In the fullness of your patriotism you did not hesitate to assist in furnishing for this war all the soldiers and sailors necessary to battle in defense of liberty, a permanent peace, and other American ideals. Shall we hesitate now with the goal of our ambition so near at hand?

What does the amendment under consideration provide? Does it make any appropriation from the people's Treasury? Not one red cent, and there is not a Member of this House but that knows this fact well and good. Ah, but you say, while it does not provide an appropriation it provides an authorization—a naval program which, according to the statement of the gentleman in charge of this bill, must cost some $412,000,000. Let us see about that. The second paragraph, beginning on page 1, line 7, says:

For the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake prior to July 1, 1922, the construction of the vessels enumerated below:

The last paragraph of the amendment further provides:

If, at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for, there shall have been established with the cooperation of the United States of America any tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments, then and in that case such naval expenditure as may be inconsistent with the engagements made by the establishments of said tribunal or tribunals may be suspended when so ordered by the President of the United States, and no contracts for the construction of vessels herein authorized shall be entered into prior to February 1, 1920.

So, if a league of nations is provided by the peace conference at Versailles, then it will doubtless mean that not one dollar of the program proposed by this amendment shall be necessary, and this matter will certainly be determined before the time for beginning the program, as set forth in the amendment, rolls around.

But some of the opponents to this amendment have told us they did not believe in a league of nations. One gentleman has gone so far as to say that he has no sympathy with a "league of nations"; that it is a Utopian dream; that it proposes a short cut to the millennium; that it is visionary and impossible. I am not here to argue with that gentleman.

No precedent can be furnished in this world's history in substantiation or refutation of his statement. Therefore, I assert, that his asseveration that a permanent peace is impossible is, to say the most of it, equally visionary with the statement of our peace delegates that "the league of nations may give unto the world a permanent peace." We do not know, nor do the gentlemen on the other side of this question know, whether or not a plan can be worked out that will give us a permanent world peace, but we do know that it is worth a trial of our best efforts. We do know that it is a noble principle to which we might well aspire. We do know from a strictly financial and economical standpoint that the expenditure of these $412,000,000 even as an adventure would be preferable to the expenditure of some forty or fifty billions of dollars, as was the case in the recent conflict. We do know that our noble boys who went forth in defense of our liberty, and their splendid mothers, expect that we shall do everything within our power to insure the future peace of the world. We do know that the souls of those 100,000 American martyrs who died in camps and were slain upon the fields of France will stamp with approval all efforts on behalf of any of our people to prevent any such future sacrifices. I believe our President is doing his duty as he is given light to see it, and in this crisis I for one shall not take the responsibility of embarrassing any effort on the part of our peace delegates that may have for its object the prevention of a holocaust such as that through which the world has just passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN].

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, to my mind no measure of statesmanship can be permanently advanced by a policy of deception. Some have demanded that the cards shall be laid on the table, and, as I view the situation, the cards are on the table. There was a distinct policy established in 1916, and we are deliberating now as to whether that policy shall be indorsed and continued. There is another policy that we hope may be established throughout the world, which will modify our national program. Until that world policy is established, what should we do other than continue along the line of the policy already laid down? This program does not call for an appropriation of $412,000,000, although that is the amount that will be expended unless we can, through President Wilson at the peace conference, establish a new world policy—what he has termed a policy of moral force in the world, a policy of right and justice organized into a league of nations. The President has coined phrases which some people repeat with critical accent. They think there is no power in a phrase. But there is tremendous power in a phrase.

When he speaks of "the partnership of right," he speaks a phrase that reaches the heart of the great masses of men, whether it reaches the statesmen of the different nations or not. When he speaks of moral force to preserve the peace of the world, he is speaking in the language of the new day, the day that must come unless the world is forced back into the darkness in which we found ourselves during this terrible war. Preparedness is a word I have heard from gentlemen on the left as well as from gentlemen on the right, and this is simply carrying out the policy of preparedness which must be carried out unless the new world policy can be established. We hope and pray for that new day. We all hope and pray that "the partnership of right" may be written into the laws of nations. We work for the day when moral force shall exert its rightful sway. The masses of Europe have gladly acclaimed our President. They have even hungered to look upon this statesman, not alone because of the man himself but because of the principles for which he stands and because they believe he incarnates in his every fiber those principles which are necessary for the peace of the world.

There has been petulant criticism made on the floor of this House because of the character of entertainment given the President. Demagogic reference has been made to the gold plate and luxurious surroundings of America's guest. Courtesy demanded the uncritical acceptance of whatever kind of hospitality accorded him, and surely no one would desire the representative of America be anything else than courteous. But even amid the splendor of regal entertainment he did not forget the heartbeat of the plain people. He said:

> My heart goes out to the little poor families all over this great kingdom who stood the brunt and the strain of the war and gave their men gladly to make other men free and other women and other children free. These are the people and many like them to whom, after all, we owe the glory of this great achievement, and I want to join with you, for I am sure of joining with you, in expressing my profound sympathy not only, but my very profound admiration as well.

He also has realized and clearly stated that the opinions of mankind are fundamentally and ultimately created by the great working masses of the world. In Milan, Italy, he stated:

> I am as keenly aware, I believe, sir, as anybody can be that the social structure rests upon the great working classes of the world, and that those working classes in several countries of the world have, by their consciousness of community of interest, by their consciousness of community of spirit, done perhaps more than any other influence has to establish a world opinion which is not of a nation, which is not of a continent, but is the opinion, one might say, of mankind; and I am aware, sir, that those of us now charged with the very great and serious responsibility of concluding peace must think, act, and confer, in the presence of this opinion, that we are not masters of the fortunes of any nation, but are the servants of mankind; that it is not our privilege to follow special interests, but it is our manifest duty to study only the general interest.

In the various cities where the President has spoken he has confined himself to the great undying principles of right and justice. He has, in a most masterful fashion, interpreted the sentiments of those people by advocating principles which appeal to all people, regardless of race, color, or clime.

When surging multitudes crowded the streets to give welcome to President Wilson as the representative of this great Republic, he was not unmindful that from the heart of that mass came the cry that war might be no more. Noble they had been in making heroic sacrifice, but they were wearied with the welter of blood. Their backs were bending under the burdens incident to the terrible conflict. What wonder is it, therefore, that their enthusiasm knew no bounds as they gave welcome to the great American who stood unswervingly for the principles of a league of nations by which to organize the friendship of the world!

To some minds this is scouted as a mere ideal and denounced in a spirit that seems to argue that ideals are powerless; but ideals, my friends, are the beacon lights of progress. Out of the darkness of the past we advance by the radiance of their light. Ideals are the inspiration of effort. The course of history tends toward the realization of ideals.

We have arrived at that period when millions of men and women throughout the world believe that the great principles of a league of nations, the inspiring ideals of the fellowship of peoples, can be translated into practice by the agreements of international law. It constitutes the new policy which the world must adopt unless civilization is again to be darkened by the clouds of human combat. I admit that the President is an idealist. Thank God for that. But he is also practical; too practical, in fact, to suit his political enemies. His ideal at the present time is the world's ideal expressing the secret hope of the human heart, and he seeks, with all the power at his command, to translate that world ideal into practical international law. Is there a man who does not hope and pray that he may succeed? If he does succeed, then away with the old policy of armament; away with the great naval program; away with everything that smacks of war beyond that necessary to maintain the very principles that would be agreed upon by the league of nations.

We are confronted, therefore, by two policies: A national policy of preparedness, continuing and extending the naval program first adopted by the Democratic Congress in 1916; but in agreeing to continue this program we are doing so with the hope that it will be unnecessary, and with the provision distinctly made that if the league of nations can be formed then our great naval program can be reduced. Surely you gentlemen can ill afford to oppose the continuation of the naval policies begun in 1916; but there is evidently opposition to the extent of 148 votes. The great majority of this opposition is on the Republican side, but there is some on the Democratic side. I do not question the sincerity of these Members. I do not for a moment doubt but that they have come to their conclusion according to their best judgment. Personally I can not see any reason for opposing this program except on the basis that there must be a cessation of the building of armament through the formation of a league of nations; and if that be so, why this carping criticism; why these press dispatches sent overseas which, when read by the people of Europe, would make them think that the people of America were not back of the President in his noble ambition to organize a league of nations?

Reactionaries may rant, but you know and I know that the great mass of Americans, the multitudes that constitute our working classes, who bear the brunt of war, are back of the President's ideals and ideas, and for that reason they must eventually triumph. I for one believe they are going to triumph now, and if the President comes back having accomplished that for which he went, we can not but all rejoice that we had at the head of this mighty Nation one of the most astute statesmen, one of the great seers, one of the noblest prophets, who is able to see and phrase those ideals so that they become intelligible and acceptable to the statesmen of Europe. [Applause.]

In adopting this program we are not doing so as a threat, but acting in accordance with conditions as they now exist and coupling our actions with an appeal to the nations of Europe that they may soon come to an agreement regarding a league of nations so as to rid us of the necessity of carrying out this policy. No one who is humanly alive to the great wave of moral force throughout the world can fail to realize that opposition to that force will bring deserved disgrace. The heart of America beats true to the ideals which the President seeks to incorporate into definite law. The soul of our people is not a stranger to the cry for world peace. In the words of the President, expressed at Manchester:

> There is a great voice of humanity abroad in the world just now which he who can not hear is deaf. There is a great compulsion of the common conscience now in existence which, if any statesman resist, will gain for him the most unenviable eminence in history. We are not obeying the mandate of parties or of politics. We are obeying the mandate of humanity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LUNN. May I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to vote for the naval bill now under discussion and for the appropriation of $750,000,000 if any Member of this House could present a bona fide reason for its passage at this time, or if anyone could convince me that it is necessary to enact a law for a building program to commence in 1920. Until that is done I must refuse to vote for a measure which will commit the United States to an expenditure of $750,000,000.

The most potent reason that has been advanced for the passage of this law is the slight insinuation whispered from mouth to mouth that because of some international crisis, which no one but the President of the United States understands or is able to comprehend, we should commit ourselves to this program. In my opinion, it is about time that Members of Congress enacted a new declaration of independence, so far as their votes are concerned, and demand that all of the facts be given to them before legislation involving the expenditure of millions of dollars is enacted.

Personally I shall refuse to be led around by the nose by any man, whether he be the President of the United States, the president of the league of nations, or the president of anything else. I say this after having been in favor of appropriations for a large Navy, when the men now supporting this measure were its enemies. Anyone who desires to turn to page 9189 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 2, 1916, will find that when the country was in imminent danger and the President knew we were going to enter the war and when we needed appropriations for a Navy I was supporting the naval bill, while the President and the administration and men now supporting this measure were opposed to it, and I should be glad to have anyone show me any consistency in opposing a measure for an increased Navy in 1916 and before we had entered the world's war, but could see it before us, and in supporting this measure. [Applause.]

It is inconceivable to me that the very men who opposed every expenditure for an increased Army and Navy when the United States was in danger are now so busily engaged in advocating the greatest Navy in the world. Their action indicates that their attitude is not taken on the merits of the case, but that there must be some ulterior motive. I say this with no desire to criticize the President of the United States, who was my commanding officer for one year, and for whom I rendered the best service in my power, as did every other man in the service. Many of us have not criticized him for desiring to go to foreign lands, but have wished him Godspeed in his trip, and express the best wishes for his success, as we know that the accident of fate has perhaps joined his success to the success of our Government. Those of us who have disagreed with him politically have naturally felt at times that there must be men of other political faiths than his who could render more service to the country than he has allowed them to render, and that men of our parties might be informed of contemplated action which affected us. We should perhaps have been allowed to do more than to enlist in the Army and pay the bills, because I think that men of all parties in the United States have been actuated by honest and patriotic motives. I have personally never even objected to the action of the President that we should not be elected to Congress on the ground that we are not patriotic citizens, although most of us must confess that we could not follow the line of reasoning which was advanced. [Applause.] His reasoning in that case is, however, as easy to follow as it is in this one.

It is apparent to me that there is a "nigger in the woodpile" somewhere, and that we are engaged in a game of monumental bluff, not a bluff against Switzerland or Serbia, but against one of our allies, and one with whom we are not in the slightest danger of war. It is disgusting to hear men continually speak of a disagreement between American and English soldiers. None who fought with them intimate such a thing, but it comes only from those who never fought. I believe that if we pass this measure in its present form we will find the President returning home with the argument that Congress was determined upon the enactment of a great building program, but that through his sagacity and skillful negotiations he has secured the reduction of armament and accomplished the things which the exponents of peace have so long desired. He will get you to vote for this bill and then claim the credit for saving vast sums of money. Again, I make this criticism as one of the men who have never objected to the President's trip abroad, but have wished him the greatest success in his negotiations.

We have had enough of wars, and if by any sort of league of nations we may have any assurances that we may escape another I desire to give him the greatest measure of credit. I want to say that from this time forth I shall vote with him whenever he will present the facts and the law, but I shall refuse to follow blindly the mysterious insinuations which apparently govern the majority in this House in all diplomatic negotiations and in the discussion of legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have always been in favor of a large Navy, but to-day I voted against the rule providing for an increase in the Navy as proposed in this bill. Coming from one of the largest shipbuilding centers in the world, it seemed that I ought to say something on this subject, not only with respect to my own vote but of that of others who voted as I did. I noticed, with considerable interest, that most of the minority members, I think all of them, voted to sustain the rule, and yet I know that down in the depth of their hearts most of these gentlemen were opposed to the policy that this bill enunciates. I want that made clear, so that when anyone criticizes the votes that were cast to-day against providing an untold sum of money for a certain number of ships, the price of which is not indicated, construction of which is to begin somewhere a year hence, they will understand that at least some of the minority members of the committee, although compelled to vote by reason of the force of a mysterious cablegram, were at heart against the proposition. By the minority members I mean the Republican members of the committee, of course.

From my point of view the hour has struck when Republicans, at least, in view of the conditions abroad, in view of the condition of our Treasury at home, should be able to stand upon their feet and say, even to the President of the United States abroad, that we must protect the interests and welfare of the taxpayers of the United States. [Applause.]

I come from a committee that has been dealing with the problem of taxation now for nearly 10 months. We passed in this House on Saturday a bill which proposes to take $6,000,000,000 from the pockets of the American people. To do what? To pay for bills authorized, to pay for bills created by oral contracts, to pay for contracts made in lump sum to the extent of at least six times the amount of that great bill which passed here on Saturday—five times, at least. That is the domestic side of this question of generous appropriations.

Oh, gentlemen talk about being for a big Navy. Gentlemen say the question is, Are you for a Navy or against a Navy? That is not the question at all. The question is, Are you going to continue to rob the American people; are you going to continue to gut their homes; are you going to continue to impoverish them; are you going to pile up indebtedness so that the new generations for a hundred years will be unable to extricate themselves from the obligations you and your President are imposing upon them now? It is not a question whether you are going to have a big Navy. It is much graver than that.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] in the debate yesterday—and his figures were not denied by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]—indicated that the 1916 naval construction program was only partially under way. The Navy Department and the President have great sums of money to spend on ships the keels of which have not been laid and which can not be completed until way off yonder in 1920 and beyond, when it is proposed that this new and nebulous plan shall be put in operation.

Gentlemen are terrorized because of a mysterious cablegram from Paris. If the President, now over yonder in Paris, living in one of the palaces of the great and conferring with the crowned heads, knew what the American people to-day are saying about the revenue bill that passed through this House on Saturday, he might hesitate and send another cablegram that would recall the one we have not yet been shown but which is influencing the passage of this bill.

What have we done with regard to lump-sum appropriations to these contingent authorizations, dependent upon the will and judgment of a bureaucrat here down along the line, who gets his authority from the President of the United States through long-distance instructions or by such a mysterious cablegram as that which has not been read by the gentleman from Tennessee? What are we doing with respect to this carnival of expenditure?

Pick up this morning's papers and read what our friend, the new Secretary of the Treasury, proposes—our own former colleague, Carter Glass—in his letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. Read what he proposes, and then ask yourselves whether we are retrenching or whether the people's money is being hoarded for some future contingency? What is it the Secretary of the Treasury proposes? Now that there has been unloaded on his shoulders the greatest burden ever heaped upon a human being, now that the gentleman who preceded him has gone out of office and the burdens are piled high and higher, the new Secretary of the Treasury, seeing what is ahead of him, fearing the merry-go-round method of raising money by loan or otherwise may no longer succeed, proposes that we shall give him blanket authority to raise money as he sees fit, at any old rate of interest he proposes to pay, without regard to taxes or to the Constitution, which prevents us from exempting taxes under certain circumstances.

And this is no new thing. The President is "over there," and my information is that he is not witnessing such scenes of horror as are pictured to us to induce the appropriation of vast sums of money, but he is conferring with the diplomats, like unto those who came down this aisle on Sunday last, from every nation on earth, arranging that he shall be in a position, if need be, to send a battleship to Madagascar, or, at our expense, to keep in order the quarreling King and Queen of the Fiji Islands. I spoke to you a few days ago concerning the reported attitude of the great Lloyd George on this question of the league of nations. The suggestion was that the United States must stand responsible for the policing of the world. If there are troubles and disputes in Russia we must send our troops. You say there is something wrong in the Sicily Islands, which does not concern us; send your battleships there. Are we to become the policemen of the world? We are supposed to be rich. It is believed we can stand the expense. But how far are we to go and when will we stop?

We gave the President $100,000,000 sometime ago to do with it as he saw fit. Have we ever had an accounting of that expenditure that was satisfactory to this body? Is there a Member of the Committee on Appropriations who will rise in his place and say just where that money went? I am not challenging the President or his integrity as to the expenditure, but there are men down along the line under him who are as human even as all men are human and who will sometimes look after their own interest even when they speak in the name of the State. We had some testimony here in regard to the use of $5,000,000 of that $100,000,000 fund for the formation of a corporation to do business in Russia. Was that entirely satisfactory to this body?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has my time expired, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes, the time not to be taken out of that. I will not then ask for further time.

Mr. BROWNING. I will yield the gentleman five minutes, through the courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS], to whom I had promised that time. He yields it to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his courtesy, because I have been waiting patiently for five hours for the opportunity to talk on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from Ohio. Here is the statement of the Committee on Appropriations. There sits the chairman yonder. Let him deny the figures if he pleases. We spent over $12,000,000,000 in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for our part in the war. Did we get anything out of it? Oh, the boys have gone and died in France and our merchant vessels have gone down through German submarine attacks. But we spent the $12,000,000,000, and we are beginning to pay for it now in tax bills. Here is the statement of the Committee on Appropriations, showing that for the fiscal year 1918 and 1919, ending June 30 next, we will have appropriated and authorized an expenditure of $36,000,000,000, and that little tax bill passed last Saturday, which is stirring this country to the core, raises only $6,000,000,000 of that tremendous amount. Have we gone wild?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we so fatuous financially that we believe we can strike the rock and with some magic wand produce these tremendous streams of revenue? The President asked for $100,000,000, to be accounted for in his own way, and we gave it to him. He spent part of it, and he came back and we gave him more. That was a trifle. This statement that I have in my hand shows that we have turned over millions and even billions of dollars to the President, not to be expended by him but through his agents, and many of them here at a dollar a year, and now gone from their so-called patriotic calling.

We gave him these billions of dollars because we trusted him. Now he is in France and we are beginning to reap the harvest of taxation here. We will have to bring in more bills to cover these billions which will be levied upon the people of the United States for the benefit of others as well as for ourselves and our loans.

What did we spend for making the loans that some people think they were patriots for buying, the loans which Mr. Glass, the new Secretary of the Treasury, now desires to raise at rates of interest that may be agreeable to the bankers if the sales are to be effective? The amount of money we turned over to the outgoing Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of promoting those loans, paid to a large extent for the intense patriotic services of those whose voices are now stilled and will no longer engage in loan campaigns, was just $39,000,000.

Are you not getting tired of turning these great lump sums over in this haphazard way to gentlemen in control while the President is away? Next week we shall be called upon to appropriate $1,000,000,000, as much money, some one has calculated—and the calculation I find is correct—as represents one minute for every hour of every day from the time Christ was born down to this very hour to keep up food prices in the United States—another of these nebulous agreements which, if we break it, will be like the breaking of the "scrap of paper" that brought on the war in Europe.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman voted for all those things?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; to support the President while the war was on.

Mr. GARNER. I am reminded of the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] which he put to me the other day: "Why whine about it when you voted for the proposition?"

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The war was then on, and the President demanded it. As I understand the conditions now, the war is practically over. The President is "over there" on business about which we are not fully informed.

Mr. GARNER. I want to join the gentleman in this reformation, but I do not want him to whine about what has already been done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want the gentlemen on that side to join gentlemen on this side in a policy of retrenchment and economy from this time forward. Will the gentleman do it?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will you be able to induce your President to exercise the same fair spirit that you have displayed?

Mr. GARNER. I hope so.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I was interested and somewhat amused at the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN] in which he commented on certain phrases and discussed the significance and the power of certain phrases that have been used by the President; and I remembered that in 1915, when, on account of the war in Europe, there was a demand for immediate preparation on the part of this country for an increased navy and an increased army the President made a swing around through Indiana and other States in the West and referred to the popular demand for greater preparedness as hysteria. I would have been glad to have heard the gentleman from New York comment somewhat on the meaning of that term "hysteria." I am unable to understand how the President could have denounced as "hysteria" the demand for a greater army and navy before this country got into the war, when Germany was threatening the whole world, and how after Germany has been crushed and her navy destroyed he can now come to us and demand an appropriation for a navy that is unprecedented. I can not for myself reconcile those two positions.

Germany had a powerful navy, the second in the world. She was destroying Europe and threatening the peace of the world.

Every consideration for our own safety urged us to get ready for the conflict. Yet the President was opposed to it and tried to arouse public sentiment against what he called the hysterical agitation for preparation for defense. It seems strange to me that he should have been so opposed to greater preparedness then and now should be so insistent for this authorization of hundreds of millions to give us a greater Navy than Great Britain after the German Navy has been destroyed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the gentleman agree with the President in 1916?

Mr. DENISON. No; I did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the gentleman does not agree with the President now?

Mr. DENISON. No; I do not. I think he was wrong then and I think he is wrong now. [Applause.] If I had the time I would be very glad to give the reasons why I think so.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DENISON. I have not the time. My time is limited. Every now and then recently some one on that side of the House has risen and charged or intimated that we on the Republican side were anxious for an extra session of Congress.

Now, if there is any doubt on the question as to how the two sides of the House are acting on that subject, I want to say that in my judgment this bill and this proposal will settle the question, because if this new naval proposition passes the House it is certain to result in an extra session of Congress; for while it may get through the House, when it reaches another legislative body where there is a chance for some deliberation and discussion, and where there will be a demand that the lights be turned on before the appropriation or authorization is made, there will be so much time spent in the discussion of the bill that an extra session of Congress will be absolutely necessary; and if those who are backing this new naval program had been deliberately trying to bring on an extra session of Congress they could not have chosen a better method, in my humble judgment, than to bring this proposition before the Congress here in these closing days of this session.

Mr. Chairman, I have voted for every increase in our Navy that has been proposed since I have been a Member of the House. I have always believed that this country should have a Navy large enough to successfully defend us against attack from any source. But, situated as we are, I have never thought it necessary that we should try to build and maintain a Navy as large as Great Britain, whose Empire is scattered over all parts of the earth. I am willing to vote for such appropriations as may be necessary to carry to completion the naval program of 1916 and for any increases in efficiency that those at the head of our Navy Department may think necessary. But I am unwilling at this time to vote for the authorization of any new naval program either for the purpose of giving us a greater Navy than Great Britain or because the President has asked it in order to enable him to carry out his purposes at the negotiations now going on in Paris.

It is an easy matter for us to authorize or appropriate hundreds of millions for naval expenditures. Some of us seem willing to do so in a sort of spirit of boldness and pride over the fact that we can do so. But it will not be an easy matter to wring from the people the money to pay for them. The burdens of taxation resulting from this war are already falling heavily upon our people. If we enter upon a policy of naval competition with Great Britain we can not offer to the people of this country any hope of a lessening of the burden for generations to come.

I do not consider this question from the same point of view that I did before the world war. Before the war the German Navy was a menace to the world's peace. We were justified then in assuming any burden of taxation that would enable us to effectively meet that menace. Now the power of Germany has been destroyed, the German Navy is no more, and the menace to the world's peace has been removed. I can not believe that after defeating our enemy and the enemy of the world it is now necessary for us to at once prepare to defeat our friends and allies. If, after making common cause with Great Britain and her allies and successfully destroying the menace of the world, we must now immediately turn around and enter upon a naval program that will enable us to defeat those countries that were associated with us in this holy cause, I shall feel that the sacrifices of this war have been made in vain.

We are told by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that we should authorize this new naval program because the President has sent a secret cable to the Secretary of the Navy, saying that he wants it done. We have reached the point, so far as I am concerned, when these large appropriations must have something more than the mere presidential wish or request to justify them. I am willing to vote for any appropriation that I am convinced by any plausible reason will promote the public safety or the public welfare. But I have voted for the last hundred million, or the last million, from the Public Treasury which the President may request for any cryptic or unrevealed purpose.

While we were at war I felt it my duty to vote for any appropriation that the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, and those associated with him in the management of our military and naval forces, said was necessary. But now our enemy has been defeated. We have accomplished the purpose for which we entered the war. The Commander in Chief and the heads of the War and Navy Departments are no longer the sole judges of the necessity for appropriations. From now on I shall assert my right as a Representative of the people to use my own judgment as to the necessity for appropriations, and the President can not have my support for any appropriation he may ask unless he is willing to take the people of the country into his full confidence and justify his request by sound reasons which the people will understand and approve.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to embarrass the President in any plans he may undertake to consummate at the peace conference. I hope he may succeed to the fullest measure in what he undertakes to do. But I do not think the President should call upon Congress by cable for large appropriations of public funds for secret and mysterious purposes which can not be disclosed to the public. We as members of a coordinate branch of the Government are entitled to some consideration. I think that Congress should be spared the embarrassment of being called upon to blindly vote large appropriations for purposes which we can not explain to our constituents because they have not been explained to us.

It has been intimated that the President cabled the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy whispered to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that the President desired this new naval program calling for an expenditure of some $400,000,000 in order to enable him to carry out his purposes more effectively in Paris. But even if the President had sent no such message, the purpose of this provision of the bill would be apparent upon its face. To me it seems most strange that there are any here who for a moment believe that such men as David Lloyd George and the other statesmen of Great Britain who are now handling the destiny of the British Empire could be influenced in the slightest by the clumsy and puerile provisions of this bill. To me it seems childish to think that those at the head of the Government of Great Britain, who for hundreds of years have maintained naval supremacy over all other nations, would be influenced in the slightest or determine their conduct in the least degree by this clumsy threat a la Daniels. And it is stranger still that any of the Members of this House, particularly those who by wisdom and long service have reached the high places on the great Naval Affairs Committee of the House, should so far fool themselves as to think that we could, by a threat of these large naval expenditures, frighten the Government of Great Britain or any other government into granting to President Wilson at the peace conference concessions to which they would not otherwise agree. Let us not deceive ourselves, above all things, and let us not believe for a moment that we can deceive those who are now guiding the destinies of the British Empire at Paris. Let us be frank and trust in the force of reason and justice, which is the hope of humanity, rather than the threat of force, to secure a happy solution of the great problems at the peace conference in Paris.

I am opposed to this so-called new naval program which will call for the expenditure of four or five hundred million dollars in addition to our present naval program. If that part of the bill is stricken out, I will vote for it. But if it remains in the bill, I will vote against the entire bill. I am especially opposed to that provision on page 54 of the bill which authorizes the President on the happening of certain contingencies to suspend the new naval expenditures authorized in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I think that it is the province of the Congress to provide appropriations and to say when they shall or shall not be suspended. I am opposed to conferring upon the President or anyone else the proper and legitimate functions of Congress. While we were at war we of necessity conferred extraordinary powers upon the President, because that is necessary in time of war. But I shall not vote to confer upon the President any further powers that belong to Congress. If we are going to authorize a naval program, we ought to reserve to Congress the power to suspend it, if it is to be suspended. We ought not to confer that power upon the President or anyone else.

Not long ago Congress appropriated $100,000,000 out of the Public Treasury and placed it in the hands of the President or Mr. Hoover to use, presumably, for humanitarian purposes among the peoples of certain countries in Europe. It was stated at that time that that appropriation was urgently necessary in order to strengthen the President's influence and enable him to carry out his plans at the peace conference. Now it is sought in this bill to authorize the expenditure of four or five hundred million dollars upon a new naval program, and the power is to be conferred upon the President to go ahead with the expenditures or suspend them entirely upon the happening of certain contingencies. And it is said that for mysterious and undisclosed reasons this appropriation is necessary in order to strengthen the President's hand and enable him to more effectively carry out his purpose at the peace conference.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to making appropriations out of the Public Treasury for any of these purposes. I voted against the hundred million dollar appropriation for feeding the people of Europe from the Public Treasury, not because I was opposed to giving every aid within our power to the people of those stricken countries but because I was opposed to raising the money by taxation for such a purpose. And I shall vote against this appropriation for a larger naval program because I am opposed to authorizing or appropriating money out of the Public Treasury either as a futile threat against the naval powers of Europe or to enable the President to carry out some purpose which he is not willing to disclose to the Members of Congress and the people.

When peace shall have again been determined and declared, and when it shall have been ascertained whether there is any hope for the disarmament of the world and the peaceful settlement of international disputes, then if it should unhappily appear necessary for the United States to prepare for battle with those who are now our friends I will willingly vote for any naval program that will secure our safety. [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the House, I think we should conclude this war before beginning a too expensive preparation for another. The cost of this war will be a heavy burden upon our people for generations to come. Somebody here must speak for the people who will have to pay for this ambitious program. My own hope is that our representatives in Paris may reach a satisfactory agreement and sign a peace treaty with Germany at the earliest possible date. I think our troops should be brought home from Russia at once, and that every one of our boys should be brought back from Europe just as rapidly as the ships can bring them. I am opposed to policing any part of Europe or Asia with troops from this country, and I am opposed to entering into any kind of an agreement or league under which it may be our duty to hereafter police or assume control over any distant part of the world. I think we should get our boys home as quickly as possible to their families and their peaceful pursuits; that we should reconstruct or reorganize our disrupted industries so that our country can return again as rapidly as possible to its accustomed prosperity. We should put this war, with its burdens and its sacrifices, behind us as rapidly as it can be done. And I am cherishing the hope that the common cause which brought this country and France and Italy and Great Britain together as allies and friends to fight and destroy the enemy of liberty and free government, may keep us friends and save us from the awful burden of preparing for the defeat or destruction of each other. Being unwilling to begin preparation for war against our friends and allies before we have made peace with our common enemies, I am unwilling to give my support to this new naval program which will add so many hundred millions more to the burdens of the American people.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if my memory serves me right, on every previous occasion when the naval bill was before the House I have voted for the largest Navy that was proposed. But when I voted for those measures I voted for them not as a threat, but as a statement of a policy. I voted for them not for aggression, but for defense. I voted for them not as tending toward war, but, on the contrary, as tending toward peace. If I should support the proposition which is now before the House, I should violate every principle upon which I have before acted.

Mr. Chairman, for some reason it seems we know little about taking the action now before us. I was not one of those taken into the confidence of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs by being shown the telegram of the President. Perhaps I would have been if I had asked to see it, but I realized that the gentleman could not give it to all the Members of the House without violating the confidence imposed in him, and I did not want to press him too hard. So the situation we now have is simply this: The House is expected to vote for the largest navy in the world for reasons it knows nothing about, that the Naval Committee knows a little about, that the Secretary of the Navy knows something about, and that the President will only disclose under the most positive requirements of secrecy.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. Perhaps the gentleman did not approach him in the solemn posture that was necessary. I have understood you had to approach the keeper of the sacred word on the 14 points of ambiguity, and then with bated breath——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend from Nebraska can see here a beautiful example of the "open covenants openly arrived at," of which we have heard so much, and an instance of how Congress is to be "kept in touch with everything" that is going on at Paris. If we are not able to tell anything about the reason for our action or what will be meant by it, let us at least consider how it will be regarded abroad.

England at present has the first navy in the world. We have the second. There is no third. All other nations are so far behind that they are simply distanced. This demand to create the largest Navy in the world can only be construed as either a threat or a bluff directed at England. I am opposed to action being taken in either direction.

Mr. Chairman, why should we quarrel with England? In the laps of the two great English-speaking nations rests the civilization of the world. If they quarrel, it will be a setback for another hundred years, as it has been by the last great war for probably half a century, if not a whole one.

I have heard some accusations against the statesmen of Great Britain, but I never heard that they were insane or fools, and they certainly would be one or the other if they provoked a quarrel with this Nation, whether it had a large or a small Navy.

Just across the line at the north lies the fairest possession of the English Crown. Between us and Canada there is not a warship on all the Great Lakes nor a fortress along the border.

At any time we could take Canada; we could take it now, but England has no fears that we will be so foolish or so treacherous as to engage in unprovoked war; and why should we fear that England will be? With a superior fleet, it is possible, in event of war, that Great Britain could inflict much damage upon us, but no sane man would say that she could hope to win the war. In fact, for either nation victory would be a calamity only less staggering than defeat, for in the operation there would be destroyed its best friend and the only ally upon which it could safely rely. Again I say, why should we quarrel with England or England quarrel with us?

Mr. Chairman, between the two great English-speaking nations there are sacred ties that ought never to be broken. It is not merely that we are both of the same speech and largely of the same blood, although that is much. Beyond and above that is the fact that our sentiments, our hopes, our aspirations are the same. Alike in our veins courses the spirit of freedom. Alike our minds are filled with a determination to make all men equal before the law. This nation has in a bygone century fought England, but it was because we claimed the rights of Englishmen, and in this we were justified by England's greatest statesmen. We should now have one common aim—the extension of those great principles upon which our liberties are founded. We have no occasion to be suspicious or jealous of the other, but each should rejoice as the other develops in strength and power, knowing that thereby is created a further barrier against the return of autocracy or the rise of bolshevism.

Mr. Chairman, under the blood-soaked soil of France lie a million Englishmen, and beside them 50,000 Americans who fell in a common cause against the arch enemy of mankind. In death they were not divided. Shall we, the living, ever be led into a fatal quarrel over what they gave their lives to preserve? May Heaven keep us from such a fate. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this proposition, if adopted, commits our Government to the largest naval program in the history of the world. The contingency on which the apologists who are opposed to entering upon this great program is that there may be created at the peace council, as the amendment reads, a tribunal competent to secure peaceful determination of international disputes and which will render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armament.

Read the reports of the peace council, and we know that that condition is not probable to arise. I am not a willing agent in being an accomplice to authorize the President to pull the hairtrigger and force compulsion at the peace table which the negotiators are loath and unwilling to agree to. That is diplomacy by force and not diplomacy by negotiation. Never in the history of peace negotiations have such methods been employed to affect the outcome. I desire to believe that such is its real purpose. If such tactics were really intended, if I understand the stubborn Briton sufficiently well, it would be resented to the limit by calling off the negotiations.

This proposal, as I view it, has the full approval of the British officials. France impoverished by war, Great Britain impaired in its resources by its tremendous expenditures, are only too willing to have the burden of policing the world thrown upon the United States.

Have we entered this war in vain? Is the outcome to force our country to adopt a policy the opposite to its traditional position? Are we who prided ourselves in being opposed to a militaristic policy, now that the war has ended, to adopt this alien program merely because Great Britain has a larger navy than our own, and give heed to the jingoes and junkers in our midst? Is it intended that, having been freed from this burden, we are now to assume it, when no good reason exists? You might as well argue that because Great Britain has a standing army of a million men that we should adopt that policy and have a like standing army.

Before the war was ended we all knew that the peoples of all the belligerent powers were sick and sore over the struggle, and that the peoples would avoid future wars at almost any sacrifice. And now, being sick and sore, we are going to vote a program which everyone here believes will be of no value except to coerce and compel little nations to abide the results of the great powers; in other words, that we should be the policemen of the world. The American people are opposed to that policy.

They are not in favor of entering any league of nations whereby we will control the destinies of other peoples. That may be in harmony with the British policy, but it is not in harmony with the American policy. We entered the war to maintain inviolate our rights on the high seas, and we at all times declined to be enmeshed in the worries and policies of Europe. And yet here we are committing ourselves to-day to that policy which inevitably involves us in the politics and policies of the old world. You can not defend it as an American policy. It is foreign and alien to our policy of the past. Because, in 1916, when the war was flaming all over Europe, we adopted a three-year program because we could not tell then when we might be involved in the European contest; we did not by that action commit ourselves for all time to a policy of three-year programs. Even now, before that program is fairly launched, before the shipyards now in existence can complete that program, with the vessels only one-third started, we are asked to commit the Congress to a permanent policy that means our assuming the burdens of the world. No, Mr. Chairman, the taxpayers of America are opposed to shouldering this tremendous burden of $1,000,000,000 annually, and that is what it means for all time, for the sole purpose of policing the world. We need no such Navy for our own protection or for our own purposes. Our shore lines are protected by adequate fortifications. We have a greater Navy relatively than at any time in our history amply protected against any possible attack, with a Navy that can conquer any on the seas save one. I am not willing to be swayed by specters and imagery that will burden our civilization with the yoke of a billion dollars annual charge for years to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCCULLOCH].

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, having voted for the rule just adopted, and intending, as I do, to vote for this proposal, my attitude being contrary to the views of the leaders on this side of the House and perhaps of a large majority of the Members upon this side of the House, I feel I owe it to myself to give my reasons for my action. This Congress, the Sixty-fifth or so-called War Congress, has responded at all times to every call made by the executive branch of the Government. It has passed every bill that has been requested; bills extending powers to the executive branch of the Government which no man in time of peace would think of extending; bills appropriating fabulous sums of money which in time of peace we would not think of appropriating. Our purpose was to win the war, and we did not want to do anything or fail to do anything that would lessen in the slightest degree our chances for winning the war. Now, the war has been won. Our armies have been successful. America won the war. Whatever other nations may say about it, we won the war. But in order to make our victory effective we must be successful at the peace table. Many of the bills this Congress has passed were passed under the lash of the Executive whip. We have been slaves more or less in this crisis to the Executive will, but I do not believe that the hour for emancipation has come just yet. Common men must arrive at their conclusions by simple processes. I must arrive at my conclusions by simple processes because I do not have the long experience nor perhaps the mature judgment which enables the experienced legislators on either side of the House to arrive at their conclusions; but if I were trying a lawsuit and I should ask my client to give me the right to do certain things or to expend certain money that I felt was necessary to win that lawsuit, and he refused to give me what I wanted, I would feel that he had thereby shifted the responsibility from my shoulders to his, and if I failed I would then feel that I had a right to say to him that if he had done what I asked him to do I would probably have been successful.

It has been said that there is nothing great or small by comparison; so, applying the same simple processes of reasoning to this most important legislative situation that I would apply in my own everyday life, I must conclude that if the Congress of the United States should deny the President what he asks for in this bill, and he should fail in what he is trying to accomplish at the peace table, he would be in a position to shift the responsibility for his failure from his own shoulders to the shoulders of the Members of Congress, and, so far as I personally am concerned, I do not want to be a party, and I do not intend to be a party if I know it, to any such a blunder. The President has sent word that he must have this legislation in order to succeed at the peace table. I do not care whether that was a secret message he sent or how the word came, so long as he is our representative in the most momentous negotiations that were ever engaged in since the world began I, for one, shall not be a party to hampering him by long-range arguments in regard to a situation about which I know practically nothing, but I am going to give him what he says he needs and then hold him responsible for results. Then if he fails he can not blame his failure upon anybody but himself. But when this war is settled I, for one, intend to claim my emancipation. I will be bossed around by those who carry the executive mandate no longer.

I am voting for this bill for another reason, and that is because I believe in a strict American policy, because I am in favor of looking after the interests of this country as against every other country in the world, and because I do not want my country to be in the position of having to rely upon the navy of any other country to protect it. I am for a sufficient Navy; and, unless peace negotiations should develop a situation which would result in disarmament, I stand ready to vote for such bills as will provide an adequate Navy, but I am forced to rely upon the judgment and the experience of the members of the committee and the Navy experts, and follow their lead as to the amount necessary to provide adequately.

While I am for an adequate Navy, yet I am opposed to a large Army. These two departments are so closely related that I feel that it is perfectly proper at this time for me to express my present views in regard to the Army. I am opposed to a large standing Army, and I believe that the Regular Army should be an Army of volunteers in time of peace. I am opposed to any permanent and general program of universal military training unless it should become apparent, as a result of the peace negotiations, that another war is imminent. As I see it now, I should not oppose a program that provided for training the youth of the country in the schools and where they reside if it can be done without interfering with their education or their advancement in the avocations of peace, but I shall oppose by my vote any universal plan of military training which will take the youth of the country away from their schools and their homes, placing them in camps for training and the carrying on of any general military system.

There are those in America who have developed a hysterical affection for countries other than their own, and forgetting history have advocated that we can well rely for protection upon the good will and the friendly feeling of such other countries. In my opinion an American who loves another country as well as his own must be distrusted by all patriotic Americans. I apprehend that as the days go on and the attitude of other nations is better understood that the impractical dreamer will be superseded by the practical thinker, and those who are unwilling to accept the strict American policy and give approval to the plan of looking after America first will be looked upon with as much distrust as was the pro-German during the war. The doctrine of America for Americans has been in large measure my creed, and to me it simply means to look after America first and the rest of the world afterwards. My adherents to this doctrine has been variously interpreted. Some have contended that to advocate such a doctrine was to be disloyal. Others have been more charitable and have said that it only evidenced a lack of vision. Others say that it is a selfish doctrine and condemn it alone upon that ground, but I have gone through all the complexities of the legislative program incident to the war, and I have come out a stronger believer in the doctrine of America for Americans than ever before. It has been suggested that we can rely upon the English Navy for protection. Those who are impractical enough to advocate such a policy either must have forgotten or do not know that we have had more wars and complications with England than all the other nations of the world combined. Most wars are the result of a desire for commercial supremacy, at least that has been the controlling purpose in most of the wars in which European countries have engaged.

England has destroyed every commercial power that stood in her way on the Eastern Hemisphere. She destroyed the commercial power of Spain, of Holland, and of France. To-day there is only one great commercial rival of England, and that is the United States of America. From a strictly commercial standpoint America at this hour is in a stronger position than England. Let us hope that there may never be any occasion for any serious disagreement between England and America upon any subject, commercial or otherwise; but, bearing in mind the history of the world, which proves conclusively that nations have no gratitude, are inherently selfish, and are willing to sacrifice the best blood of the nation for commercial supremacy and aggrandizement, I believe that there is only one safe policy for this country to pursue, and that is the strict American policy. We are in a position because of our position of isolation to protect ourselves against successful interference by any other power or by a coalition of all the powers of Europe put together. If we adhere strictly to the Monroe doctrine and to the policies as laid down by the fathers of this country, developing our resources, taking care to eliminate internal dissensions, there is no power or combination of powers in the world that can rival America in the future. And there is no power or combination of powers, if we exercise good judgment and common sense, that can interfere with us successfully in any way. Therefore I am in favor of recognizing our invulnerable position, of protecting our seacoast by proper coast defenses and by an adequate navy. Then, I am in favor of keeping out of foreign entanglements in so far as it is possible for us to do so, leaving questions which are purely applicable to the Eastern Hemisphere for settlement by the peoples of the Eastern Hemisphere, only interfering in international affairs when the interests of America are involved. Finally, I am in favor of removing all restrictions which will hamper or interfere with American progress on the Western Hemisphere, which is one of the reasons why I am opposed to a large army and a military policy. The fathers of our country broke away in the beginning from the system of military training established in the Dark Ages. Every expression in our Constitution and in the constitutions of the various States of the Union which relate to the military define it as a means of defense and an institution to be maintained only for the protection of the American people in their personal liberty and in their property rights. Unless we take upon ourselves the settlement of all the disputes in the world we need not change, so far as our Military Establishment is concerned, the policy laid down by the fathers.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy the attention of the committee only for a few minutes, and then I shall ask for a vote upon the amendment. We have had very liberal and extended debate in general debate and under the five-minute rule, and now under the five-minute rule to-day under the two-hour agreement. I think that perhaps one or two matters might be called to the attention of the committee. The gentleman who spoke recently said that this was the largest naval program ever attempted by any country, and yet this is not more than about half of what was in the naval program of 1916, and we should bear in mind——

Mr. RAMSAYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the money appropriated by this bill is only half of what it was in the 1916 bill?

Mr. PADGETT. No; of the money that is in this bill not a dollar of it is for this new program. The money that is in this bill is for the maintenance, support, and upkeep and operation of the Navy.

Mr. RAMSEYER. When the gentleman refers to the program, he means in this amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. I refer to the building program, the new building program.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is, in the amendment that is before the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. That is now being offered, is about one-half of what the program authorized in 1916 was.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, the gentleman must realize that in 1916 the world was engaged in the war.

Mr. PADGETT. But America was not; we were not in it. Ours was entirely on a peace basis and on the assumption that we would not get in it.

Mr. KNUTSON. We all knew that we would get into it.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I think a great many of us thought that we would be able to keep out of it.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is, for political purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. REED. If the pending amendment is adopted it does not greatly increase the appropriations this year?

Mr. PADGETT. Not this year; no, sir; but the appropriation which is estimated upon the present basis of the cost of labor and the cost of material aggregates $412,000,000.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. PADGETT. If there is a reduction in the price of materials and labor there would be corresponding reduction in the total cost of a new program on a rate distributed over about seven years from now.

Mr. REED. If this new program is defeated, taking into consideration pending expenditures and what the regular bill provides, will we not have a building program approximating a thousand million dollars anyhow?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it takes about $400,000,000, as it was shown in the hearings, to build the 1916 program after what is in the present bill. About $175,000,000 or $200,000,000 is embraced in the increase of the Navy.

Mr. REED. For our Naval Establishment?

Mr. PADGETT. A hundred and seventy-five millions in this bill is on account of the carrying on the work of the 1916 building program, and in addition to that it will take about $400,000,000 to complete it and that will run over a period of about five years.

Mr. REED. Will not this bill without this amendment for all purposes, maintenance and all, be around a thousand million dollars?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; this bill will be about $722,000,000 or $723,000,000.

Mr. REED. And in addition to that some unexpended money?

Mr. PADGETT. There will have to be additional money appropriated next year for this building program——

Mr. RAMSEYER. To get this clear in our minds, do I understand the gentleman to say $179,000,000 of the present bill is to carry on the 1916 program?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, the balance—that is, deduct $175,000,000 from about $750,000,000——

Mr. PADGETT. There was $100,000,000 and some odd that was appropriated before that. It leaves about $400,000,000 yet to be appropriated upon the present basis of the cost of labor and material to complete the 1916 program.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What I would like to have the gentleman state in a general way is, What is the amount of money appropriated for in this bill—not the new program—aside from the 1916 program, for?

Mr. PADGETT. Deduct $179,000,000 from about $721,000,000 or $722,000,000 and you get the amount, and that is for the pay of 225,000 seamen, pay of the officers, the operation of the navy yards and the naval stations, the flying corps, and all of those operations of the Navy ashore and afloat, including the Marine Corps—50,000 marines and officers—and the operation of the marines the world over.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, another question. Is there likely to be a decrease next year and the year after for that part?

Mr. PADGETT. I think there will be for that part of it: yes, sir; because we are estimating 82,000 men, which would be providing an expenditure of about $85,000,000 for the pay of the Navy that is not contemplated. Now it is provided only temporarily. As to whether it will be needed next year, perhaps not all of it will, but perhaps some of it will be needed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, one other question. If this amendment carries and the next bill makes appropriation for it, and will also make appropriation, of course, to carry out the 1916 program and make an appropriation for the upkeep of the Navy, can the gentleman give us an idea of what the naval appropriation bill will be next year and the year following? That is, how much more will it be than this year?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it will be any more. Perhaps it may be a little less. We are getting back more nearly to a peace basis.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How many years will it be until we get back to before 1916?

Mr. PADGETT. We will never get back to 1916, because the Navy is several times larger than it was then, and it always will be.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the chairman a question? Did I understand the chairman to say that we will never be able to resume anything like the appropriations for the Navy that we had prior to 1916?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I do not think we will.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the chairman give me an idea as to about how much this Navy will cost the country every year until we get back to sober moments?

Mr. PADGETT. I said it would be reduced, and be less than it is now.

Mr. BUTLER. The chairman is safe in saying that it will be less.

Mr. PADGETT. We appropriated in 1916 on the basis of about 65,000 men in the Navy and about one-third of the ships we are appropriating for now. Now we are appropriating for 225,000 men in the Navy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. May I ask the chairman of the committee how they are going to protect these new battleships five years from now against aerial torpedoes, dropped from the sky, under wireless control?

Mr. PADGETT. That has been discussed, and it is not thought that a torpedo dropped upon the deck of a ship will amount to much if it goes on the deck of a ship. As to whether or not the machine coming down and dropping only in the water would have much effect or not, that is problematical.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman does not think that a torpedo having 500 pounds of TNT in it would have any effect if it was properly made?

Mr. PADGETT. I said if it was dropped on the deck of a ship it would create local injury, but would not reach the vitals of the ship, for the reason with a torpedo under water the force of the explosion goes in the way of least resistance. The water is immovable—that is, inelastic—and the torpedo goes in the way of least resistance, and the whole pressure goes toward the side of the ship. If it is dropped from up in the air the way of least resistance is away from the ship, and in the other direction, and hence the destructive force of the torpedo under water is many times greater than it is up in the air.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But you calculate that the torpedo will stop when it reaches the deck. What is going to stop it if it has a steel point and is properly loaded?

Mr. PADGETT. A torpedo explodes upon impact, and the moment it hits the deck of a ship it explodes.

Mr. HICKS. In all of these new ships it is contemplated to have an armored deck, I will say to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and also a subwater protection against torpedoes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. About this new program, I do not know whether the gentleman has given this information or not, but if he did, I did not hear it. It calls for the construction of 10 big battleships and 10 scout cruisers.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; $412,000,000, at the present cost of labor and material.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. When we construct a battleship or one of these big cruisers it is then necessary to have a number of auxiliary ships smaller than those to make the Navy a well-balanced machine?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I discussed that earlier in the consideration of the bill. Before the war we were, if I may use the expression, top-heavy in big ships and lacking in small ships, but on account of the submarine warfare against commercial vessels the situation changed and we are now well supplied with a large production—three hundred and forty-odd destroyers, a large number of submarines and chasers, and all of the small craft necessary. We are now unbalanced with an excess of small craft, and we need the larger craft to balance up, and we would not, in my judgment, need the small craft as we did before the war.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. You would not need, in the opinion of the gentleman, any of these auxiliaries to go with these big ships?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not for some time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. You say "for some time." Do you mean we would not need them for these ships? Of course, it is going to be some time before we get these ships.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think we would need them for the ships. Just what the future building program will be and how long they lasted is a thing to be determined in the future. But these additional small ships, in my judgment, would not be called for—additional small craft.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield for a question.

Mr. BAER. I understand that it costs us about three times as much to build a ship here as it does Great Britain. Can you give us any information on that?

Mr. PADGETT. No. They build cheaper than we do, but it is is not as much as that.

Mr. BAER. It is about twice in the labor and steel.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think so. While the labor cost over there perhaps has been less than here, in some things their material cost is greater.

Mr. BAER. It is an argument for the amendment, nevertheless.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to offer an amendment to that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then, I move to amend on the last line of the amendment by striking out "February" and inserting "June."

Mr. BUTLER. June, 1920?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I proposed that in the committee. I shall be delighted if the Committee of the Whole will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to discuss it?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREYS: In the last line of the Padgett amendment strike out the word "February" and insert the word "June."

Mr. PADGETT. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi to the amendment

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. A division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 65.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. PADGETT and Mr. HUMPHREYS to act as tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of the Humphreys amendment to the amendment will pass through the tellers and be counted.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 77.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 97, noes 71.

Accordingly the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to pages 17 and 18 for the purpose of offering some amendments to perfect the legislation that was proposed yesterday before we took up the increase of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to pages 17 and 18 for the purpose of offering amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Tennessee state to what paragraph he wishes to offer the amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. On page 18, line 4, in the brackets, the gentleman will notice it says "[other than a dishonorable discharge]." I want to add after the word "dishonorable" the words "or bad conduct."

Mr. BUTLER. I thought we passed that yesterday.

Mr. PADGETT. No; that was objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Page 18, line 4, after the word "dishonorable," insert the words "or bad conduct."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized on the amendment, unless the gentleman from Tennessee desires recognition.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not desire recognition.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee how many kinds of discharge are there?

Mr. PADGETT. There is an honorable discharge, a dishonorable discharge, an ordinary discharge, and a bad-conduct discharge.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us just what kind of service a man must render in order to get an honorable discharge?

Mr. PADGETT. It has to be a satisfactory service, and the man has to complete his term of enlistment.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the ordinary discharge?

Mr. PADGETT. The ordinary discharge is where a man has rendered satisfactory service, but where he does not complete his term of enlistment and does not complete his contract. There is nothing dishonorable about it, and we have a provision here that honorable discharges shall be given to the men discharged since November 11, 1918, the date of the signing of the armistice; that instead of those men getting an ordinary discharge they may have an honorable discharge.

Mr. MADDEN. What happens to the man who gets an ordinary discharge? Is he turned adrift and compelled to pay his own way home?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. He only gets his transportation if he gets an honorable discharge, and this legislation is intended to give those sailors and marines an honorable discharge who have not completed their terms of enlistment, but who have been discharged or may be discharged since November 11, 1918, and who would otherwise get an ordinary discharge. This will enable them to receive an honorable discharge, with their transportation home.

Mr. MADDEN. All that the gentleman has done now is to add the words "or bad conduct."

Mr. PADGETT. That is in the exception. A man who deserves a dishonorable discharge or a bad-conduct discharge ought not to receive an honorable discharge.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that; but I never could understand why a man who has rendered satisfactory service, even if he has not completed his term of service, if he is disconnected from the service by mutual understanding between himself and the commanding officer under whom he served, should not receive an honorable discharge.

Mr. PADGETT. Under the regulations he had to complete his term of service in order to get an honorable discharge.

Mr. MADDEN. He could not leave the service without the consent of his commanding officer.

Mr. PADGETT. This legislation is intended to correct that, so as to give him an honorable discharge with his transportation.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know why a man who has severed his connection with the service with the consent of the department, even though he may have done it before his term of enlistment expired, should not receive an honorable discharge?

Mr. PADGETT. Just because there is a difference between the man who does perform his full duty and stay his full term and the man who does not.

Mr. MADDEN. He could not leave the service without the consent of the department.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true; but there is that distinction. That is the condition that confronts us, and we are trying to correct it by this legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. This does not correct it.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, it does.

Mr. MADDEN. What does it do?

Mr. PADGETT. This provides that, except for bad conduct or dishonorable discharge, he shall have an honorable discharge and get travel pay.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to ask the gentleman whether his amendment will take care also of the regulation, heretofore prevailing under article 3601 of the Navy Regulations, which requires some of these boys to pay back $60 for their clothing furnished them when they went in. I have a case of a boy who enlisted January 31, 1917, when the war emergency was upon us, but before we actually entered the war. He has served two years, and if he is discharged because of need at home, I understand he must pay $60 for clothing furnished him two years ago and now worn out. Will the gentleman's amendment, which gives him an honorable discharge, also take care of that?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether they could do it or not. I never had the matter brought to my attention.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will not detain the gentleman; but I hope that it will.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what provision is made to take care of the situation where a 16-year-old boy, actuated by patriotic motives, went into the war, made a false statement in regard to getting in, and now his parents want to get him out?

Mr. PADGETT. I think if you ask the department they will discharge him. Always before the war they have discharged them on a disclosure of the state of facts.

Mr. SUMNERS. Given them an honorable discharge?

Mr. PADGETT. No; given them an ordinary discharge.

Mr. SUMNERS. Under the provision that you now undertake to make, are these boys, after they went through the war, to be sent back into private life with an honorable discharge or a questionable discharge?

Mr. PADGETT. He could not get an honorable discharge if his parents sought to have him discharged on the ground that he was not of age. If he comes and asks to be discharged and gets it under the gentleman's provision where they are demobilizing all of them, he would get an honorable discharge.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. What will happen to those boys who have received an ordinary discharge, not an honorable discharge, before this bill became a law?

Mr. PADGETT. It relates back to November 11, 1918.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In these cases the gentleman mentioned in which a young men has got into the Navy, not old enough to be received, and his parents make application for his discharge, and he gets his discharge, does he get any pay?

Mr. PADGETT. He is paid up to the time of his discharge.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The reason I ask is that they discharged a boy in the Army without pay, and he was a thousand miles from home.

Mr. FIELDS. I think the gentleman is wrong in his statement of facts.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. He was discharged at Fort Douglas, Utah, and his father had to send him money to get home.

Mr. FIELDS. If he was discharged without honor he does not get the pay. It is not a dishonorable discharge but a discharge without honor.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It makes him forfeit his pay and leaves him stranded.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Page 18, lines 21 to 23, strike out the words "though regularly discharged and reenlisted immediately upon expiration of a full four-year enlistment" and in lieu thereof insert "now provided by law for men who extend enlistment on completion of full four-year term of enlistment."

Mr. PADGETT. I explained yesterday what that was. Under existing law when a man came to extend his enlistment in the Navy one, two, three, or four years he has to extend it for four years to get the benefit of the rate of the four months' pay. Under the law if a man serves the full four years he can be discharged, and if reenlisted within four months he gets four months' pay for reenlistment. Under the wording of this, when we put it in we understood, and it was so represented, that he would have to add all he had served to the extension, making four years. But as it is worded in the bill there is an interpretation that he might get that four months' pay upon extending for one year.

Mr. MADDEN. The four months' pay, in other words, is included in the four years?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; he must serve four years in order to get the four months' pay, and this is to make it clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 15, after the word "discharged," change the period to a colon and add the following:

"Provided further, That any enlisted man who takes advantage of the provisions of this paragraph to secure a discharge from the Navy or Marine Corps and thereafter reenlists in the Navy or Marine Corps shall not be entitled to receive the benefits of the four months' pay provided by existing law for enlisted men reenlisting within four months."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken upon that amendment, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] may proceed for two minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield for that purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] may proceed for two minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the House, in the gallery of the House at this time sits Eddy Rickenbacher, the ace of aces. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 21, strike out lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, and in lieu of the language stricken out insert:

"That enrolled men so transferred shall be entitled to and receive the same pay, rights, privileges, and allowances in all respects as now provided by existing law for men regularly discharged and reenlisted immediately upon expiration of their full four years' enlistment in the regular Navy or Marine Corps."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this is the same as the other with reference to the four months' pay, so that they would have to come in and serve their four years by doing their service instead of extending for one year and getting the benefit of the four months' pay.

Mr. BUTLER. It is the same limitation as the gentleman has already offered?

Mr. PADGETT. It is the same as the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I also offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 11, strike out the word "member" and insert the word "men."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the various amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. Pending that I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct the totals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Padgett amendment, which was offered in accordance with the provisions of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a separate vote on the Padgett amendment, which was made germane by the rule this morning. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment; if not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the remaining amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Padgett amendment.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, pending that may I present a conference report for printing under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1058).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: On page 3 of the bill, in line 4, strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Appropriates $6,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $12,000, as proposed by the House, for expenses of community forums and civic centers in public-school buildings in the District of Columbia.

On No. 2: Authorizes the use in the District of Columbia of $9,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, of the appropriation for carrying on the work of the Employees' Compensation Commission in France.

On No. 3: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the paragraph providing for the occupancy of the Navy Department Annex by the Auditor for the War Department.

On No. 4: Appropriates $23,000, as proposed by the House, for furniture and other office equipment for the Treasury Department.

On No. 5: Appropriates $5,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,000,000, as proposed by the House, for temporary employees of the War Department.

On No. 6: Provides for the restoration to their former positions of all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service in the manner as proposed by the Senate, instead of in the manner proposed by the House.

On No. 7: Appropriates $2,614.84 for rent of buildings for the Navy Department, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,570.84, as proposed by the House.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

LEGALIZING INFORMAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, pending that I would like to submit a conference report on the bill H. R. 13274.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

COAL, OIL, AND GAS LEASES.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the bill S. 2812, the oil-leasing bill, to be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce to the House that to-day I reported the bill to take care of the guaranteed price of wheat. Members have been making many inquiries about it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Padgett amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. Manifestly a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 142, answered "present" 3, not voting 90, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in response to my request for information relative to the radio stations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, February 3, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In response to your inquiry regarding the action of the Navy Department in purchasing the Marconi ship-to-shore stations, with special reference to the remarks of the Hon. JAMES R. MANN in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 29, 1919, I beg to submit the following:

Mr. MANN stated that I went before Congress and asked for authority to make this purchase and that authority was denied me. I have not at any time appeared before Congress asking for such authority. Such action would have been wholly unnecessary and uncalled for, as the solicitor had already officially advised me that it was a matter entirely under my jurisdiction. Mr. MANN undoubtedly had in mind my appearance before the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the bill for the regulation of radio communication before which I advocated Government control of all radio stations. At that time the purchase of the Marconi stations, which Mr. MANN referred to, had been concluded. The circumstances leading up to this purchase are these:

Under the authority vested in the President for the prosecution of the war all radio stations were placed under control of the Navy Department and the rental paid therefor based upon their earnings over a period of time. This control by the Navy Department was necessary in order to insure reliable communication, to limit the use of radio, and so to control its use that the department would have complete knowledge of what was being done by that means of communication. The inadequacy of existing regulations to peace conditions or to conditions such as existed before the United States entered the war was clearly evidenced by the fact that for a long time a German company remained in control of the powerful high-power station at Sayville, which broadcasted information and sent unneutral messages to German cruisers operating in the Atlantic.

Most of the Marconi coastal stations whose purchase was effected by the Navy Department had been operated continuously in the Navy coast signal service since the United States entered the war and had proved to be of great military value. Their value to the naval communication service would be even greater after peace was declared, due to the necessity for increased facilities to meet the radio requirements of our enlarged merchant marine and to eliminate interference. We were paying the Marconi Co. an annual rental for them amounting to $67,827.24. In addition we had paid the Marconi Co. rental for their ship stations on those merchant ships which had been commissioned by the Navy, this rental being at the rate of $1,000 per annum per ship. As the value of the equipment varied from $750 to $3,500 per ship, it is apparent that if this procedure were long continued we should soon pay for the equipment, which would still remain the property of the Marconi Co. The Navy Department, therefore, adopted the policy of purchasing the ship equipment rather than pay rental, as the steamship companies were compelled to do.

The business which the Marconi Co. had built up comprised shore stations at intervals along the coast designed especially for communicating with ships at sea, these ships being equipped with radio apparatus owned by the Marconi Co. and leased to the owners of the ship at an annual rental of $1,000. Ships proceeding along the coast would communicate with a station, which would in turn communicate by land wire, if necessary, with the owners, and thus keep them fully advised of her movements and make it possible for the owners at any time to judge the destination of the ship or communicate instructions to her.

The Shipping Board, which has taken over a large number of ships, was also paying the rental to the Marconi Co. which the owners previously paid, and on June 4, 1918, the Shipping Board adopted a resolution authorizing the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department "to purchase for account of the Shipping Board the leased radio equipment and all vessels operated by or under control of the Shipping Board."

This was communicated to the Bureau of Steam Engineering under date of June 6, 1918, and that bureau entered into negotiations with the Marconi Co. for the purchase of the radio equipment installed on ships operated by or under the control of the Shipping Board. Owing to the absence in South America of the president of the Marconi Co., definite reply to the inquiry addressed to that company was not made until October 8, 1918, when the company stated that their ship and shore stations were so interrelated that the ship-to-shore business of the company would disappear with the sale of either. They preferred to sell both the ship and shore stations rather than either one and named a figure of $2,040,240 as their price, which, it was stated, had been arrived at from a capitalization of their business on a 5 per cent basis.

Careful investigation was entered into with respect to the property and rights to be retained by the Marconi Co. The Bureau of Steam Engineering, acting upon the request of the Shipping Board, recommended the purchase of the stations. The Acting Chief of Naval Operations recommended the purchase for urgent military reasons. The matter was then referred to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for examination, and his answer was that the purchase was wise and necessary and was worth $1,500,000 to the United States. A conference was then had with the president of the Marconi Co., who declined an offer of $1,250,000, but finally agreed to accept $1,450,000 and to include in the transfer four stations in Alaska which up to that time had not been considered in the negotiations but which are considered valuable acquisitions.

This purchase was absorbed by the Shipping Board, the Railroad Administration, which also had ships using this apparatus under its jurisdiction, and the Navy Department, the Shipping Board paying $519,300, the Railroad Administration $141,200, and the Navy Department the remainder, $789,500. The amount paid by the Shipping Board represented the value of the radio equipment of 267 ships, and that by the Railroad Administration the equipment of 63 ships.

That the purchase will prove a good investment for the Government should be apparent from the statement that, as I have before stated, the Navy Department was paying the Marconi Co. an annual rental of $67,887.24 for the shore stations which it had been operating, besides which the annual rental for the stations on the ships operated by the Shipping Board and the Railroad Administration was $330,000, a total of $397,887.24, which ceased upon the purchase of the entire system for $1,450,000.

The purchase was not approved until I was satisfied officially by the solicitor that there was no legal obstacle. From the remarks of Mr. MANN in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I judge that he is under the impression that I exceeded the limitation of $10,000 imposed for the purchase of land for sites for radio stations. While I am unwilling to admit that this provision applies to the transaction under consideration, I desire to state for your information that the value of the land included in the purchase, as given by the Marconi Co., is $5,930. Some of the stations are on leased ground, and in the contract with the Marconi Co. it is provided that the Navy Department shall take over the leases formerly held by that company.

That there was no misrepresentation of the attitude of the Navy Department before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is evident from the most casual perusal of my hearing. On page 9 I state:

"The operation of the radio service has proven so satisfactory that the purchase of the shore radio stations of the Federal Telegraph Co. and the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America, except the four high-power stations of the latter, has recently been announced." [Italic mine.]

It is obvious that I could not have asked this authority of the committee, and not having asked for the authority, the committee could not have denied me something I had not asked.

Again on the same page I state:

"This purchase means that the Marconi Co. has gone out of business of handling ship-to-shore messages, and this business has been turned over to the Navy Department, by whom it will be handled in future."

The bill H. R. 13159, the passage of which I advocated before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, is a bill looking to the Government ownership of all radio stations in the United States, with the exception of amateur and experimental stations. It is specifically pointed out that the department considers the Government ownership of radio stations as a proposition entirely independent of the Government ownership of public utilities in general. Radio telegraphy, on account of unavoidable interference, must have centralized and unified control, which, in the opinion of the department, can be attained only by Government ownership.

It is the desire of the department to prevent any possibility of the erection of stations by companies incorporated in this country, but secretly under foreign control, as has happened in the past in the case of the Sayville and Tuckerton stations. This bill is entirely apart from any consideration of recent purchase of the stations of the Marconi and Federal Telegraph Cos., to which the remarks of Mr. MANN were directed.

The whole question of the purchase of these coastal stations was gone into thoroughly before the committee, and the committee understood perfectly that the purchase had been made. There was absolutely no question of it.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Hon. L. P. PADGETT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DARROW, for three days, on account of official business.

To Mr. ASHBROOK, for three days, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD the very able eulogy delivered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] at Norristown, Pa., on Theodore Roosevelt.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimouse consent to extend his remarks by printing a eulogy by Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota on Col. Roosevelt. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the next fiscal year; and, pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the control of the time during the general debate be divided equally between the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill; and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that the time on general debate be divided half and half between himself and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had asked Judge SAUNDERS, of Virginia, to preside over this committee, but he has disappeared, and the Chair will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] to preside until Judge SAUNDERS returns.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. GALLIVAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, this bill, so far as the amounts are concerned, has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs practically unanimously. The legislation that has been put upon the bill is also practically unanimously agreed upon by the membership of the Committee on Military Affairs. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GALLIVAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Army appropriation bill, H. R. 15835, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, February 12, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1.
